Both battles were waged across the Rio Grande and were precipitated by the Mexicans firing at persons on the American bank. Tonight the river banks for miles have a warlike appearance. On either side are encamped the opponents. The American batteries wait a challenge from the Carranzistas, and further hostilities are expected at daybreak.

This morning an encounter occurred early near Donna, near Ebance, fifty miles north of this city, according to a report tonight to the authorities at Fort Brown. The only casualties reported on the American side were three horses struck by bullets.

One hundred members of the Twelfth U. S. Cavalry were dispatched there at sunrise in response to a call for help from American farmers near Donna and Ebance, who complained that about 50 Mexicans had stationed themselves on the Mexican bank of the river and were taking pot shots at them and their families.

ALL FRIENDS REFUSE TO DECLARE PEACE

Mrs. Hattie Walters, who was arraigned in City Court yesterday afternoon on a charge of using abusive language, demanded a jury trial through her attorney, Herbert J. Fanning, and the case will be tried later this month. Mrs. Walters, who lives of 206 South Second st., was arrested on complaint of Mrs. Mary Middleton of the same address.

Mrs. Middlton, who was represented by James R. Somers, alleges that she went to visit Mrs. Walters last Sunday afternoon. They had been good friends for a long time, but on this particular occasion they disagreed. Mrs. Walters, according to the complaint, became very abusive and called Mrs. Walters some very hard hard names. Mrs. Walters entered a complete denial to all the allegations of the complainant.

The vision of things to be done may come a long time before the way of doing them appears clear, but woe to him who distrusts the vision.—Jenkins Lloyd Jones.

There are still in this country settled districts remote from the reach of the telegraph. People so situated, even if the gap is only fifty miles, can imagine what the situation was before the coming of the "wire." After its general introduction gaps of hundreds of miles were common. But the greatest gap was between Europe and America. Fifty years ago this time Field was trying to bridge that gap with his cable. Starting from the other end, news of progress was wired back to Ireland, then came to America by steamer. Finally, when the western world was all expectation, messages ceased, and anxiety lasted for weeks. Then news came that the cable had parted in midocean over three weeks before. For another year Europe was ten days away from us.

The European war may bear a blessing for the western world in the shape of closer and firmer relations between this country and South American states, notably the more distant, like Brazil, Argentina and Chile. As a rule we have cared little about those countries except to enjoy their trade. This is a time to realise the importance of studying the people themselves, their modes of life and thought—in fact, getting neighborly with them on a broader basis than merely barter and sale.

Among the innovations brought on by the war is the establishment of a permanent passenger and freight line to bring Europe and America together by way of the Pacific ocean. Absence of German submarines in the Pacific is probably one of the reasons for the new Vancouver to Vladivostok route. It will take many days to reach Paris from Vancouver, but what is time in comparison with the danger and uncertainty of traversing the war zone?

CAYUGA COUNTY HAS CO-OPERATIVE SELLING

Auburn, Sept. 17.—With enough stock now subscribed—$500 worth—the Cayuga County Co-operative Association, organized about a year ago among the farmers in the county for the purpose of buying and selling to better advantage and to cut out the commission man's profits, is now in a position to go ahead with its plans and to put in the association schemes into actual practice.

The association now has upwards of 75 members in the county and they believe that the organization is going to be a boon to the farmers. The Cayuga County Association is only one of a number in the state, the big plan being to organize an association in every farming county in the state, all working together.

Under the co-operative plan men would be employed to keep close tabs on crop conditions over the state and selling managers will be maintained in New York, Philadelphia and perhaps in other good fruit market centres. This agent will be paid a salary by the associations. By selling under this method, the association officials say that the profits will be greatly increased as the commission man will be eliminated and better sales made.

They will also buy fertilizer, machinery and many other farm necessities in quantities and will therefore save much money in that direction. By making money on their sales and saving on their purchases, the farmer will be greatly benefited.

Onondaga county has an active association and the plan has worked out well in practice, it is said. Some of the Onondaga men will be here Monday to explain how they do it.

General Gorgas speaks in favor of the midday dinner. He was considering health and mortality problems in the Panama canal zone. A heavy meal at midday generally goes with a long rest, and the rest is not the least of the benefits. Where the workday begins at 6 or 7 o'clock and lasts till evening a long midday rest spell is fairly earned and is also good economy.

Sporting experts say that tennis, once derided as "an old maid's game," has become second only to baseball. Public park courts and club courts in many sections of the country are inadequate to fill the demands made upon them notwithstanding the numerous private courts. Among the elements of its popularity are cheapness and the fact that the game is open to all ages.

That machine tiller of the soil which Mr. Ford promises will be as great a boon as the revolutionary cotton gin and spinning machine. If the pushing and pulling which the farmer has to do somehow could be simplified 50 per cent it would bring farming "within reach of the poor."

The international congress of navigation postpones meetings indefinitely on account of the war. Time enough to discuss navigation problems after an international law congress has tinkered up a new naval program.

Germa[illegible] Surrounding Russi[illegible] East of Vilna In Greatest of Battles

Van Hindenburg Corralling Czar's Forces in Vast Arc From Which Only One Line is Open to Escape.

London.—Field Marshall von Hindenburg is closer to a decisive battle with the Russians than at any time since the capture of Warsaw.

The seriousness of the situation from the Russian standpoint can be measured by the fact that the armies which have been defending Vilna and opposing the advance of Generals von Gallwitz, von Scholz and von Eichorn and Prince Leopold of Bavaria are in almost the same position as the one into which the manoeuvred by the German commander before the disastrous battle of Tanneburg and in the position into which General Ruszky manoeuverd the Germans west of Lodz during the second drive for the Polish capital, when the beleaguered forces literally fought their way to safety through a steel ring.

By crossing the Vilna-Minsk railway the Germans have reduced the means of retreat for the Russians in the O to the line running from Lida to Baranvitchi. The von Hindenburg armies yesterday were only six miles from this railroad. A supreme effort last night was being made to break through these six miles on the one side of the arc and to extend the front from Vileika on the other side, and thus close the gap that offers to the Russians their only avenue of escape from envelopment.

Thus far the Russian commanders have eluded all traps set for them. They have fought their way out of positions that observers here were certain would prove their Sedan, and Petrograd this morning expresses confidence in the outcome of the battle now raging and which must be decided before complete success falls to one side or the other.

Russia's northern armies are closely held along the Dvina and the German flank and well protected by their cavalry, which recently occupied Vidcy, across the Vilna-Petrograd railway, so it seems impossible that any aid can come to the Tsar's forces from that direction. The battle seemingly must be fought out between the armies now facing each other on the arc.

At the southern end of the line General Ivanoff is still keeping Field Marshal von Mackensen at arm's length from the fortress of Rovno, the key to the route of Kieff, and in counter attacks has retaken a number of villages both in Volhynia and Galicia.

It seems apparent from the inability of the Austro-Germans to hold their positions in the southern area that they have sent reinforcements from that front to Field Marshal von Hindenburg, who, as heretofore, is expected to score the biggest success.

So far as the occupation by the Germans of Vilna is concerned it has been discounted for more than a week. Petrograd advices as long as two weeks ago forecasted the abandonment of the city. All the national institutions have been moved to the frontier, the factories have been dismantled and the military supplies sent to a place of safety, so all the Germans obtain is the benefit of a railway junction and what moral effect the capture may have in the fatherland and in the Balkans.

COLLISION LAST NIGHT; LITTLE HARM DONE TO THE OPPOSING CARS

Two automobiles came together at the west end of the upper bridge last night and attracted a large crowd of spectators, and services at the Congregational church, corner of Broadway and West 1st sts., were interrupted for the moment by the loud crash when the two vehicles came together.

No serious injuries were received by any of the occupants of the two cars. One of the automobiles contained a party of four men, who were unknown to witnesses of the accident. The other car belonged to a Fulton man and contained several women. A man named Barker is said to own the local car. Both vehicles, witnesses say, were on the wrong side of the street. The crowd was amused for some time by the wrangling of the chauffeurs, who accused each other of being to blame for the accident. The two automobiles were somewhat damaged and will have to have several parts renewed, but it is evident that each owner will stand the expense of repairing his own car as neither one could come to an understanding for the responsibility of the collision.

GERMANY WILL COMBINE WITH RUSSIA TO FREE POLAND, SAYS A SWISS

Berne, Switzerland—In the course of an article in the Berner Tagwacht on "Germany and the Polish Question," "Parabellum" held that, in view of the present situation and the relations of the paper with the government, the recent reply of the Frankfurter Zeitung to the manifestoes of the Galician Poles was decidedly of an official character.

The Frankfort paper, he wrote, left nothing to be desired in the matter of clearness. If it succeeds in maintaining the present military position, or even in definitely defeating Russia, then German imperialism will decide the Polish question in accordance with its own interests. What those interests are is no secret; namely, the limitation of the eastern frontier for military reasons, and the annexation of the Dombrowaer collieries for the strengthening of German industry. That is set forth openly enough in the memorial drawn up by the real economic unions. What is not said there, but may be foreseen by every critical observer, is that victorious Germany will combine with Russia against England, and for that reason will restore the remainder of Russian Poland. The liberators of Poland will arrange for it a new partition. Only illusionists can suppose that German imperialism, whose great opponent is and remains a so-far unattainable England, will rob Russia of the whole of Poland, and will erect a Polish structere against it futureally. Germany will take from Russia but little of her previous booty; she will be anxious not to endanger the subsequent friendship.

In these circumstances "Parabellum" had little comfort to offer to his Socialist comrades among the Poles. There is no independent Polish question, he wrote, because there is in Poland no social force capable of liberating the country independently. The only question is the victory of one or the other group of powers, and the manner in which those powers will beg rouped in the future. The talk of the liberation of Poland is either deceitful speculation as to the victory of a war party in which confidence has been placed and which it is desired to support, or it consists of [illegible] in either case thes [illegible] has nothing to do with the activity of Social Democracy.

Whitcomb to "Make" Mercersburg's Team, Says New York Paper

Yesterday's issue of the New York Sunday Times in reviewing the prospects of various college football teams, mentioned Barney Whitcomb of Fulton as a strong possibility for the guard position on this year's Mercersburg eleven. Barney, who is known to his friends as the "Bix Six," weighs 200 pounds and made the regular Mercersburg eleven last year.

Francis Murphy, another local youth, was accorded an exceptional honor by being elected vice-president of the Irving Society, an honorary body of students composed of the best debaters attending the Mercersburg school. Mr. Murphy's election is considered of special importance because of the fact that this year's senior class is the largest in numbers ever enrolled at the school. Fulton can be proud of the fact that Mr. Murphy also holds first prize in the institution as a debater, having won that honor two years ago. He has been chosen to speak at a big reception in the Pennsylvania town to be given by the Y. M. C. A. as a representative of the school.

Prospects look good for a successul season on the gridiron at Mercersburg. Besides Whitcomb, several other central New York boys are mentioned as strong contenders for positions on the team. Tucker and Gooley have been sized up as suitable material, both boys having been members of the victorious Syracuse Central High school team of last year. Ed. Barry, one of the best amateur athletes in Syracuse, regular thirdbaseman of the Y. M. H. A. nine, which took the amateur championship honors of Syracuse during the season just past, is also out for a position on the eleven.

Serbian Money Ready to Finance Hunter's Contract for Arms

Indications Point to Early Resumption of Work—Few of Employes Comparatively Have Left for Work Elsewhere.

While officials of the company will vouchsafe no information on the subject, it is authoritatively reported that negotiations between the Hunter Arms Co. of this city and the agents of the Serbian government were renewed at a conference in New York last Thursday, after a lapse of several weeks, and that the company is once more in a position to get a contract for arms.

The difficulty up to the present time has been on the question of advance payments. Serbia, it is reported, looked to France to finance her munition buying, and France was not in a position some months ago to offer financial aid. The Hunter company's plans were checked shortly after the contract was signed by the institution of a million dollar suit brought by James Hensey of New York, said to represent Westinghouse interests who wish to get control of the Fulton plant. Shortly after the suit was filed, it was stated that the local plant would never resume operations until it did so under control of the Westinghouse people, but it now appears that some agreement has been reached or is in sight by which the suits will be abandoned and the work on the contracts started. One of the men interested in the local plant said several weeks ago that the suit would not interfere with the work at the local plant, but that [illegible] was responsible for the delay.

With Serbia now in a position to place funds at the disposal of the Hunter company, the work is expected to begin within a few weeks. In fact, a man in close touch with the situation said this morning that the plant would positively begin operations on a war contract before October 15. The company has made no announcement of resumption of operations, however, and there are still many skilled gun workmen who are only staying in this city in the hope that the work will soon begin. An agent for the Remington company was in this city last week and several former Hunter employes were offered inducements to take positions at the Remington plant in Ilion, where there are openings for machinists. The agent even offered 50 cents per hour to men who had never been employed in gun factories, but who had some experience in other machine works.

The Pathfinder club will hold its annual dinner at the clubhouse tomorrow night, and invitations for 200 have been issued for the affair. In former years the final gathering of the season has always been a clam bake, but inasmuch as several members of the club expressed a preference for a dinner this year, the house committee has planned the banner repast of the season.

A special orchestra will furnish music throughout the dinner, and a quartet will render vocal selections. Following the dinner the floor will be cleared and dancing will continue until 8 o'clock.

The committee expects many guests from Oswego and other nearby points and are anxious that all reservations be made by noon tomorrow, in order that arrangements can be completed. The club grounds will be thrown open to the members and their guests tomorrow afternoon and a game of baseball may be played.

Friday next will be the occasion of the last 1915 field day of the club and the clubhouse will close for the winter Saturday. A special program is being arranged for Friday and the house committee is bending every effort to have the attendance Friday surpass all previous field days. Baseball will, as usual, have a place on the program and a chicken dinner will be served in the evening.

Pope Benedict's appeal for peace was well timed. The fall of Warsaw seemed a foregone conclusion, and that event was a turning point in military operations, one to cause belligerents to stop and think. The appeal dealt mainly with generalities, as was proper when addressing the Christian conscience of Europe. Several detached sentences summarize, each a whole sermon which the author might have preached, but wisely left to statesmen to preach to themselves. He said "thousands of young lives are being snuffed out daily," "the price of the struggle is too high" and "the bloody carnage which for a year has dishonored Europe." All of this he might have expanded to show how not alone the flower of youth is being destroyed, but that womanhood, old and young, is turned aside from normal paths and the progress of our best civilization checked for an indefinite period. Already it has been broached in the allied camp that polygamy can be revived to repair the wastage of productivity caused by bullets and shells. This is but one of many problems to be faced. "A fight to the death" is what the wrong headed and mad brained belligerents are pledged to persist in. Is not this an hour when the "higher law" of right should prevail over man made precedents and technicalities and national pride?

Co-operation by neutral South American countries with this country in the pacification of Mexico seems to be the most natural plan which has been proposed. Aside from the antipathy which the Mexican factions have for each other and which is a drawback to getting together themselves, there is the distrust, when it is not hatred, of the people and power north of the Rio Grande. If the leaders of other South American states—as, for instance, the A. B. C. powers—guarantee to those of their own blood our sincerity and good faith and stand ready to co-operate for the good of Mexico, the long standing suspicion of us may be allayed to the extent that our true position and friendship will be understood.

Naturally the idea suggests itself that the warring of factions in Mexico can be stopped or the end hastened by stopping the exportation of munitions and arms, as was done once before. But the allies in Europe practically confess that they cannot continue the war there without our arms and munitions. Unless it be assumed that this country wishes the European war to continue to the bitter end the difference seems to be about that between tweedle-dum and tweedle-dee.

It really seems that moving pictures which do move, joy rides, yellow journalism and the "best seller" problem novels are indispensables to make life worth living for a great many people, a great many. Tell this to grandma, but be sure to have the smelling bottle handy, extra strong at that.

They have improved war methods almost beyond recognition, but the ancient type of general who burns his bridges behind him to "win or die" could probably get a job in the czar's outfit.

Mexico's complicated money trouble recalls the plowboy's remarks as to the "grub" the thrifty farm wife set before him—"good enough what there is of it" and "enough of it such as it is."

The British premier says "England can laugh at the invasion peril." That is all right for the center of the "tight little island," but accounts from the wide seacoasts tell a different story.

WHY INTEREST LAGS

With the passing of summer months one cannot help turning back the leaves and noting how very little has been accomplished since the organization of the Chamber of Commerce to promote community interest and spirit. Away back in March when the new Chamber of Commerce came into being and when Lucius E. Wilson infused life into the business men of this city, most of us looked for at least one realization of the idea advanced more than a year ago by Mayor Fox of holding during 1915 a big municipal picnic on the shores of Lake Neahtawanta. But Mr. Wilson could not remain with us and the harmony that was predicted and hoped for left when he left, and for some reason unknown Mayor Fox has not carried out his idea of getting the people together under the trees at the fair ground to talk over city affairs, to lunch, smoke and gossip.

This newspaper has always preached the necessity of harmony in the community, and co-operation among the merchants and manufacturers. It was believed that the spirit would grow as age was added to the life of the Chamber of Commerce, because it is through and by such organizations that such ends are attained.

In recording the history of associations of business men it too often happens, after the formative period, that the efforts of such organizations become perfunctory, and a few men are left to do the work. The others stand by and criticise, rarely attend meetings and do not come into any closer unity one with another.

Here is where the social side comes in and where the "blinders" can be removed; and subsequently where all stiffness and BUSINES HOSTILITIES WILL BE FORGOTTEN.

If the merchants and the manufacturers of this city will not get together for set discussions about municipal affairs—open and above board and not in secret and executive sessions—it is about time that something more informal shoulld be tried. If too late to hold a municipal picnic on the shores of the lake where nothing but the simplest form of democracy should be the rule, so that the family of limited means would not be embarrassed by lunching at the same table with more fortunate of the big brotherhood and sisterhood, then why not hold an indoor picnic, to bring together the people of this city in a jolly way and to find out that, after all, the hated competitor in merchandising and manufacturing is a very good fellow.

Have we forgotten the effects produced upon the men who attended the noonday luncheons, when Lucius E. Wilson fired the men of this city with more of the community spirit than has ever been known to exist in the city? Have we forgotten the sight of men walking arm in arm from the luncheons to places of business who, prior to those meetings, were in many ways strangers to each other?

The amalgamation of the merchants and manufacturers of this city into what promises to be the leading Chamber of Commerce of this state was the result of informal noon day luncheons. At that time we believed that ere the autumn leaves would drop we should accomplish much for the good of the city—a public market, commission government, the ownership of old Falley Seminary for high school purposes, and many other matters of greater and lesser importance.

WHAT HAS BEEN DONE?

THIS: We have had many stiff meetings behind closed doors where a very few of the city's men sat around in rows to discuss the question of a public market, commission government, the desirability of securing old Falley Seminary, and many other matters. And everything was done after really and truly parliamentary forms.

WHAT IS THE RESULT? The score stands 0-0.

CHAIRMAN OSBORN'S PREDICTION

From Republican State Committee Chairman.

Chairman William Church Osborn of the Democratic state committee is quoted in former Governor Glynn's newspapers as saying that the voters have become disappointed with the Whitman administration and will accentuate that fact by voting to return the Democrats to power, adding that he expects the Democrats to have a good working majority in the next Assembly.

No administration in years has been freer from criticism than has the present.

No scandal has attached to the administration of any state department which is in very marked contrast to the record of the three preceding Democratic administrations.

Governor Whitman has been commended from one end of the state to the other for the exceptionally high character of his appointees to important public places.

The Legislature held a shorter session and transacted far more important business than any of its predecessors in recent years. The session was notably free from dickers.

Grand juries have not been called to sit in judgment on the activities of any state department under the present administration as they were two years ago and a year ago.

The present administration is paying its bills as it goes along and also has paid several million dollars worth of bills which the preceding Democratic administration omitted to pay.

The present administration has not created a lot of expensive special commissions to tour the state and parallel the work of regularly constituted departments. By attending to the work for which they were established, the regular departments have rendered these roving commissions entirely unnecessary as they were deservedly unpopular.

The Civil Service Reform Association has commended the present administration for its enforcement of the civil service law and at the same time unreservedly condemned two preceding Democratic administrations for failure in that regard.

In taking out of the election law that little provision for colonizing repeaters which designated a voter's residence as "any place of stay," the present administration may have disappointed Tammany Hall but it is very doubtful if it disappointed any very great portion of the voters of the state.

No charge of ballot box stuffing lies against the present administration. It occurred under the preceding administration when 25 election officials in New York city were convicted of stuffing ballot boxes to carry the election to determine the calling of the constitutional convention.

There are a great many more comparisons which could be drawn between the present administration and recent Democratic administrations but they woulld serve unnecessarily to lengthen the list.

As for electing a Democratic Assembly this fall, Chairman Osborn severely taxes the credulity of his hearers. The last Democratic Assembly sat in 913. It remained in session throughout the year and its record was one of continual disorder and disregard of the public interest. It will be remembered chiefly for its impeachment of the Governor.

Chairman Osborn was not a part of the last Democratic administration and does not know how bad it really was. He was lugged in six months before election to raise the tone of the state committee. He threw up the job in disgust at the outset of the campaign. He came back on Tammany's solemn promise to be good. Tammany has been good ever since because Tammany was separated from the control of the state government by an adverse majority of nearly 150,000 votes cast by the same voters whom Mr. Osborn thinks will put the Democratic party back in power.

Recent Heat Wave Offsets Other Drawbacks to Business

Dun's Review for Sept. 18 says:

Oppressive heat checked trade activities in numerous directions, but this is a temporary drawback and is more than offset by the benefit accruing to the maturing crops. Agricultural success is obviously the most important factor in the future outlook, and harvest prospects are made still brighter by the prevalence of high temperatures over a wide area of the country. Cereal prices have been irregular, but cotton, though in improved condition, has risen sharply under the stimulus of a broadening speculative demand. Losses in mercantile lines as a result of the hot weather, which retarded retail distribution, can be later regained, and there is no abatement of confidence in sustained progress during the fall and winter seasons. For the present, cross currents appear in commercial channels, with the diplomatic complications continuing to cause hesitancy in forward undertakings. Hence, there is less of the anticipatory buying that usually follows the assurance of bountiful harvests, but general trade has made a substantial recovery from previous depression and the fundamental situation is so sound that a permanent check to the advance is unlikely. In spite of all restraints, various branches of business still make headway and the dry goods markets have become prominent in this respect, transactions expanding materially under the influence of the recent sharp rise in raw cotton. Activity in silks is maintained, while New England advices indicate that fine cotton goods mills are better employed than for several years and woolen manufacturers are in a satisfactory position. On the other hand, footwear factories are in need of new business, although improvement is expected with the advent of lower temperatures. Not a week passes without the development of fresh labor controversies in some quarter, but these have not involved serious losses and fail to arrest industrial progress.

ITALY'S CRACK MARKSMEN.

They Are All Athletes and Are the Pride of the Army.

The bersaglieri (sharpshooters) are the elite of the Italian army, and each bersagliere is a picked man, chosen for his hardihood and stamina, the average bersagliero being short and thickset, but with magnificent strength and exceptional powers of endurance.

There is no prouder soldier in the world than the full blown bersagliere as he swaggers along the street of an Italian town in his dark blue uniform, with its rich red facings, and on his head, set at a rakish angle, the famous wide brimmed black slouch hat adorned with large, heavy, drooping plumes of green cocks' feathers.

Bersaglieri, by the way, is pronounced ber-sarl-lary.

When on the march the bersaglieri never walk as do other soldiers, but always go at a sort of quick trot.

These 25,000 or so men are among the most perfectly drilled troops in the world. Every single bersagliere, apart from being a man chosen for his endurance, is a fully trained athlete.—Westminster Gazette.

An Idol With Diamond Eyes.

The famous Orloff diamond was once the right eye of the great idol Serringham in the temple of Brahma. This precious gem was stolen at about the beginning of the eighteenth century by a French soldier who had made a pretense of being converted to the Hindu religion in order to gain the confidence of the priests and admission to the temple. The Frenchman first sold the diamond for £2,000. On the next turn it was bought by a banker of Constantinople for £12,000. The banker kept it until 1774 and then sold it to the Russian empress for £90,000 and a life pension. The gem has been in the Russian royal family ever since. As it is now set in the imperial scepter of Russia it presents a flattened, rose cut surface and weighs exactly 194½ carats.

Stinging Rebuke.

A society man said in Newport apropos of a current scandal:

"It reminds me of a very trenchant anecdote. A young married woman at a seashore hotel went up to a pretty girl in white who had been dancing like mad with the first one's husband and said:

"'I've got a last year's coat suit that's quite good, really. To be sure, it's out of style. Still, would you like to have it?'

"The girl blushed red with mortification.

"'What!' she said. 'Do you think I'd wear your cast off clothes?'

"'I thought you might,' hissed the young married woman. 'You seem anxious enough to get my husband.'"—Exchange.

STORY OF THE CARPENTERS

Struggled Hard For Existence Until Power to Levy Assessments Was Conferred on Executive Board—Begging Letter System a Sign of Weakness—Consolidation Urged.

By FRANK DUFFY.

Half a century ago the working conditions of the carpenters were deplorable. A workday lasted from sunrise to sunset or as long as one could see. Realizing they could change or better these conditions only through organization, they commenced to agitate among the men of their craft and then to advocate the formation of carpenters' unions.

In many cities such unions were formed; but, being local affairs without a national head to guide them, many disbanded within a short time. This spasmodic system of organizing and reorganizing locally continued until 1881, when the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America was permanently formed.

It was a question of doubt at that time whether it would be a success or not owing to the fact that the members were not willing or perhaps could not afford to pay from the meager wages received high initiation fees and high dues, while at the same time wanting all the benefits they could get in return. These included sick, death and disability benefits as well as financial support in strikes and lockouts.

Per capita tax to the home office was very low, while the demands on said office were very heavy. A few years later—or, to be more exact, in 1892—after meeting all the demands made on us, we had in our general treasury $51.19.

We met the emergency by giving our general executive board authority to levy special assessments on our local unions whenever necessary. For a number of years following several assessments were levied by our board, which caused much grumbling and considerable dissatisfaction. In 1905 we submitted to referendum vote the question of either raising the tax to the home office or again levying an assessment. The membership voted by a large majority to increase the tax and also continued to give our general executive board authority to levy assessments whenever necessary.

During the last ten years the wages of our members have been substantially increased, in some places 50 cents per week and in other places $7.50 per week per member. Figured conservatively this means that over $18,000,000 have been placed in the pockets of our members annually more than they would have received if there was no such organization as the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America. Yet while that increase was won for our members through our organization they, on the other hand, objected, opposed and voted against paying higher dues, no matter what benefits were promised in return.

To be a success we must be as liberal with our organization as we are generous to ourselves. Or, in other words, if we do not create a fund for our own protection and defense we cannot, should not and, in fact, must not expect others who have such a fund to help us.

The United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, its local unions and district councils have not to our knowledge in the last twenty years issued begging letters to other labor organizations asking for financial aid to tide them over their difficulties and troubles, strikes and lockouts. On the contrary at our Washington convention in 1912 we established a fund to protect our members by levying an assessment of $1 per year per member on our entire membership, payable to the home office quarterly.

In doing this we caused the dues of our members to be raised considerably. On a membership of 215,000 in good standing this means a defense fund yearly of [illegible]. We left with our general executive board at the same time authority to levy assessments if such should be found necessary.

This begging letter sytem, now so prevalent among unions, shows a weakness and lack of management somewhere, and of forethought and foresight on somebody's part. It is not at all encouraging to hear one of those letters read at a meeting of a union, predicting defeat and calamity if financial aid is not forthcoming. The old saying has it that "God helps those who help themselves," and as charity begins at home, it is time for organizations unable to support their members, in times of trouble, strikes and lockouts to get together and consolidate with kindred trades and thereby form one good, strong organization in which the interests of all can be taken care of and protected. Then we would not have so many national and international unions as we have now, and perhaps not so many jurisdictional disputes to contend with. Neither would we have so many begging letters going the rounds.

INSURES WORKERS' LIVES.

Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company Will Pay Half the Premiums.

By a group insurance contract issued recently—the biggest policy ever granted, it is believed—the 8,000 employees of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit company operating in Brooklyn borough, New York city, are insured for $1,000 each by the Travelers Insurance company of Hartford, the $8,000,000 insurance costing the B. R. T. about $50,000 a year, or about one-half the total premiums.

The opportunity to insure was offered all employees who have been with the transit company two years or more, and the company pays one-half the premium up to $1,000 of insurance, the rate of insurance varying, according to the age of the individual employee. The employee may, if he wishes to pay the additional premium, increase his policy to $5,000.

A special agreement will be required whereby in case of the employee leaving no dependents the principal of the policy may be used:

For paying funeral expenses; for reimbursing the company for premiums paid by it during the period in which it has assumed the entire premium, turning the balance over to the employees' benefit association.

All premiums will be paid in the first place by the Brooklyn Rapid Transit company, which will, through its respective constituent companies, collect by periodical deductions from wages one-half of each annual premium due.

It is pointed out that employees between the ages of fifteen and thirty-two will pay weekly on the average a fraction more than 7 cents for $1,000 of insurance; employees more than thirty-two and less than forty, a fraction more than 8 cents a week; employees of fifty will pay a fraction more than 13 cents a week; those of sixty, a fraction more than 26 cents a week, and those of sixty-five years, 41 cents a week.

An Old Verb.

To laze is an old verb. In Samuel Rowlands' "Martin Markall," 1610, we are told that "loyterers laze in the streete, lurke in alehouses and range in the highwaies." The word occurs, I believe, in some of Mortimer Collins' lyrics:

But Cupid lazeth 'mongst the faiery lasses,
Whose clere complexion he oft swearcth passes.

—London Notes and Queries.

RIGHTS OF EMPLOYERS.

In the course of a recent address before the Central Labor union of Meriden, Conn., Samuel Gompers said:

Men must learn that employers have some rights. If you will investigate you will find that strikes oftener are caused by unorganized or recently organized labor. In the latter case the workers suddenly think themselves all powerful and imagine employers have no rights. Avoid strikes. The right to strike is of paramount importance, not the exercise of that right.

In this country, when the war is over, thousands of workers will be thrown out of employment because of the cutting off of the present artificial market for the necessaries of life as well as for the implements of war. Labor organizations should prepare for this condition.

MANY QUESTIONS WILL BE SETTLED

Voters to Pass on Woman Suffrage and Barge Canal Needs.

CANAL WANTS $27,000,000.

New Constitution Will Also Be Voted On by People of State—About 90 Per Cent of Construction Work of Canal Is Completed and All Great Engineering Problems Have Been Solved.

Voters at the coming election in November will be confronted by an unusual ballot, and the election will be unique in that the number of questions to be settled by referendum will nearly approximate the number of persons to be voted for. Undoubtedly the work of the constitutional convention, now in session in Albany, will be before the people for their acceptance or rejection. The woman suffrage amendment will be voted upon, and last, but possibly most important to the state, the barge canal referendum, calling for a further appropriation of $27,000,000 for the completion of the barge canal system, will be before the people at the polls.

Barge Canals 90 Per Cent Finished.

The barge canals which have been under construction since 1905, are nearly finished. Reports of the engineers show that about 90 per cent of the construction work has been completed and all of the great engineering problems have been solved. It is doubtful whether the people of the state appreciate either the magnitude of the work or the difficulties met with in construction. In order to build these canals, it has been necessary to harness ten great rivers. It also has been necessary to drain vast areas of swamp land, to create enormous water storage reservoirs, acquire water rights, rebuild railroad bridges and to do many other difficult things seemingly outside of canal construction.

It must be remembered, also, that this work has been done in a thickly settled community, and not as at Panama, where land was of no value. Plans were made and estimates adopted for the barge canals in 1903. Since that year there has been a great increase in the population of the state and, consequently, an advance in real estate values. This advance has cost the state $20,000,000 in higher prices of these lands. It has, however, added immensely to the state's assets, as will become evident when the the abandoned portions of the old canal are sold. Furthermore, on account of the increased cost of labor and materials, the expense of the reconstruction of railroad bridges, as well as on account of the increase in land values, and because the canals have been built larger than was at first contemplated, $27,000,000, in addition to the original appropriation voted by the people of this state, will be required to complete the work and pay the increased cost of labor and materials and for reconstructed bridges and for all the lands which it has been necessary to take, and it is this question which the people are asked to determine at the coming election.

Since most of these expenses have been incurred and the additional lands have already been taken the state is bound, in any event, to pay for them, and, if this proposed bond issue should be defeated, the cost will have to be paid for by direct tax. It is clear, therefore, that the real question before the people of the state this fall is not solely whether this money shall be spent, for most of it has been spent, but whether it shall be paid by direct annual tax within the next two or three years, thus increasing the burden on real estate, or whether it shall be distributed over a longer term of years by means of a bond issue.

The barge canals, now so nearly completed, are a much greater work than at first contemplated. They have cost, including terminals, $144,000,000. The locks were built nearly twice as wide as provided for in the first plans. Terminals for the use of shippers have been, and are being constructed at all the principal points between Buffalo and New York. The Seneca-Cayuga canal has been extended into the finger lakes of Central New York, making Geneva, Seneca Falls, Waterloo and Ithaca canal ports.

Should Approve Canal Referendum.

Water power has been developed to operate the locks and light the canal. Bridges in the Oswego canal were constructed so as to allow lake steamers to go up as far as Fulton. All of these extensions of the original plans and the additions have cost money, and, while the original appropriation included a considerable surplus, the general advance in all these values has compelled this further appeal to the people.

Because all of the money invested in the canals and the canals themselves will be useless unless this work is completed, it is anticipated that the people will approve of the canal referendum providing for the final appropriation to finish the canals. This proposed bond issue will distribute the cost over a long term of years, instead of making it necessary to levy a direct tax immediately to pay for expenses already incurred. It also will assure the early completion of the canals, so that the state can begin to reap the great advantages which will accrue as soon as the improved canals are completed and open for traffic.

Open to Conviction.

"I understand," said Mr. Dolan, "that you declared there should be no more fightin'."

"I said that," replied Mr. Rafferty. "But I never was obstinate, an' mebbe a few words of argument from you can make me change my mind."—Washington Star.

BARGE CANAL ASSURES MINIMUM FREIGHT RATES.

The opening of the Panama canal makes it possible to bring lumber and grain from the Pacific coast to the Atlantic coast and even as far west as Buffalo, at lower freight rates than by rail. With the barge canal in operation all of the canal cities in New York state can obtain Western goods and can ship to California to better advantages than the cities of Canada or the cities of any of the other Eastern states. This should tend to build up in New York state the greatest manufacturing district in the world.

CANAL COMPETITION THE ONLY SAFEGUARD

At the election in 1903 the people of New York state voted in favor of building the new barge canals. This decision was based very largely on the desire to control transportation rates. It was not expected, and, indeed, it was argued many times during that campaign that the canals would not carry all of the heavy freight, nor perhaps any large percentage of it. It was, however, believed that the influence of the canals would reduce the rates by rail.

In 1903 there was no public service commission in the state of New York, and the interstate commission had not at that time power to make rates, so that the railroads were subject to no real control. The argument against the canals in 1903 was very largely to the effect that with the increased size of engines, heavy rails and larger cars, the rates by railroads could be and would be very largely reduced and that the building of the barge canal was a waste of money.

Even before 1903 the railroads had started to increase their rates. Instead of the reduction which had occurred up to that time and which anti-canal men were arguing would continue, there began a time of constantly increasing railroad rates, which is still continuing. Thus the main argument, which was used in 1903 against the building of the barge canals has proved, within a very few years, to be utterly false. Rates have not decreased by rail, but have increased.

Since 1903 the people of the state and of the nation, becoming impatient with the constant increase in railroad rates, have created the public service commission and have given to the interstate commerce commission the power to fix rates. This action had to be taken in New York because the barge canal was not completed, and even the creation of these commissions, with all the power that has been conferred upon them by law, has not stopped and will not stop increases in railroad rates. It is much more evident now than it was in 1903 that the only method of regulating transportation rates, which can be made at all effective, is through water competition.

Much good has been accomplished by the commissions, particularly in the way of preventing fictitious capitalization, but the competition of the different routes outside of New York state, between the Mississippi valley and the ocean, has been continually increasing and over that competition the commissions have little or no power. The last 10 years, therefore, has proved beyond doubt that the state of New York, in order to hold its transportation business, must be able to control rates through its barge canal.

This same 10 years has seen the completion of 90 per cent of the work on this great undertaking. The additional amount which is needed to complete the canal is $27,000,000. The last legislature passed a law recommending the issue of bonds for that amount and leaving the matter to the people at the next election. With nearly $150,000,000 already invested, it is the duty of the state to complete this work as speedily as possible. The importance, therefore, of a decisive vote at the coming election can hardly be overestimated.

This will be the final stand of all those enemies of cheap transportation who have fought so many years to keep the people of the state from enjoying water competition. If this referendum bill be adopted there will be no necessity for rate reduction by the public service commission—the barge canals will hold the rate down to a fair basis.

Save Money by Completing Canals.

Considerably over $100,000,000 has been spent by New York state, and enough more work is under contract to make the total cost nearly $150,000,000 for the new canals. At 4 per cent this means an interest loss every year of $6,000,000 until the canals are completed. A vote for the referendum this fall means a vote to stop this interest loss, and begin to use the investment which the state has made.

WILLIS P. MORIN AND MISS BONNER MARRIED

Willis P. Morin, one of Fulton's most prominent young business men, and Miss Ethel May Bonner, daughter of Mr. Edwin Bonner of 7 South 7th st., were united in marriage at the home of the bride's father Saturday evening. Rev. J. W. Barrett, pastor of the First Methodist church, performed the ceremony, which was a very simple one. The house was decorated for the occasion with pink and white asters. There were no attendants. Only the immediate friends of the young people were present, and the wedding was a complete surprise to the many friends of the couple in the city.

Mr. Morin has been identified with the Morin Bros. Lumber company for the past three years, and is vice-president of the Chamber of Commerce. Miss Bonner was confidential secretary for Piper & Pendergast, attorneys, for several years and only recently resigned her position.

Mr. and Mrs. Morin refused to divulge their plans and left on their wedding trip Saturday evening. They will reside in this city on their return.

WILLIS P. MORIN BUYS THE CARR BUNGALOW

For an indicated consideration of $3,400, Willis P. Morin of this city, who was married Saturday evening to Miss Ethel Bonner, daughter of Edwin Bonner, of 7 South 7th st., purchased property in Park st. from W. D. Carr. It is said Mr. and Mrs. Morin will reside there.

FREIGHT WRECK TIES UP TRAFFIC ON ONE DIVISION

All traffic on the Fulton-Oswego division of the Ontario & Western R. R. was blocked for several hours Saturday night when train 29, fast freight, was wrecked near Kenwood at 6:30 o'clock. Thirteen cars of the train were ditched and fully 400 feet of track torn up. A broken journal is said to have caused the wreck. The wrecked cars were loaded with coal and merchandise.

None of the train crew were injured and four hoboes who were riding the bumpers, miraculously escaped injury. The Norwich wrecking crew was called at once and the section of track was repaired so that traffic was resumed shortly after noon yesterday.

JEWISH FESTIVAL OF THANKSGIVING

Jews throughout the world are preparing to observe the Feast of Tabernacle, or Sukkoth, which will begin at sunset on Wednesday and last seven days. The first two days are full festival days, the last five half holidays. The whole seven days bear one descriptive designation, "season of our rejoicing." The festival is one of venerable antiquity. Its observance is commanded in the Mosaic law, and its purpose is there explained as to commemorate the way the Israelites dwelt in booths during their journey through the wilderness.

Every Jew who owns a court or garden is required to erect a booth, or something nearly equivalent to it; and to dwell in it, or at least have meals in it, while the feast lasts. In order that the character of the original booth may as far as possible be retained, the modern counterpart is lightly constructed. It must not be covered with fixed boards and beams or with canvas, but with detached branches of trees, plants, flowers and leaves, in such a manner that the covering is not quite impenetrable by wind and rain or starlight. It is required that the booths be made between the Day of Atonement and the feast itself. The Day of Atonement was observed Saturday.

BOOTHS ADORNED WITH FLOWERS.

The booths are adorned with garlands of flowers and the like. Often the text, "Ye shall dwell in booths seven days," is displayed in a prominent place within the booth. On the eve of the feast the members of the household attend synagogue and on returning assemble in their booth to partake of a meal. The festival is widely observed in Rochester. Hundreds of booths will be erected.

On the first evening the meal is preceded by Kiddish, or the solemn sanctification. In this observance a cup of wine is first handed around, all drinking of it, and then more than two wheaten loaves, specially baked and placed on the table covered with a cloth, are used. These the head of the family cuts into pieces, which are distributed to and eaten by all present. At the conclusion of the meal a prayer is offered. The next morning the whole family goes to the synagogue.

In the synagogue the ancient and original character of the celebration as a harvestf estival, the Feast of the Ingathering, or thanksgiving for the gathered produce of the fields and gardens, is made prominent. The synagogue itself is decorated with plants and fruits, and palm-branch processions take place at the conclusion of the service. Every day the same service and procession take place.

BRANCH AND LEMON CARRIED

The worshiper takes the palm branch in the righth hand and a lemon fixed in a metal receptacle in the left, and recites a number of psalms. The procession is not held on the Sabbath that intervenes in the festival; nor are the palm branch and lemon touched on that day, the carrying of them being regarded as a form of work. The Jewish Sabbath must be devoid of all work.

The joyous character of the festival finds it fullest expression on the seventh day, when there are seven processions around the synagogue and songs are sung. The sacred scrolls are borne by worshipers in all of the processions.

In accordance with an ancient pious custom, many Jews keep watch on the eve of this festival. The watchers meet socially and read Deuteronomy and passages from the Zohar. In the intervals of these exercises they eat cakes, fruits and other foods. In some synagogues it is customary to erect a booth similar to the one erected at home.

TWO ADDED DAYS OF FESTIVAL.

The Feast of Tabernacles is really observed for nine days. The seven days are immediately followed by the "eighth-day festival" and its double, which has received the special title of Simchath Torah, meaning "rejoicing of the law." The last day is usually the occasion for much unrestrained mirth.

The distinctive feature of the day is the processions with the scrolls of the law at them orning service. All the scrolls are taken out of the ark, and a lighted candle is left in their place. A procession headed by the reader, who is followed by men bearing the scrolls, is formed and all sing. When one circuit has been completed other men are invited to carry a scroll during the next round, and so on. After thep rocession has been finished all but three scrolls are returned to the ark.

These ceremonies are in many of the German synagogues anticipated the previous evening. Towards the end of the evening service—contrary to the rules, it is said—the scrolls are taken out of the ark and carried about in procession, men and boys joining and singing hymns proper to the following morning service. At the same time women throw nuts and raisins from the galleries. This is essentially the children's part of the festival. In some places it has been customary for thee hildren to tear down the booths and burn them on Simchath Torah.

HE TRIED TO KILL 2 BIRDS

But Before Hitting the Mark the Targets Had Flown and Now Everything is Clear.

Rex Carvey and Ben Ingersoll, both residents of the Sixth ward, are very popular and have many friends and supporters in that district. Both men decided about the same time to run for supervisor against George Pomphret, the present incumbent, a Democrat. Shortly after Mr. Carvey's petition was filed he was approached by a political leader, who congratulated him upon his stand and promised support, should he win the nomination at the primaries.

It is said that Mr. Ingersoll happened to meet the same leader shortly after, and the gentleman immediately gave him the same felicitations, and incidentally, the same promises.

Things looked ready for a warm fight for the nomination in the Sixth ward, and the supporters of both Mr. Ingersoll and Mr. Carvey were working hard for their candidates. In fact, it could easily be seen, in the event that either won the nomination, that friends of the defeated candidate would be inclined to turn against the party choice, and support the Democratic candidate. It is even hinted that such was the intention of the leader.

Two friends of both candidate scented the plot, with the result that Mr. Carvey and Mr. Ingersoll were titpped off to compare notes. This conference disclosed the fact that one man had offered both candidates support.

PRIEST DEPLORES TENDENCY TO DESERT THE CHURCHES

In his sermon at the Church of the Immaculate Conception yesterday the Rev. Father John Lindsman commented on the lack of interest in church attendance shown throughout the United States at the present time. Taking for his text the words of St. Paul, "One church, one faith, one baptism," Father Lindsman said: "The Apostle would hardly believe his eyes and ears were he to come to earth today and see the different forms of worship now in progress. There are at present 250 different sects and creeds in the United States. Out of ninety millions of people in this country only thirty-two milloins attend a church of any kind. Consider that fact. More than two-thirds of the people in the United States attend no church, and profess no religion."

Father Lindsman spoke of the auspicious opening of the parochial school and urged that all parents who had children in school below the 7th grade should send the children to the school. Father Lindsman made it plain that he believed in the public school system and considered it necessary and worthy of everyone's support, but said the parochial school demanded the first consideration of the parents and now that the parish has one it should be supported. He said another teacher would shortly be engaged in order that the pupils of the school might have the best attention.

JUDGE GAVE THE MEN ANOTHER OPPORTUNITY

Edward Morrison and John Bowen said "good morning, Judge," in City Court this morning. They were arraigned on charges of intoxication. PRICE OF OLD CAR

To Get Fair Values New Car Purchaser Must Consider Several Factors.

LESS THAN ONE-HALF VALUE

Average Purchaser Doesn't Know All Conditions Entering Into Disposal of Used Machine by Dealer and Should Make Liberal Allowances for Them.

The new car purchaser, who would obtain a fair price for his old car as partial payment, must consider several factors that enter into the transaction.

His old car, no matter how short a time it may have been cared for, is nevertheless a second-hand machine, and therefore possesses an actual market value probably scarcely more than half that credited to it by its owner. When taken in exchange, it probably will need overhauling to a greater or less extent, and possibly painting and varnishing. It will occupy space in the dealer's showroom or repair shop during the time that it remains unsold, and this can be represented in actual dollars and cents costs for rent; "carrying" second-hand cars constitutes no small portion of the cost of doing business on the part of the dealer who takes many such vehicles in exchange. In addition to these costs, the dealer has a paid investment equal to the amount allowed for the second-hand car. He must pay interest on this, and the transaction is the same as though he had loaned this sum to the purchaser of the new car and had taken the second-hand machine as security. Furthermore, it is only fair that the dealer should expect a small profit on the resale of the used car that will not only cover the actual expense of overhauling, but that will represent the legitimate profit of doing business.

The average purchaser cannot, of course, know of all the conditions affecting the disposal of his used car by a certain dealer. He should not, however, allow the difference of $50, $100 or even $500, that might be offered on the exchange of the new car, to stand in the way of the selection of the machine which he has decided will be best suited to his requirements. It may generally be assumed that a reliable dealer handling a reliable car will offer a fair price for a used car in exchange for a new one.—H. W. Slauson in Leslie's.

THINKS TWO LAWYERS MIGHT HAVE DONE MORE

Some of the taxpayers in Minetto are agitated over the question of assessments since the Board of Assessors for Oswego Town reduced the assessment on the Columbia Mills from $801,000 to $201,000. The reduction followed a threat of certiorari proceedings by the company.

The Oswego papers took for granted that the large reduction met with the approval of all concerned, but W. W. Rounds, a Minetto property owner, has taken exception to the statements printed in the papers. Mr. Rounds tells of the reductions made, one reduction from $801,000 to $450,000 as soon as the company engaged one attorney to handle their case, and the other a final reduction to $201,000, when the company engaged still another attorney. Mr. Rounds is of the opinion that the entire assessment might have been removed had the company engaged another attorney.

BENEFITS OF TRADE UNIONS

THIS union, ladies and gentlemen, is a natural outgrowth of conditions in our country, said a member of New York Typographical union in a recent address. Its object is to secure good wages and right working conditions for its members. It is designed to meet a system with a system. It has prospered in this country for more than fifty years. Necessity for its creation existed long before it became a reality. There seemed to be no limit to the lowering of wages and the length of hours the compositors were forced to accept under nonunion conditions. Horace Greeley, then himself a compositor, taught the printers that their labor was a commodity, that their employers were the purchasers and that they would buy that labor wherever it was found to be cheapest. A man with a wife and children dependent upon him for support would ask living wages, but he was obliged to accept whatever he could get. Not alone merit, but the necessities of men were the basis upon which rested the union scale of wages. As an individual the compositor did not dare make a stand for better pay. If he did his family would starve, and he would be forced to beg for a chance to go to work at any price. Yes, it took the compositors a long time to realize that in trade unionism—which is only another name for collective bargaining—were to be found their hope and security under a system based upon the principles of supply and demand.

The union is the workingman's only bulwark against the assaults of intrenched capital. Trade unions do not go on strike except as a last resort. As evidence of this statement, permit me to quote to you from a speech made in the year 1907, during the arbitration proceedings between the typographical union and the publishers' association of New York by the counsel representing the union, who said to the committee of employers:

"The problem of the percentage of increased cost of living is a problem which the board itself will have to thresh out. We have submitted our evidence, and Mr. Wardman has submitted his. There is a wide difference. Mr. Wardman argues that an increase in the cost of living should not affect the wage of skilled labor. Such a theory seems to us what Mr. Wardman himself would term an 'economic monstrosity.' Most of the authorities on economics agree that the wage scale of the laborer, the price which labor will bring in the open market, is an amount that will meet his cost of living plus a margin from which provision must be made against old age, sickness and death, and the greater the skill of the individual laborer, and the greater the value of the product to which it contributes, the greater should be the margin referred to, and when that margin is lessened by an increase in the cost of living, then the skilled laborer must compel an increase in the wage sufficient to restore the former status of the margin from which comes the savings that assure him against the burdens of sickness and old age. And that, gentlemen, is what the newspaper compositors are seeking to effect in these proceedings."

The printers on that occasion got what they wanted—an increase of 15 per cent in their wages. What, under the same circumstances, could these men, acting as individuals, accomplish?

PENNSYLVANIA WOULD PROTECT BEE INDUSTRY

Philadelphia—Strong demands for state protection of the $1,500,000 bee-raising industry of the state featured the quarterly field meeting of the Pennsylvania State Beekeepers Association recently, at the home of Charles C. Wright, Aldan, says the North American.

Speakers at the meeting pointed out that the state department of agriculture had only three inspectors of apiaries and these all grouped around Philadelphia, to oversee the work of 23,000 keepers of 750,000 colonies of bees.

"If the state department of agriculture were given funds for the employment of 20 inspectors," said John O. Buseman, one of the pioneers in the inspection work, "the value of the crop would be increased $1,000,000 a year."

John L. DuBree, a bee-keeper of Jenkintown, said that fruit growers of the state would be equally benefited and that they had pledged their support to the movement.

Reports which the 60 members of the association made at the meeting showed that while the honey yield in June was poor, there was every prospect of a good yield this fall. he meeting was opened withan address of welcome by Dr. Luther M. Weaver. Addresses by H. C. Klinger, of Liverpool; Franklin G. Fox, a state inspector of Pipersville; J. R. Rambo, a state inspector of Collingdale, followed.

George M. Steele and E. J. Carr gave demonstrations of methods of testing honey and caring for bees.

Brooklyn Pastor Blames Panic and War for Trouble

Brooklyn.—From the pulpit made famous by Henry Ward Beecher, the Rev. Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis yesterday told the story of his financial troubles to a large and expectant congregation at Plymouth church, Brooklyn, of which he is pastor.

Announcing that he was "following the light" he had, without advice of counsel or friends, with bowed head at times, but always in the rich, clear voice which has made him famous as a preacher and lecturer, Dr. Hillis virtually confessed his weakness for speculation and the utter failure of investments for himself and his friends. The impression made on the members of his flock by his statement was profound.

The setting for this remarkable incident in the history of old Plymouth was dramatic. No one in the large congregation which filled the spacious meeting place, except perhaps one or two of the pastor's most intimate friends, knew that he intended to tell them his story. Yet, because of the rising storm in the church centering around Dr. Hillis' known predicament, they had all come expecting a "disclosure." It was the first time the pastor had faced his congregation since affairs reacher a crisis, during his absence in the summer months.

There was hardly a dry eye among the old parishioners, both men and women, when he had finished his personal remarks. They rushed to the front of the church as soon as the service was over to give him their sympathy and consolation. No one was seen to lag behind.

ERNEST OTTMAN HERE RENEWING ACUAINTANCES

Ernest Ottman, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Ottman, of Pratt st., for the past five years holding an excellent position in one of the typewriter plants in Ilion as an inspector, surprised his local friends by a visit here last Friday. Mr. Ottman, together with a party of friends, Adeline Brazee, Earl Jones and Alfred Taylor, all of Ilion came up to Syracuse to attend the fair. Incidentally the party, all of whom are well known in Fulton, paid a visit in Oswego and with the parents of Mr. Ottman. The party left for Ilion last night.

American Boy Says Cobb Can't Compare With Foreign Soldiers

TRAGIC and humorous phases of trench fighting and camp life in the European war appear in the letters home of Russell Kelly, the son of James E. Kelly of New York city. Kelly is twenty-two. He left New York in November of last year, supposedly for a visit to the San Francisco exposition. The first word received of him was that on Nov. 24, at Bordeaux, he had enlisted in the Foreign legion for the duration of the war.

He was officially recorded at Depot de Lyons as missing on July 1, and it is believed that he is now a prisoner. The following letter to his father is published by the New York Evening Sun:

May 6.

Dear Dad—I wish they had some of those trench digging machines World's Advance tells about, because I have dug 1,000 miles of trenches, or nearly that many. They are constantly digging new and repairing old trenches, so now we have an elaborate system of underground streets.

After I sent my last letter off we got orders to pack all our stuff and be ready to move during the night. About midnight a French regiment relieved us and we started to march. It was a very disagreeable night, and, coupled with chilly, penetrating fog and the rather forced march, we were fatigued when we reached a small town at 5 a. m., and we of the fifteenth esquand (squad) were assigned to a sort of cow shed. The ground was as hard as a rock and cold. We turned in, but as tired as we were, it was impossible to get much sleep. Outside there was a small yard with a squad kitchen on one side and our quarters on the other.

I'll stop here a second to say a word about the men in our squad. The corporal could be most anything, but I think he is Arab-French. He is a quiet fellow and O. K. There are four legionnaires with us; one of them has served fifteen years with the legion and the other about ten. They are both naturalized Frenchmen and fast friends.

Soldiers Big Children.

The old timer has a huge beard and is a very quaint character. I enjoy watching him; he reminds me so much of those gnomes which used to interest me when I was small. The other fellow is small and very brown. The way they confide in each other is ludicrous. When one has an imaginary illness he takes the other aside, and the way they put their heads together and sympathize with each other is laughable. As they share their sorrows they also share their joys.

You buy their kind of joy by the canteen, and, believe me, they are a joyous pair. The old fellow has been joyous for about fifteen years.

We have two Italian brigands. One is a big, husky fellow, and the other is a typical dramatic villain—good looking, dashing and all that stuff. We have an Italian kid with us, but he is only a nuisance. The two brigands take an interest in him to the extent of continually kicking and cuffing him around. Well, as I was reading your magazine I heard a noise in the yard and upon going out found the six foot corporal slugging the five foot five legionnaire. I was glad to see it, because the little fellow needs a beating. He talks too much. Weeks was out there, but he did not like the unevenness of the fight, so interfered. The big brigand then came up and hit the little legionnaire a beaut, knocking him across the yard. The little fellow got up just in time to be knocked back across the yard, and the big fellow was going to repeat the performance when Weeks interfered again.

By this time we were all out in the yard enjoying the fun. The argument got hot and finally, as usual, the peacemaker got a wallop in the jaw. The American section acted as if they were all hit, and, in fact, they were if one of them was hit. In about a second it was the biggest free for all I was ever in or hope to be in. We battled around the yard to a fare-you-well, and in no time the guard was on the scene with fixed bayonets, but we still kept on.

Brigand With a Brickbat.

In a lull in the action I happened to look around in time to see the villainous looking bandit picking up a brick. I made a bee line for him and received a good clout on my bean for my trouble. The guards eventually separated us, but we carried the day.

I landed at the infirmary and had my head bandaged. They locked Pavelka up, but he should have come with me, as a friend of the bandit's hit him on the forehead with a dishpan. He needed bandaging and was sent back immediately. We all shook hands and called it square.

Resumed Writing May 17.

The next day we marched to the railroad and came north. It was a wretched trip, as we were overcrowded. We disembarked at a town called Aubigny, but located in another town. At night we used to march down to the trenches and work. It was very dangerous. One night the third fellow from me was hit in the stomach. It is good to work when in those conditions, as work takes the mind from the bullets. Inaction under fire is a terrible strain on the nerves.

Champagne district is not a circumstance to this. The outposts here are only fifty yards apart, and at night we go out on the field and lie down, four hours at a stretch, to guard against a surprise.

We went back to a small town, arriving there at 10 a. m. At 1 o'clock the following morning we were routed out. At sunlight we reached the third line of trenches and at 5 a. m. the bombardment commenced.

Brothers Killed Side By Side.

You remember in my letter from Lyons I spoke about those brothers from Argentina and how inseparable they were. Well, they are inseparable even in death, as they were killed side by side. Our regiment, the First, lost heavily in killed and wounded, not more than half coming back. One of the Belgian legionnaires and the little Italian kid I spoke about were too frightened to leave our trenches.

After leaving our trenches and crossing the Germans', which were battered to pieces by the bombardment, our first stop was in the shelter of a road. Here the good looking bandit, the fellow who hit me with the brick, became reckless and tried to survey the landscape. He was killed instantly by a bullet through the heart. No convulsive tossing of the arms one reads about or sees in the movies; he just sank down and it was all over.

Soon after we left this position the other bandit was shot through the leg. There was absolutely no ill feeling between us on account of our scrap.

We advance by sections. When the order comes we jump up and, carrying the sack as a shield, run about 100 feet, and talk about Ty Cobb sliding into second base, it isn't a circumstance to the way I hit the grit. And what a strain it was to the nerves waiting for our turn to advance again, fellows all around being hit! In a couple of cases I have seen men almost lifted from the ground, so hard were they hit.

One fellow very near me got hit and began to squeal. Almost immediately a second bullet hit him, and he made for the rear on all fours, crying like a baby.

The field was full of such sights. But compared to the shells the bullets are nothing. Give me most anything but an artillery bombardment. Shortly after we gained the crest of the hill their artillery came up and began firing on us. It was terrible.

The way those shells would tear by and dig a hole five feet deep was enough for the most solid nerves. At nightfall we intrenched, but were on the watch all night. The next day the artillery opened on us again, and their infantry started an attack, but we stood firm and smeared them. We were relieved that night and returned to Mont St. Eloi. This town, however, was in range, and the Germans shelled us at intervals, but with no material damage. RUSSELL.

DO YOU PLAY BREVET?

Latest Game Combines Tennis, Golf and Croquet.

Have you played the new game of brevet? Brevet is a combination game—golf, tennis and croquet all rolled into one game—that has the thrills of all and requires the skill and dexterity of each, says the Springfield Republican. It is played on the lawn. At first it looks like a cinch. All you have to do is to seize a mallet or a golf club, strike a wooden ball, drive it around a stake or through a wicket, against a net and then putt it back into a large hole. But when you come to try it you begin to feel foolish as your stroke score mounts higher and higher, and you are ready to spend the rest of the day trying to beat your own record.

While there are variations of the game, it is played generally like golf, hole for hole, either in match play or for a medal score. It requires balance and precision. Occasionally the ball has to be jumped into the air from the net. In the west the game has become so popular that tournaments have been held.

Difference Between Amusing and Convincing

By HERBERT KAUFMAN

Author of "Do Something! Be Something!"

AN ADVERTISER must realize that there is a vast difference between amusing people and convincing them. It does not pay to be "smart" at the line rate of the average first-class paper. I suppose that I could draw the attention of everybody on the street by painting half of my face red and donning a suit of motley. I might have a sincere purpose in wishing to attract the crowd, but I would be deluding myself if I mistook the nature of their attention.

The new advertiser is especially prone to misjudge between amusing and convincing copy. A humorous picture may catch the eye of every reader, but it won't pay as well as an illustration of some piece of merchandise which will strike the eye of every buyer. Merchants secure varying results from the same advertising space. The publisher delivers to each the same quality of readers, but the advertiser who plants flippancy in the minds of the community won't attain the benefit that is secured by the merchant who imprints clinching arguments there.

Always remember that the advertising sections of newspapers are no different than farming lands. And it is as preposterous to hold the publisher responsible for the outcome of unintelligent copy as it would be unjust to blame the soil for bad seed and poor culture. Every advertiser gets exactly the same number of readers from a publisher and the same readers—after that it's up to him—the results fluctuate in accordance with the intelligence and the pulling power of the copy which is inserted.

A Dollar That Can't Be Spent

By HERBERT KAUFMAN

Author of "Do Something! Be Something!"

EVERY dollar spent in advertising is not only a seed dollar which produces a profit for the merchant, but is actually retained by him even after he has paid it to the publisher.

Advertising creates a good will equal to the cost of the publicity.

Advertising really costs nothing. While it uses funds it does not use them up. It helps the founder of a business to grow rich and then keeps his business alive after his death.

It eliminates the personal equation. It perpetuates confidence in the store and makes it possible for a merchant to withdraw from business without having the profits of the business withdrawn from him. It changes a name to an institution—an institution which will survive its builder.

It is really an insurance policy which costs nothing—pays a premium each year instead of calling for one and renders it possible to change the entire personnel of a business without disturbing its prosperity.

A business which is not advertised must rely upon the personality of its proprietor, and personality in business is a decreasing factor. The public does not want to know the man who owns the store—it isn't interested in him but in his goods. When an unadvertised business is sold it is only worth as much as its stock of goods and its fixtures. There is no good will to be paid for—it does not exist—it has not been created. The name over the door means nothing except to the limited stream of people from the immediate neighborhood, any of whom could tell you more about some store ten miles away which has regularly delivered its shop news to their homes.

It is as shortsighted for a man to build a business which dies with his death or ceases with his inaction, as it is unfair for him not to provide for the continuance of its income to his family.

SYNOPSIS

Old Cyrus Martin, the head of the American soap trust, makes a bet of $30,000 with a friend, John Clark, a rival soapmaker, that his (Martin's) son Rodney would be making more money at the end of a year than Clark's son Ellery.

Martin takes his pretty secretary, Mary Grayson, into his confidence and enlists her co-operation. Rodney has been a spendthrift, and the father wants to make him reform and go to work.

Mary meets Rodney, and the son proposes marriage to her. Rodney tells his father about his proposal, and the old man pretends great anger. He tells Mary he will disinherit Rodney.

Rodney defies his father, and Mary is deeply touched at the lad's genuine affection for her. Mary makes a financial bargain with Martin to encourage the son to go to work.

Ambrose Peale, press agent, meets Rodney and agrees to go into business with the lad on a salary basis. Rodney has resolved to go into the soap industry and buck the trust.

Rodney, Peale and Mary go into the soap trade together. Rodney then endeavors to borrow $10,000 as capital for his newly formed company.

The offices of the "13 Soap company" are opened, and they advertise it as "the most expensive soap in the world." Peale talks advertising continually.

The 13 Soap company finds its expenses very heavy, and financial rocks loom ahead. Their chief business seems to have been to spend money for advertising under Peale's directions.

make father wild if he thought that old Clark was going to back us."

"Then that scheme ought to be good for a great rise out of father. Say, by the way, I put over a corner on him this morning," chattered Peale. "I arranged for a parade of sandwich men up and down in front of his house. When he got to his office there was another bunch there."

"Isn't it funny, though, that nobody's tried to buy any soap from us yet?" asked Rodney, with some anxiety.

This was a very tender point with the soap company. Mary and Rodney worried over it, and Rodney dreamed at night about it. An occasional small order that might filter in from some remote outlying district or some small merchant whose credit was doubtful, was gazed upon as parents gaze at their first baby.

"It takes time to create a demand," he would say, but admitted that the 200 cakes of pink castile they had bought looked swell in their old rose wrappers. It was a pity they hadn't got a couple of hundred thousand dollars to go after this advertising thing on the level, instead of just for father. Neither he nor Rodney knew how much money they had left.

"Don't ask me," said Peale. "I'm not a financier. Where's our worthy bookkeeper, Miss Grayson?" he added, looking at his watch. "It's nearly 11."

"I'll bet she was here before either of us; she always is. By George, isn't she a corker?" began Rodney lyrically.

"Oh, she's all right," agreed Peale indifferently.

"All right! Why, the girls you read about don't mean anything compared to Mary," began the ecstatic lover. "She's got Juliet beat a mile. Every time I think of her I want to yell or do some other darn fool thing, and every time I see her I just want to get down and kiss her shoes."

Rodney said all this and could have said much more, but Peale's mind was on other things.

"If we could only land one hard wallop on father after that Buffalo business," he reflected sadly, still on business.

"Didn't you hear what I said?" demanded Rodney indignantly.

"Not a word," said Peale.

"I was talking about Mary."

"I know you were. That's why I didn't listen," said Peale delicately.

"Speak of the goddess," he added, as Mary just then entered.

She was dressed neatly and appropriately to her new role, distinguishing between the tone of the old Martin offices and this new enterprise into which she had been drawn by such curious processes. To Rodney as always, this morning and every morning, she was a vision of loveliness, a refreshment for tired eyes.

"Ah, you're here!" he said joyfully. "Now everything's all right. It's a great world."

"Don't be silly," said Mary briskly. "This is a business office."

"By George, Mary," began Rodney again.

"Miss Grayson!" corrected Mary.

"By George, Miss Grayson, you do look simply stunning. You're twice as pretty today as you were yesterday, and tomorrow you'll be"—

"Hey, hey, change the record, or put on a soft needle," put in Peale good naturedly. Mary rewarded him with her approval.

"Quite right—in business hours only business," she said.

"But you certainly are the prettiest thing," persisted Rodney.

"Am I?" said Mary.

"Well," said Peale, "it looks to me as if you two were going to play another love scene, so I shall attend to a little business. Exit advertising manager up stage," he laughed, going out.

"By George, Mary, it seems a hundred years since yesterday. I do love you," Rodney began again, when they were alone.

"Do you really?"

"Why, of course!"

"It isn't that you're just in love with love," suggested Mary with a thoughtful look, "and that I've been very blue eyed and baby faced?"

"I should say not," protested Rodney. "Why, you're not a bit like that."

"Oh! Why do you love me, then?"

"I don't know."

"You see?" said Mary accusingly.

"I mean, Why does anybody love anybody?" Rodney expounded. "I can't explain. It's just that you're you, I guess. I can't talk the way they do in books. I wish I could. All I know is that if you left here I'd quit too. I'd just want to walk around after you all the rest of my life and say, 'Are you comfortable, my love? Are you happy?' If there is anything on the wide earth you want let me get it for you, Mary. What a wonderful name that is—just like you, simple and honest and beautiful. Mary!"

"And you really love me like that?" asked Mary.

"No. A million times more."

"Oh, Rodney, Rodney," she said, almost crying.

"What's the matter?" asked her lover anxiously. "You love me too, don't you?"

"It means a lot to me to see you succeed," sighed Mary.

"But it isn't just the success, just the money, is it?" queried the boy.

Mary paused awhile and then answered, "No, I don't think it is."

"Then when will you marry me?" he began eagerly.

"Not in business hours."—

"Very well, we'll wait till after 6."

"No, you agreed not until you'd made good."

"I know, I know, but it's mighty hard to be engaged and not to be allowed to kiss you. You won't even let me come to see you—much. It's all just business. Do you love me?"

"Do you doubt that I do?"

"No, but I'd like to hear you say you do."

"I won't gratify your vanity. We must stick to soap and advertising. Is that understood?"

"I suppose so, for today anyhow," he agreed, then leaned over and kissed her suddenly.

"Oh, Rodney!" protested the secretary.

"They say stolen kisses are sweetest, but I don't think so," he said, laughing. "They're so darned short. Won't you give me a real one?"

Mary shook her head.

"No. Now to business."

Rodney sat down again with an air of resignation.

"Well, then if this is a business office what do you mean by not getting down here till nearly 11?" he demanded sternly. He did not really think she had been remiss. He was only teasing her, of course. He was the optimistic one and knew things were all right. Peale had hypnotized him with his advertising magic.

It had been great fun reading the ads. They had seemed so large and conspicuous and inescapable. You would have thought that every reader of the newspapers, every traveler in the cars or busses in the special section marked out by Peale for old Mr. Martin's benefit, would have ordered 13 Soap straightway next morning whether they needed more toilet soap or not. Rodney had positively a feeling of self consciousness as he walked downtown in the morning. There was a half formed thought in his head that he might even be pointed at in the streets as the president of the great 13 Soap company. Now Mary's grave face and her cool ways when he would have made love to her chased all such business reveries into thin air.

"I was here at 9," said Mary.

"I knew it. But where've you been?"

"That's what I've got to tell you. I'm sorry it's such bad news."

"It can't be very bad if it comes from you."

"But it is. I've been out trying to raise money."

"Why, Mary, are you in trouble?"

"No, but I am afraid you are."

"If you wanted money, why on earth didn't you come to me?" asked Rodney.

"Because you haven't any. This firm's broke. I was surprised, too, when I balanced the books this morning," said Mary, "but you've spent a lot these last two days. Here's a statement of assets and liabilities. You owe $22,818.09."

"Great Scott, what are our assets?"

"One hundred and thirty-three dollars and thirteen cents."

Rodney shook his head courageously.

"That's quite a showing for a month," he chaffed.

"And Mr. Jones, the advertising man, was here this morning too. He won't wait any longer for his money," went on Mary.

"But we paid him $5,000 not long ago."

"And we still owe him $9,400," said Mary. "Unless he gets $2,500 of it today he says he will put you out of business."

"You didn't manage to raise any money while you were out, did you?" Rodney asked, pocketing his qualms about the source of Mary's capital.

"Not a cent," said Mary. "And you haven't heard from the countess since that day she signed the contract?"

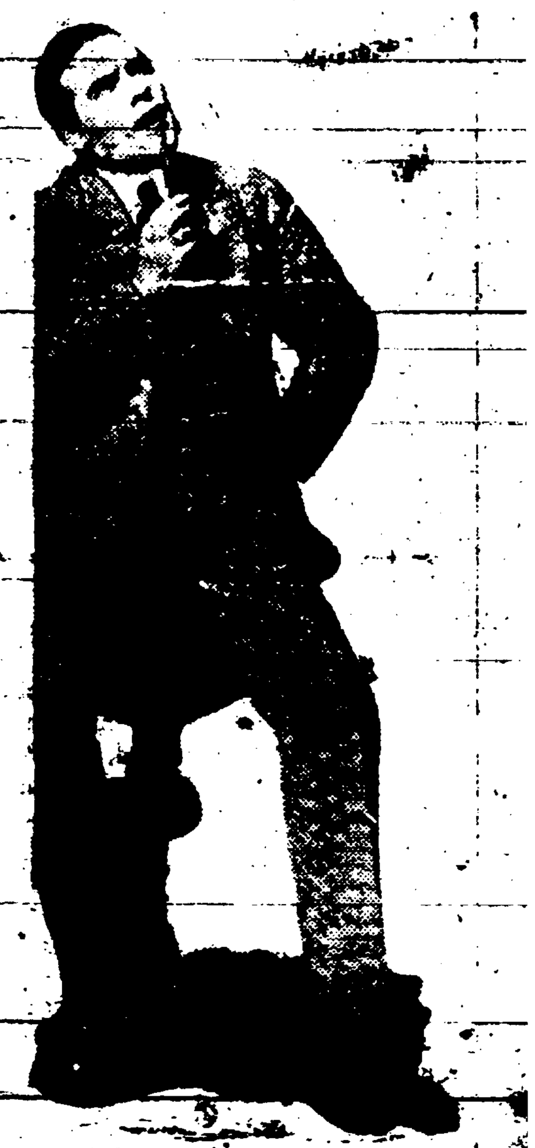
"Not a word," said Rodney, and added hopefully. "But maybe we shall soon."

"I don't know what we're going to do," said Mary, sighing.

But Rodney was still hopeful and inclined to cheer up.

"The important thing is I've got you anyhow," he said happily just as Ambrose Peale came in again.

"Well, well, well! Still spooning, eh?" said Peale. "Say, son, I've just learned a lot from that advertising agent downstairs. Great little guy; full of facts and figures. He gets paid $50,000 a year for writing ads."



"What's the 9 cents for?"

Peale was incorrigible, and today his talk in the face of their actual condition got on Mary's nerves a little. She interrupted impatiently.

"Never mind him," she said to Rodney. "We're broke."

"Nonsense! Some mistake in the books," said Peale.

"Is it? Here's a statement of our liabilities," she said, holding up a paper—"$22,808.09."

"What's the 9 cents for?" Peale wanted to know, reading. "Assets $133.13. That's a lucky hunch, thirteen. Well, why not change the headings? Make the liabilities the assets and the assets the liabilities. See, like this," and he scribbled on a pink pad that he carried with him: "Liabilities, $133.13; assets, $22,818.09. Merely a matter of bookkeeping," he added cheerfully, jabbing the pink paper on a hook."

"You'd make a wonderful expert accountant," said Mary scornfully.

CHAPTER IX.

Sowing the Wind.

ONE day, sure enough, not long afterward, Miss Burke tripped into Rodney's office and handed him something which had not yet become common in the company's routine—namely, a letter with a foreign stamp and postmark. The three partners were standing about as usual when this dramatic little incident occurred. Mary was willing to bet it was another bill, and Peale asked what odds she was giving—would they be as high as 100 to 1? Rodney in the meantime, who had opened the epistle and been reading it, shouted out:

"Hurrah, hurrah! It's from the countess!"

They had pinned their hopes to the countess' Parisian skirts, and here she was coming back again in the nick of time. Luck was with them.

"What does she say?" asked Mary, much excited, while Peale grabbed the

For Young Folks

A Boy Who Has a Big Rooster For a Pet.

Quite an unusual pet is that possessed by a Pennsylvania boy. It is a big Cochin rooster, and it is very fond of its master and follows him about when permitted to do so. Since a little chick just out of the shell the boy has fed and cared for the bird, and of course the little chick learned to love its master. Now that he has grown to be a big rooster he shows the same affection and likes to be petted. The hen family is said to be lacking in intelligence, but this big fellow is said almost to understand what the boy says to it, and will obey when ordered to go to his coop and do other smart things. Of course it has always been treated with kindness, and that goes a long way with all creatures.

Legend of the Daisy.

According to the Celtic belief, every newborn baby that died became a spirit and to comfort its sorrowing parents it would scatter some kind of flower from the sky.

A woman named Malvina lost her little son and grieved so long and so hard that her friends [illegible] her thoughts some other way.

Her friends made up a song, which was sung to her by a number of young women. The song told about their seeing her little son on a light cloud which hung near the earth. He had a lot of new flowers, one of which was a gold circle with silver leaves, tinted with red around it. When it waved in the wind it looked like a little baby playing in a green meadow. The baby in the cloud threw this pretty little flower to the ground, where it took root and grew, according to the song. The women took a bunch of daisies to Malvina and said these were the flowers thrown by her son.

Since then the daisy has been called the flower of innocence, because it is supposed to have been the flower of the newborn.

FOR FRIDAY LUNCHEONS.

CURRIED FISH.—One cupful fresh or canned fish flakes, one egg, hard boiled and chopped fine; two level teaspoonfuls of curry powder, a small onion chopped fine, two level tablespoonfuls of butter, two level tablespoonfuls of flour, one cupful of milk and one-half level teaspoonful of salt. Melt the butter in top of double boiler, add onion and cook ten minutes. Add flour and curry stirred smooth with the milk. Stir constantly till thickened, add fish, egg and salt. Let heat and serve on toast or boiled rice. We like it with potato, and it is good with the egg and onion omitted. I use cold boiled haddock and often use the water the fish was cooked in instead of milk.

Clam Pates.—Drain a quart of clams and heat a cupful of the liquor. Melt a tablespoonful of butter, add the same amount of flour and when cooked add a cupful of hot milk, a pinch of soda and a cupful of hot clam liquor. Chop the clams while the sauce is simmering, add them and then add very slowly a beaten egg. Season with salt and pepper and put while very hot into puff paste pate shells.

Codfish Croquettes.—For one cupful of shredded and freshened salt first add one egg, two tablespoonfuls of milk and one small cracker, crumbled fine. Drop the mixture by spoonfuls into hot salt pork fat and brown on each side.

Salmon Patties.—These make a good dish for luncheon or dinner whether served hot or cold. Mince freshly boiled or canned salmon fine and season well with salt, pepper, cayenne and a grating of nutmeg. Rub in a small quantity of butter and bind with the beaten yolk of an egg. Line tart tins with puff paste, fill with the salmon mixture, cover each with cover of paste, trim round the edges, moisten and press together. Bake in a hot oven.

Creamed Salmon.—One pound salmon chopped fine with shredded parsley. Make a rich white sauce, cayenne, table sauce and lemon juice. Butter patty dishes and put first a layer of salmon, then the sauce, until the dish is full. Cover with buttered crumbs and brown in oven.

Easy & Practical Home Dress Making Lessons

Prepared Especially For This Newspaper by Pictorial Review

THE STRAIGHT LINE IS STRONGLY EMPHASIZED.

Attractive is this costume in dirt colored broadcloth trimmed with black velvet and braid. The front panel gives a princess effect that is very modish.

The princess effect, especially at the front, with a rather well defined waistline, is undeniably one of the most successful of the latest type of one-piece frock.

The dress shown here is made of dirt gray broadcloth trimmed with black velvet and braid that combines in rich effect shades of dull green and silver. There is a band of velvet, braid stitched on either side, about the skirt, this idea finding repetition in the belt. The collar and cuffs of plain velvet are simply trimmed with soutache. In medium size the model requires 5 yards 44-inch material, with 1 yard of velvet for the trimming. Six yards of wide and 3 of narrow braid also will be needed.

Begin to make the dress by pleating the front and back, then closing the under-arm and shoulder seams. If the notches are carefully matched there will be no trouble when the dress is fitted. Next, adjust stay to position, center-backs even, stitching center of stay along pleated edge of front and back and leave stay free forward of small "o" perforation.

Join side and back gores as notched; adjust peplum to position on side and back gores, center-backs, upper and front edges even. Sew to lower edge of front and back over stay, center-backs even. Adjust belt, center-backs even, and bring large "O" perforation at lower front edge of belt to corresponding perforation in peplum and side gore. Turn under edges of right-front and front gore on slot perforations, bring folded edges to corresponding lines of small "o" perforations in side gore and peplum, notches underneath even; stitch ¾ inch from folded edges; leave edges to left of center-front free above double "oo" perforation in front gore for opening. Face square collar, sew to neck edge, notches and center-backs even.

For the sleeve, pleat first, bringing "T" to corresponding small "o" perforations. Close seam as notched. Gather upper edge between double "TT" perforations. Close seams of cuffs as notched. Sew lower cuff to long sleeve, notches and seams even. Sew elbow cuff to short sleeve, seams even. Sew sleeve in armhole as notched, small "o" perforation at shoulder seam.

The princess frocks demand more shapeliness in corset lines if they are to be successfully worn, and even the girdled frock of the modish sort has a certain suggestion of trimness that calls for a wearer erect, alert and graceful of carriage.

PRIEST SCORNS $12,000,000.

Fears Burden of Wealth and Renounces Great Legacies.

The Rev. William Graham of St. Patrick's Roman Catholic church, Pittsburgh, has refused to accept legacies left him by relatives in Sydney, Australia, and Bolivia, South America, exceeding $12,000,000. The priest, who is sixty years old, says that he is too old to be burdened with such wealth, and that he has enough of this world's goods, anyway.

"It may seem strange," Father Graham said, "that I should do this, but I will sleep better when I know the solicitors have taken my refusal seriously and finally, and cease to consider me in the distribution of the wealth. I have long known that uncles of mine named Murphy and Hughes lived in Australia, and that they were possessed of vast landed estates and immense herds of cattle, sheep and horses, and that I was the nearest kin; also that I had several stepuncles named Graham in Bolivia who were said to be immensely wealthy and childless. But I never knew any of them personally, and, in fact, never communicated with them in any manner. Why then, even were I disposed to pile up this world's goods, should I accept any of the inheritance they have left?"

WINS SUIT FOR SIX CENTS.

Amount Was Awarded In Slander Case, and Plaintiff Had to Sue to Collect.

Attorney Frank R. Martin sued John H. Kane for 6 cents in Detroit and won. The fact that the costs and time involved in the case amounted to several hundred times the 6 cents did not detract from the joy of the victory.

Martin sighed with satisfaction as he jingled the six pennies which Kane took from his pocket with great reluctance.

Several months ago Martin was retained by Kane's wife to represent her in a suit for divorce against her husband. Some time later Kane, among other divers things, said to Martin: "You are a cur; you have ruined my home."

Martin started suit for slander and the jury awarded him 6 cents. Kane refused to pay. Martin then started justice court action and the verdict was in his favor.

SUMMER NOVELTIES.

Hit "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine" With These Bags.

Pine needle bags are a splendid reminder when autumn and winter come of the healthful days spent in the mountains where the pines rear their towering heads to the skies.

TWO PINE BAGS AND A ROSE LEAF BAG.

These bags and also the bag of rose leaves pictured are splendid in their medicinal effect upon the tired nerves of the dweller in towns. These pine bags are hand embroidered, and the rose leaf bag has an appropriate covering of rose figured cretonne.

To Clean Feather Pillows.

Open one corner of the ticking cover and pour boiling water in. This renders the feathers a kind of pulpy wet mass, which can be easily handled. Take them out and wash in soap and water thoroughly. Put back into the washed cover and hang out in the hot sun, where the feathers will swell to fill the cover and be wonderfully light and perfectly clean without having been scattered at all, as is bound to happen when dry.

Character Forming In Youth.

It was a saying of Froebel's that the character of a man or woman is fixed at six years of age, thus putting the formative period very early in the development of the child.

Most mothers do not believe this dictum or ignore it, as they intrust their children to nurses more during those first six years than at any other time. There are, however, an increasing number of women who realize that good habits are more easily formed and good impressions more easily made in very early childhood than later on. So now careful mothers are arranging to supervise as thoroughly as possible the nurseries of their babies and to take an active share in the training of the little ones.

One modern mother, though possessed of ample means, refuses to employ a regular nurse. She takes entire charge of her two little children, a girl of four and a boy of two. This is not the result of theory on her part, but an outgrowth from her own experience. Brought up in a luxurious household, waited on "hand and foot" by an attentive nurse, she was suddenly sent off to boarding school at the age of fourteen.

"I shall never forget," she says, "my terrible mortification at not being able to dress myself properly or even to comb my own hair. I used to cry myself to sleep at night and dread getting up in the morning to encounter that awful problem of getting neatly into my clothes."

Determined that her children shall never be helpless, she has taught these little mites to look after themselves in quite a wonderful way.

Some years ago Punch had a picture of two small boys and a young lady asking one of them, "How old is your little friend, Tommy?" To which Tommy replies, "I do not know, but I think he must be pretty old, because he can blow his own nose!"

Judged by this standard, the boy of two referred to above would be "pretty old," while the girl would be positively aged. It has taken an infinity of patience to get these children to the point of efficiency which they now enjoy, but it has certainly paid the mother for all her trouble. It is much easier to take a child and dress it than it is to sit by and see it fumble itself into its garments. These two children are still bathed in the tub, but otherwise, as the Scotch say, they "sort" themselves.

There are many practical details to be considered in such work. Clothes must be made simple, so as to offer as few difficulties to little fingers as may be. The faucets in the bathroom are not only an obstacle to a child, but also a temptation to play with water and mess clean frocks, so a washing apparatus must be arranged.

The particular mother whose methods are quoted above obtained a kindergarten table such as that on which the children play their games. It has the advantage of being exactly the right height and at the same time of being both solid and stable. Painted white this answered for a washstand. Then came the question of utensils. Stoneware was too heavy, and china, though light enough to be easily handled, was quickly broken by inexpert little hands.

The answer to this problem came from enameled ware, which is made nowadays in a number of attractive colors. Pretty enameled basins and pitchers, not too large to be lifted even when full, make implements the children can safely manage. Soap dish, toothbrush mug and slop pail complete the outfit. Nothing can be broken, nothing is heavy, and yet all is clean, fresh and inviting.

The little girl worked her initials on her little face cloths in cross stitch, and "brother" will do the same when sufficiently advanced. Supper is always eaten in the nursery, and these tots set their own table, another kindergarten table, and their table utensils are also enameled ware in attractive colors, so that cups and saucers, plates and pitchers can be manipulated without risk.

They are very earnest about this task of setting table, and woe betide the child whose dishes are not set in the proper order by the waitress or waiter of the day!

Visitors say, "How cunning, how clever the dear little things are!" but not one in a dozen realizes the work and the patience that are put in the training.

Rich will be the reward when the children are older. The independence they have acquired will be more valuable to them than a fortune, for it will be a fortune that cannot be lost.

To Whiten Towels.

Ofttimes the towels become gray and dingy looking. Treat them in this manner and they will become white again:

Place them in a kettle and cover with cold water. Add shavings of pure white soap and the juice of a lemon. Place on the back of the stove and allow the water to gradually come to a boil. If very much soiled the process may have to be repeated, says the New York Times. Rinse in tepid water, then in a slightly blue water and hang in the air to dry.

Canadian Government Discussing Ways to Give Work to Returned Troops

Ottawa, Ont.—The economic problems which will follow the end of the war, and the return of 150,000 or more of Canada's soldiers seeking to resume their normal means of livelihood, are already engaging the attention of the government. It is recognized that plans will have to be laid well in advance in order to cope with a situation in which so many tens of thousands of men will find themselves "out of a job."

The Canadian Manufacturers Association has communicated with the government offering its services, says the St. John (N. B.) Telegraph, through them edium of a representative committee, towards finding positions, as far as possible, for all the industrial workers now enrolled. This offer will probably be accepted in connection with a general scheme which is to evolve for assisting the returned soldiers to find employment.

There will also, however, have to be some plan for enabling a considerable percentage of the returned soldiers to go on the land, and in this respect the cooperation of the provincial governments will be sought. It may be that, a little later on, a conference will be held in Ottawa with representatives of the various procincial governments, and also with representatives of various industrial associations, to see what can be done toward properly and quickly distributing to suitable avocations the men who come back after the war.

It is expected also that there will be a very large immigration from Europe as soon as the war is ended, and the government realizes the necessity of providing early for judicious distribution of this influx, so as to meet the necessities of proportionate urban and rural development. The whole complicated question will probably be referred either to a sub-committee of the cabinet or to a royal commission for consideration and action.

Another problem which has to be considered without delay, is with regard to the care of the soldiers who are already beginning to arrive in considerable numbers and whose future must be provided for, as far as possible, by enabling them to secure new means of livelihood. In cases government funds will be set aside supplementing the national fund, raised by popular subscription. It is also intended to assist, wherever feasible, these men towards taking courses in technical institutions which may train them for suitable positions.

Just at present there is a pause in the efforts which are being made to raise this fund pending another effort of the committee in charge of the patriotic fund to add another million or so to that fund. It has been found during the last two or three months that the drain on the patriotic fund has been steadily growing, while contributions have fallen off and unless steps are taken at once to appeal again to public generosity the fund will be depleted.

Merritt Miller Brought Back from Martville; is Charged With Stealing

Charged with stealing a team of horses, property of John Wood, a liveryman of Adams, Merritt Miller of this city, was arrested Saturday night in Martville, by Chief Edward Dyer and Officer Smith of the local police department, after a chase that covered two counties.

Miller, who has a police record here, went to Adams early last week, and rented the team from Wood, saying he had some business to transact in the country. When he did not return the next day Wood became suspicious and notified the Adams police. They communicated with Fulton, and Chief Dyer, Captain Norton and two officers were put on the case. Wood came to this city Friday and swore out a warrant for Miller's arrest. The police had learned by a quiet investigation, that Miller had driven the wagon and team to Wolcott, but when they reached that village Saturday Miller was gone. Wood identified his property and a county wide search started for the fugitive. Saturday night the police received a message from Hannibal saying that Miller had been seen in that vicinity early in the evening, and Chief Dyer and Officer Smith started for Hannibal in an automobile. They traced Miller to Martville, and learned that he had gone into a pool room there.

The pool room was surrounded and Miller was arrested. He was taken to Adams yesterday by Wood and the member of the Adams police. Miller has been arrested here several times for minor larceny charges and has served several jail sentences.

SUNDAY'S PHILADELPHIA RECORD IS BROKEN

Philadelphia.—"Billy" Sunday's record for conversions was today outdone by the Rev. H. C. Stone, when 4,500 Philadelphians became "Stonemen" in Holy Trinity church. They took the "first degree" in three classes of 1,500 each.

This makes a total of 65,500 who have become members of the organization being formed by the Rev. Dr. Stone.

Although the organization is said to be purely religious in its purposes, it may inject religion into politics. The "Stonemen" will be the strongest influence behind one of its members, George D. Porter, director of public safety, who is a candidate for mayor.

The Rev. Stone announcey Saturday night, when he addressed an audience of 18,000, that he had already converted 61,000 men up to that time.

Several monster mass meetings between now and election day are scheduled, and old-time politicians may get a bad beating. Whether politics are discussed at the meetings held on other than Sundays remains to be found out. The organization is backed by one man, who says he will spend $2,000,000 to bring about the rejuvenation of Philadelphia. The club is confined to those of the Protestant faith.

WANTS GOVERNMENT TO HAVE FAIR CHANCE

London.—Compulsory service is the subject of a letter written by Mr. David Lloyd George to one of his constituents and made public last night by the official press bureau. In the letter the Minister of Munitions appeals to the public to allow the government to have a fair chance to decide the question. He also repeats the opinion that the situation is perilous and one which demands that Britain, is she and her allies expect to win, must at once put forth her whole strength to crush the Tetuonic forces and save Europe from the triumph of military despotism.

They are being made cheaper than this government ever was able to purchase them abroad by at least $[illegible]00 each.

30,000 BANKERS TO SELL BONDS

New York.—Definite statements today were made by local bankers that details of the huge loan which it is proposed to float here for the governments of France and Great Britain had been virtually completed and a formal proposal probably would be laid by the Franco-British finance commission here before American bankers this week.

It was also positively declared that an underwriting syndicate, or a syndicate of guarantors as it is known in England, would be formed. That syndicate will include probably every bank and banking institution of any importance in the United States. It is estimated more than thirty thousand bankers will participate in the underwriting.

Another interesting factd isclosed was that an appeal to the public is to be made after the famous methods adopted by Jay Cooke in the sale of United States Government bonds in Civil War days. In other words, every means possible and every method that can be devised are to be employed to appeal to the popular fancy and to impress upon the public the importance of subscribing to the loan in the interests of business in the United States.

To Bear Five Per Cent. Interest.

The bonds are to be offered to the public at par and will bear interest at the rate of five per cent. per annum. To the underwriters or guarantors they are to be sold at a little less than par, probably 97 1-2 per cent., to enable them to make a profit on the resale.

J. P. Morgan, it is understood, suggested to the commission that no large banking or underwriting commission be paid and it is upon that suggestion the commission has been working.

The exact amount of the loan and its maturity, have not yet been decided. From the best sources of information, however, it was learned that the Allies eventually will obtain about $600,000,000.

At any rate the maximum and the minimum amounts under consideration have been $750,000,000 and $500,000,000 respectively. The lifetime of the bonds is to be bteween five years and ten years.

The bonds are to be a direct obligation of the French and British governments and will be a first lien or mortgage on all the revenues of those countries.

San Francisco—A resolution advocating national marketing commission with departments in the various states, counties ar towns throughout the country was introduced at the internation irrigation congress in its session at Fresno Thursday.

Delegates were asked to urge the passage of House joint resolution 344, which provides for a marketing commission to be appointed by the President. This commission would be composed of 29 members, 15 of whom shall be farmers and the remainder skilled in commerce, law, finance and transportation.

The irrigation congress was urged to create a permament section to bring about the passage of this bill. Public ownership of water systems is the final solution of the irrigation problem, said John M. Eshleman, Lieutenant-Governor of California. He attributed most of the failures of irrigation enterprises to the contract system.

The committee on irrigation laws and legislation recommended that laws covering appropriation and development of streams be simplified and that special attention be given to the regulation and flow of streams and impounding of waters for all beneficial purposes and that state laws allow each community to adopt any reasonable method of development and distribution that may best fit needs of thatc ommunity.

One of the speakers before the congress is Prof. Elwood Mead of the University of California, who has recently returned to this country from Australia where he has been in charge of governmental irrigation and land settlement work. Professor Mead was state engineer of Wyoming for a number of years, and framed the irrigation code of that state, which code has been used as a model for irrigation laws in several states. He was also at the head of the office of irrigation investigations, in the United States department of agriculture for six years.

In an interview with a representative of The Christian Science Monitor, Professor Mead said that a wisely conceived and well administered system of state aid in land settlement in Australia had achieved one of the greatest social reforms ever inaugurated. As an evidence that this policy of state aid will soon be tried on this continent, Professor Mead recalled the fact that a parliamentary commission of British Columbia had recently recommended the adoption of the Australian system, and that a bill appropriating $15,000,000 for the establishing of the system is now before Parliament. This bill, said Professor Mead, is sure to pass. A similar measure, he said, has already been enacted in thep rovince of Saskatchewan buth as not yet been put in operation. And in the United States he said that he believed that the time had come for the adoption of a well considered system of state aid, and that, in his opinion, the public would support it.

"I am quite sure," said Professor Mead, "that if those in charge of irrigation development in this country could visit one of the Australian districts and see what it means to a settler to go into a new and comfortable home, to take possession of fields from which in many instances a living income was obtained within 60 days after settlement, and if they could look over the financial records of the government and see how this is being carried out without expense to the general taxpayer, it would mean an immediate end to the haphazard, unaided, wasteful and costly policy that is now being followed here.

"As year after year I saw the settlements extend and show as much progress in a year as is made in five years as a rule, the desire and longing grew within me to return to my own country and to do all that lay within my power to help establish here the system that is doing so much for rural development in other lands."

REVENUE CUTTER TAKES ARCHIBALD FROM STEAMER

New York.—James F. J. Archibald, who was caught in England bearing a letter from Dr. C. T. Dumba, Austro Hungarian Ambassador to the United States, to his home government in which proposals were outlined to tie up munition plants in this country, arrived in this country on board the Rotterdam of the Holland-American line. He was taken at once from the steamship.

In order to bring about this removal of one of the principals in an international complication of extreme gravity the revenue cutter Calumet went down the bay at five o'clock. No intimation could be obtained, however, of the disposition that is to be made of him.

Hodgson's Statement Provokes Criticism of Commissioner Gage

He Likewise Riddles Theory That First Street is Too Narrow to Accommodate Traffic---Compares Width With That of Busy Syracuse Streets

With the return of Commissioner A. W. Wiltsie from a vacation spent at Atlantic City, the First st. paving question may be revived within the next few days if the statements of another commissioner of the Board of Public Works are to be credited. Mr. Wiltsie returned last night and steps will now be taken to determine the authority of Messrs. Wiltsie, Gage and Mason, commissioners, in the matter of meetings of the Board of Public Works with reference to the First st. paving matter.

There is no clause in the charter which restricts the power to call meetings of the Board of Public Works or Paving Board to the president and, on the other hand, there is no section which states that a meeting can be called by the request of two members of the board, as is the case with meetings of the Fire and Police Commissioners. The three members of the board in question will have determined within the next few days whether or not the power to call a meeting rests with the majority of the board, and if such is the case, a meeting will be called and steps taken to straighten out the paving matter.

Disbelieves Hodgson Claim

Contractor Hodgson, of the Oswego Construction company, which was awarded the state contract for the paving of First st. on a 34-foot basis, is credited with the statement that the cost of paving materials will advance so materially during the winter that the 38-foot paving at present will cost no more than the 34-foot paving in the spring. Mr. Gage disputed that statment and asks Mr. Hodgson's authority for it.

'Mr. Hodgson told me that tale after the meeting at the home of Dr. Charles R. Lee several weeks ago," said Mr. Gage. "At that time I asked him what assurance he had that his statement was true. If he really knows that, with absolutely no chance of a mistake, he is worth $100,000 to some big manufacturing company. I don't believe it, and I don't see how he can say it.

Narrow Streets Called For

"I still contend that First st. is wide enough as it now stands. When that street is paved at 34 feet, I'll wager that people will be sure it has been widened. The paving makes a great difference. The tendency in cities now is against wide streets and I have the statements of a former Fultonian who has been in the contracting business for 20 years as proof of that. I have a list of streets in Syracuse by which I'll show you that First st. is wide enough at 34 feet for all the traffic it will ever have."

Mr. Gage has taken measurements of James st., Salina st., near the Strand theatre, Butternut st., Oswego st. and several other Syracuse thoroughfares, and in no instance are the streets wider than 34 feet. Some of the streets have two trolley tracks, while others have only one.

"It took me some time to get a measurement of Oswego st., said the commissioner. "There is more traffic on that street in half a day than there is on First st. here in a week. The street is just 30 feet wide, and it's considered a wide street."

Mr. Gage scouted the idea that Mayor Fox would attempt to remove Commissioner Wiltsie on charges of a misdemeanor in office in selling tile valued at $10.04 to Edwin Styring for use on a city contract.

CAT TALES

And basked in the warmth
And dreamily blinked;
For she had her heart's desire.

An alley cat wandered, gaunt and cold
The length of a heedless street,
And gnawing hunger and hopelessness
For the comforts a feline cherishes,
Made misery complete.

Then a council of all the cats was held,
And many fine pussies attended.
The parlor cats and the alley cats
With never the ruffling of sleekest fur,
When with rougher fur it blended.

The meeting decided without demur,
That cats, were cats, and that fur was fur;
And that for their common protection,
The cats who were mothers of kittens
Should attend at every election.

Then, alarmed lest the alley cats
Going forth to cast their vote,
Should gain some peculiar advantage,
The parlor cats rose from their rugs by the fire
And this was their cry (we quote:)

"The kitten question bores me to death!
My kittens are tenderly cherished;
And, as for the alley cats' progeny,
Whose fur never knew a powder puff;
What matter, if they perished?

"I hate to leave this nice warm place
And fight for my own protection,
But the Tommies are being hypnotized
By these common cats and their [illegible] cries;
And they walk at the election.

"Those common things who wish to mix
With Tommies at the polling places,
Why don't they stay at home and dream
And lick their fur and lap the cream
And cultivate the feline graces?

O! should they ever have their way
Good-bye to fireside dreaming,
I might e'en have to catch a mouse;
Instead of idly seeming."

And the alley cat perishing out in the cold
Had her dream of a future, rosy;
When kittens should play in the fireside glow
With never a thought of hunger and woe,
In a feline paradise cosy.

And every cat in the new cat world,
Should have a home and a hearth,
And every kitten be sheltered and warm,
Safe from hunger and cold and harm.
'Tis the gift of Old Mother Earth.

Political Fights to Center Around Heads of Stranahan's Men

Contests for Mayoralty Nominations to be Mild in Comparison to Those for County Committeemen---Bort Gaining Strength

Several episodes connected with the nomination of certain candidates for election this fall which have come to light within the past few daws go to show that the fight this year for party preference both in the Mayoralty, Aldermanic and County Committee sections will be the most hotly contested in years.

The battle for the post of county committeeman between Harry C. Webb, the present incumbent, and Dr. H. L. Lake, in the Fourth ward, and W. Lawson Woodbury for re-election in the Fifth ward, against J. A. Bort is occupying the attention of Republicans all over the city. It is universally conceded that Mr. Webb and Mr. Woodbury are staunch supporters of ex-Sheriff Stranahan, the present state committeeman, and that the entrance of Dr. Lake and Mr. Bort into the field is the institution of an attempt to depose Mr. Stranahan.

Leaders' Ears Are Open

Men who profess to know the county political situation say Mr. Stranahan's strength lies in Fulton alone, and that the opposition to his candidacy for state committeeman next year is strong in other sections. They say the political leaders in other parts of the county have their ears to the ground for the first murmurs against Mr. Stranahan in this city, and that the defeat of Mr. Webb and Mr. Woodbury will insure the defeat of Mr. Stranahan next year.

It is also pointed out that the candidacy of Victor C. Lewis for Mayor, in opposition to the wishes of several local Republican leaders, will work against the free dispensation of city patronage.

Mr. Stranahan has also incurred the displeasure of several local Republicans [illegible] designations. It is authoritatively stated that the petition of Louis W. Emerick for alderman in the Fifth ward was given to a certain county committeeman who was expected to get signatures for it, but who brought the petition in at the eleventh hour with no signers. In their hurry to get signers to the petition before the time for filing had passed some of Mr. Emerick's friends took the signature of a citizen who was not enrolled and the petition was thrown out on that account.

Foster Free From Influences

All sorts of rumors are rife regarding the sentiments of Myron Foster regarding city appointments. Friends of Mr. Foster are pronounced in their statements that their candidate has made no promises of any kind regarding political appointments and that the fact that William J. Hartnett advocated the nomination of Mr. Foster will have no bearing on his appointments.

However, information coming from a man in close touch with the situation states that George M. Fanning, present City Attorney, and a Republican, accompanied George Pomphret, Democratic supervisor, to the Democratic conference at which Mr. Foster's name received the Mayoralty designation. It is well known, however, that Mr. Foster was not present at the conference, and some of his friends said today they were sure he did not know the particulars of it.

ENGINE SPARKS BELIEVED TO HAVE CAUSED BLAZE, SECOND AND ROCHESTER

This morning at 2 o'clock flames destroyed a two-story house, corner Rochester and Seconds sts., which was until recently used as a boarding house by Mrs. Ella Ball. The cause of the fire is unknown, but it is believed that a spark from a passing locomotive set fire to the roof. A heavy train of freight cars passed shortly before the fire broke out. A man passing at the time sent in a still alarm. When the Fire Department arrived in response to the telephone call it was at once seen that the house could not be saved. Only two men were in the neighborhood at the time, neither of whom appeared to live in the house, it was feared that the occupants had been unable to escape from the place. Later, however, it was learned that no one was in the burning house.

The flames mounted high and could be seen for miles. People [illegible] Only the walls of the frame structure remain, the roof and entire upstairs being totally destroyed. On account of the dilapidated condition of the structure before the fire, no attempt will be made to repair the damage.

Mrs. Ball, who has been living in the house of late, was in Syracuse yesterday and arrived here this morning. The furnishings, belonging to Mrs. Ball, which were not destroyed by the flames, have been ruined by the smoke and water. The furnishings were covered by insurance, as was the house itself.

As very little water is on tap at this hour of the morning, the water pressure, say the firemen, was the best they have ever had, and on this account the fire was soon checked.

It was learned this morning that while the house is just one solid structure it is owned in part by two parties. Ernest Hall, the popcorn man, who resides next door, at 107 South Second st., owns the south half of the structure, while the other half is owned by Mrs. Christie Knowland. Mr. Knowland originally gave half of the house to each of his two daughters. A few years ago, on account of an error in defining the boundary line when the deed to Mr. Hall's home was filed, a dispute arose between the two owners and the case was settled by Mr. Hall purchasing one-half of the Knowland house. The house itself is insured, the damage being estimated at $1,000. The insurance is carried by the mortgagee.

CHAMBERLAIN RETURNS FROM MANHATTAN; HAD ENCOUNTER WITH DUMBA

George Washburn, City Chamberlain, has just returned from his vacation in New York City, which was a memorable one in many ways. Mr. Washburn motored to the metropolis with Mr. and Mrs. Lou Pollock, who spent the summer here, and although the trip to the big city was featured by many perils of the road and the hotels in Albany, Mr. Washburn's real adventures did not begin until the tower of the Woolworth building rose above the horizon just as the sun was setting.

It was the Fultonian's first trip to the metropolis in thirty years, and he saw many radical changes in the contour of the city. After he had looked in vain for the Astor House, only to find that a huge sky-scraper occupied the former cite of that famed hostelry, he took up his residence at the Biltmore. Just about that time Dr. Dumba, the Austrian Ambassador, whose activities in promoting labor troubles here have been given some prominence, occupied a suite of rooms on the same floor. Mr. Washburn unwittingly walked into the parlor of Dr. Dumba's suite early one morning after a dance at the Biltmore, and interrupted a conference between the Austrian envoy and several of his aides. Mr. Washburn was able to explain his mistake satisfactorily, although he was at first taken for

BILLBOARDS DOOMED.

Eighteen Brooklyn theatres have agreed to abandon billboards and depend upon newspaper advertising, with the exception of posters on their own property. We take this to mean that students of the science of advertising are being converted to the idea that billboard advertising does not pay; that the same money spent for newspaper space brings ninety per cent. better returns.

The Brooklyn Eagle, in commenting upon the action of the theatres, says: "Theatres have been associated with billboards and billboards with theatres ever since public entertainments of this sort began. The color and illustration of an eight-sheet poster strike the eye. They cannot make an argument or tell a story. The appeal to the mind is small. A ten-line newspaper advertisement explains more. The theatre tradition is that all publicity is good at a price. If, in Brooklyn, the sort of publicity that reaches the mind and not merely the eye is to be preferred, then the compliment that the managers are paying to the reasoning intelligence of their patrons is easily understood."—Lyons Republican.

ALL OF THAT.

Speaking of the city government and the needs for the next year, Mayor Mitchell of New York says that it will be necessary to exercise "painful and irksome economy," and he urges it in all departments and plainly indicates that the big city must get along on short rations.

Perhaps all economy is painful and irksome. It is so much easier to cut loose and spend the money, either as individuals or as cities and towns, than it is to save a little here and there as the demands come along. But there is no reason why towns and cities, and states should not engage in this painful and irksome work as well as the individuals. If the several political divisions would all do this, the individuals who make them up would have more freedom in their expenditures and the grind would not be so hard upon them. New York's Mayor claims thatt he city must be frugal because the state has been prodigal, and the individual may almost constantly claim that his economies and pinchings and savings are compelled because the city, the county, the state and the nation are so improvident and so careless with their appropriations and expenditures. Taxes mount up and increase in their burden, and the money to pay them must be saved from the living, or the clothing, or the homes of the people. To save the money to pay taxes, many a home has been compelled to submit to economy that is not only painful and irksome, but smarting and discouraging.—Utica Observer.

NEWARK BOYS WANT SWIMMING POOL

Newark.—The regular noon luncheon and meeting of the Newark Board of Trade was held in the Gardenier Hotel today between 12 and 1 o'clock. The meeting opened with the reading of a petition signed by about 150 boys of the village requesting that the board use its influence to have a swimming pool in some proper place in the town. The matter was referred to a committee consisting of R. A. S. Bloomer, S. E. Hallagan, John DuBois, Frank Burgess, George Perkins, J. M. Pitkin, C. P. H. Vary, W. M. Gould, Peter Sleight and F. M. Phelps.

WE NEED A BEGINNING

Who has not liked to romp and make merry amidst clean surroundings in a gymnasium or other place that must for many months of the year take the place of sports out of doors? He has missed a refining and in every way beneficial influence in life. There is something in a young man's liking for the freedom of a gym. that lies deep in the hearts of his elders. Why the old men like a gym. is not easily answered, unless it is that they have not forgotten "when we were twenty-one."

No young man with a sufficient amount of red blood in his veins wants to be subjected to mollycoddling; that is why he seeks the companion ship of his fellows, leaving behind him the caresses and fondling of parents who would protect him from the wicked old world. The young man must give vent to his pent up energy and in a town that does not provide a clean place for him to do a little romping during the long winter evenings what else remains than to frequent undesirable resorts.

There are young men who have not made good in the world. They were clever and nice enough, but they were never allowed to recover from thier infancy. When they got out into the world they resorted to bad company and night escapades followed. The mothers thought as their boys were so dear to them, the world would surely not hurt them. It was different when they came in contact with other men—the mollycoddling had its effects and the young men were flabby.

The best remedy recognized of taking the kinks out of an untamed young man is to let him have full swing, amidst clean surroundings, in the pastimes that can be enjoyed to the fullest extent in a gym.—in class, with wands, dumb bells, clubs or the wrestling matt, or by having lively scrimmage with a fair opponent in a boxing match.

In other words, the best way to treat the young men of this city is to provide for them a place where they may be treated as free agents and men. They can stand these things.

"From little acorns big oaks grow." Fulton needs the small acorn; one or two rooms will do as a beginning.

SYSTEMATIC SAVING

Franklin Fisher in Moody's Magazine says:

The citizens of France, England and the other countries of Europe now engaged in war have always been more economical than citizens of the United States. They have learned economy and practiced it. This training is standing them in excellent stead now. Called upon to make greater sacrifices than ever, they know how to make them. The burden over there is falling especially heavy upon the women. In fact the women are carrying about all of the burden. The men are at the front. How would we fare in this country under like conditions?

The chances are that in a great crisis the women of the United States would rise to the occasion as nobly as any women of the world. Called upon to make heavy sacrifices they would make them. Called upon to practice the most rigid economy to make both ends meet, they would practice it. Called upon to stand beside their husbands and perform actual work, they would do so uncomplainingly and efficiently. Even those women whom we look upon as "social butterflies" would not be found wanting. They would answer the call of duty and perform with courage and competence.

They would do these things because they would be aroused by a great crisis. Their eyes would be opened to the need. They would be lifted bodily out of their environment. They would be freed from the shackles of convention. They would see, as primal individuals, things in their true light.

What the women in this county apparently cannot do, and the men likewise, is to practice ordinary economies which would entail no real sacrifice. What a blessing it would be to this country if its people could be jolted into the frame of mind that war jolts people into without war. The women of this country could perform an incalculable benefit if they would unite in a national campaign in the interest of thrift. It would be courageous; it would be patriotic; it would be sensible; it would be constructive.

The Horse That Drew the Load

By HERBERT KAUFMAN

Author of "Do Something! Be Something!"

A MOVING van came rolling down the street the other day with a big-spirited Percheron in the center and two wretched nags on either side. The Percheron was doing all the work, and it seemed that he would have got along far better in single harness, than he managed with his inferior mates retarding his speed.

The advertiser who selects a group of newspapers usually harnesses two lame propositions to every pulling newspaper on his list, and just as the van driver probably dealt out an equal portion of feed to each of his animals, just so many a merchant is paying practically the same rate to a weak paper that he is allowing the sturdy profitable sheet.

Unfortunately the accepted custom of inserting the same advertisement in every paper acts to the distinct disadvantage of the meritorious medium. The advertiser charges the sum total of his expense against the sum total of his returns, and thereby does himself and the best puller an injustice, by crediting the less productive sheets with results that they have not earned.

There are newspapers in many a town that are, single handed, able to build up businesses. Their circulation is solid muscle and sinew—all pull. It isn't the number of copies printed but the number of copies that reach the hands of buyers—it isn't the number of readers but the number of readers with money to spend—it isn't the bulk of a circulation but the amount of the circulation which is available to the advertiser—it isn't fat but brawn—that tell in the long run.

There are certain earmarks that indicate these strengths and weaknesses. They are as plain to the observing eye as the signs of the woods are significant to the trapper. The news columns tell you what you can expect out of the advertising columns. A newspaper always finds the class of readers to which it is edited. When its mental tone is low and its moral tone is careless depend upon it—the readers match the medium.

No gun can hit a target outside of its range. No newspaper can aim its policy in one direction and score in another. No advertiser can find a different class of men and women than the publisher has found for himself. He is judged by the company he keeps. If he lies down with dogs he will arise with fleas.

Union Schools Are Coming, Says Cornell Educator

In a recent lecture in Auburn, Professor Works of Cornell urged upon the teachers the importance of the school as the centre of social life in every community and appealed to them to keep this in mind.

In reporting the lecture the Auburn Citizen says:

Professor Works, who has been a strong advocate of social centre work in the schools for some time and whose plans have been carried out in many of the communities of the state, declared that while long forward steps had been taken in the way of educating the people to the part that the schools play in the social life of a community, there is much yet to be done.

He maintained that the school was the foundation of society in any community and that this feature of the school should not be neglected. It is in the school, he said, that the boys and girls spend a large portion of their time of childhood and youth and that consequently the influence of the school was almost equal to that of the home and quite often far exceeded it in the matter of good or bad.

Making the school a social centere, he declared, brought parents, teachers and pupils into close communion and on a common ground. It got people of all classes better acquainted and gave all a broader and better view of life.

Some of the cities, he said, had begun to realize this and had done much in the direction of making the school the centre of social activity, but the rural districts for the most part lagged and were not much further advanced in bringing teacher, pupil and child together than they were years ago. The rural community residents are awakening, however, and with the co-operation of teacher and pupil, he predicted that the future would see the school a social centre as well as a place where the teacher and pupils gather for a few hours each day in the grind of school work.

Rural schools are changing and rural life is changing under modern conditions, said Professor Works. The automobile, good roads, the telephone and the increasing numbers of daily papers and other literature that go into the farm home every day are bringing about a change. It brings neighbors closer to one another and all closer to the cities and modern ideas in schools, although still behind those of machinery and other rural innovations.

As predicted the passing of the little red district school house and the formation of union schools as the result of the closer touch of communities.

WOMEN PAY ALIMONY.

Another Anti Argument Refuted by Stern Facts.

One of those "privileges of woman" whose possession, it is said, ought to prohibit her from having even so much as a desire for the vote has been accounted the receiving of alimony. Here comes along a new set of facts which puts 6,354 men into the same "privileged class." These are not new cases brought about by the new and restless woman; they are cases recorded within the United States divorce courts from the year 1887 to 1906. And they are actual receivers, not merely seekers, of alimony. The latter class would add another 2,000 to the number. The aggrieved wife who seeks support from her ex-husband gets it in about 72 per cent of the instances. The aggrieved husband gets it in about 70 per cent.

Now, this is not a suffrage state custom. The greatest number of male alimony receivers hails from Ohio, that state which the "antis" claim as one most bitterly opposed to woman suffrage. In fact, none of the older suffrage states shines in this list at all. Incidentally, it may be news to the antis to learn that the greatest field of divorce is not inside suffrage territory, but in the north central division, where nearly half of all the divorces in the United States were granted in the two decades in question. So these extra-privileged men, who should be reminded that they are jeopardizing special advantages by using their ballots, are found to be 673 in Ohio, 443 in Michigan, 243 in Nebraska—all states which have recently refused the ballot to "privileged" women.

STUNG BY HIS CONSCIENCE

Paroled Convict Asks to Be Sent Back to Prison at Michigan City, Ind.

Vincennes, Ind.—Charles Bays, fifty-one, walked into the police station here and asked whether he was wanted at Michigan City for violating his parole. Chief of Police Adams could find nothing in the records from Michigan City, but a telegram from Warden Fogarty stated that Bays was wanted and to hold him.

Bays was sentenced from one to eight years from Dubois county in 1910 for the theft of a half gallon of whisky. He has served three years, but his term was lengthened when he failed to report while on parole. He said he became intoxicated several months ago, failed to report, and his conscience has been knocking him ever since. He was returned to Michigan [illegible]

HIGH POWER GUNS

Long Range Weapons That Are Used In Land Warfare.

TYPES OF HEAVY ORDNANCE.

Field and Siege Guns, Howitzers and Mortars Are Very Much Akin, and It Is Difficult to Say Just Where One Ends and the Other Begins.

There is no sharp and distinct understanding on the part of the average person as to the difference or distinction between the field gun, the siege gun, the howitzer and the mortar. The precise line of distinction or mark of distinction between these classes of weapons might be difficult even for an ordnance technician to define. It is certainly difficult for a layman to tell just where the gun ends and the howitzer begins, or where the howitzer ends and the mortar begins.

Considered in a broad and general way, the special purpose of the gun was and is to destroy other guns in march or in position, to destroy troops in the open and to batter down objects behind which troops find shelter. The projectile of the gun by high powder pressure was given a high velocity and a relatively flat trajectory, which means that the shot passing from the gun to the target did not rise high above the earth or above a line joining gun and target. To withstand the powder pressure required for this work the gun was heavy in relation to the weight of the projectile. From the fact that the shot traveled in a path relatively of slight curve, its slope of fall or its angle of fall was not steep. It would go through a stone wall, or perhaps smash it, or would go deep into a dirt embankment, but it was not easy to put a shot inside a narrow deep trench, or to plant a shot so close behind an embankment as to kill men sheltered there.

The shot from the gun was good at penetration, but ineffective in searching the rear of cover. To accomplish that purpose another style of gun was devised. The pressure per square inch of powder chamber was decreased, the angle of elevation of the gun was increased, the angle of departure of the shot wsa greatly increased and the shot after reaching the summit of its path fell so steeply that if the range were known and the practice good the shot would land in a trench or fall so close behind an embankment or parapet that men would find no shelter there.

This being possible by a reduction of powder pressure per square inch of chamber surface and consequent reduction in the speed of the projectile, it was found that the weight of the gun in relation to the weight of the projectile could be diminished, thus increasing its mobility or the facility with which it could be moved from place to place.

It was found that the barrel of this gun could be very much shortened, thus effecting a saving in weight. But in making the changes in this gun instead of absolutely decreasing its weight the gunmakers enlarged its bore and increased the size of its projectile, thus increasing its efficiency. This type of gun, though not in the narrow and technical sense a "gun," is ordnance and an element of artillery and was given the specific name "howitzer."

The mortar was a gun that could give a higher angle of fire and a more plunging fire than a howitzer. It was a very short piece of ordnance, fired from a platform and held down by ropes. Forts and mortar boats used it for getting a high angle of fire and a more plunging fire with larger shell than could be had using a howitzer. The range used to be obtained by varying the power charge. At this day mortars weighing at least four tons, fitted with an elevating device and range scale and with recoil and counter recoil or recuperator devices, are hauled around on wheels, set down on a platform also carried on wheels, and producing vertical fire with a high explosive shell weighing 250 pounds with or without a delay action fuse.

The field gun for the purpose of firing over ridges, getting at troops on the reverse slope of ridges or across hills, giving to shrapnel the proper slope of fall for effective distribution and keeping the load light on the horses has veered away from the gun as developed in ship and fortress artillery and in the direction of the howitzer-like properties. Field guns have had their trails split that the breech may be further depressed, thus giving them a higher angle of fire designed for use against air craft, and in effecting a useful compromise between power and mobility the trajectory of shots from this gun is high and the slope of fall quite steep.

Guns of high power—high powder pressure, high velocity and long range—have been built to give vertical fire or nearly vertical elevation against aeroplanes or dirigibles.

So, as announced, it is not an easy question to decide just where gun, howitzer and mortar divide.—Washington Star.

PULL TOGETHER.

With all the responsibilities devolving upon us, to be of service to our fellow workers we should not only organize the yet unorganized, inculcate the spirit of unity, fraternity and federation, but we should work to that one end which shall make our organized labor movement the most effective to advance the interests of the toiling masses of our country and to bring encouragement and hope, light and success into the lives of those dependent upon them.—American Federationist.

STRONG UNIONS URGED.

Organized Labor Should Strive to Build Up Power.

Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, in an address before the delegates to the International Fur Workers' union, in recent session at New York city, said in part:

"It's all right to tell us about the streets of gold and the beautiful things in the sweet by and by, but we want some of those things in the bitter now and now."

The speaker exhorted the members to stand by and to improve their union, not only in time of industrial strife, but continually.

"I have seen unions of fur workers and other unions come and go," he said. "What would you think of an army unprepared to meet the onslaught of its enemies? An army dismembered and at the mercy of a powerful foe is comparable to the plight in which I have seen unions that were not properly organized. In addition to enthusiasm you must have a system of self imposed discipline to lend strength to your organized efforts. Be prepared to present a solid phalanx to forces opposing you. Yours is an organization not for a year, or a decade, or a century, but for all time. And the struggles of labor in our time will be even more important to the historian of the future than the great barbaric struggle now convulsing Europe."

The labor leader spoke of the fact that his education was not a result of college training, but that he worked for twenty-six years "at the bench."

"I am not a professor, studying the conditions of labor as I might study those of a bug," he said with a smile. "I am one of you, and the members of my family are of you. My father, son and granddaughter are all members of labor unions, and they are all earning their livings. That isn't so bad for four generations of a proletariat family, is it?'

Mr. Gompers declared his unswerving loyalty to the United States.

The First "Lady In Trade."

Perhaps the most notable instance on record of the feminine street trader is that of the "white widow," otherwise the Duchess of Tyrconnell, the Frances Jennings of the De Grammont memoirs, who at the time of the revolution in 1688, according to Horace Walpole, "being reduced to absolute want on her arrival in England and unable for some time to procure secret access to her family, hired one of the stalls under the Royal Exchange and maintained herself by the sale of small articles of haberdashery. She wore a white dress wrapping her whole person and a white mask, which she never removed, and excited much interest and curiosity."—London Chronicle.

NOTHING NEW ABOUT SUFFRAGE

Few Countries Left on Civilized Globe Where Women Are Not at Least Partly Enfranchised.

Will New York Be First Eastern State to Grant Full Suffrage?

The reactionary who refers to woman suffrage as "an innovation" and shivers and shakes over the awful prospect of trying a political expedient so "new and unproved" might feel better about it if he would familiarize himself with certain salient facts in suffrage history.

Woman suffrage is not new. It has been proved. Country by country, year by year, either partial or full suffrage has been put into effect the world over until today there is hardly a country on the civilized globe that has not enfranchised its women to some extent. The only thing left undone is to complete the enfranchisement. Here in America the eleven states in which women have full suffrage, plus Illinois, in which they can vote for the president of the United States, by no means tell the nearly finished story of the enfranchisement of American women. As a matter of fact, there are only fourteen states in the Union that do not already give women partial suffrage. In twenty-two states women have bond, school or taxation suffrage.

What is true of America is true of other lands. It began in 1838, when Kentucky granted school suffrage to widows with children of school age.

A banner year was 1869. That year England granted municipal suffrage to single women and widows. Victoria granted municipal suffrage to married and single women. Wyoming granted full suffrage, the first state to grant full suffrage to women.

From 1869 to 1881 school suffrage made great strides. Some of the states granting school suffrage were Michigan, Minnesota, Colorado, New Hampshire, Oregon, Massachusetts, New York, Vermont and New Zealand. Western Australia and South Australia granted municipal suffrage, and Scotland granted municipal suffrage to single women and widows. In 1881 the Isle of Man granted parliamentary suffrage.

Another banner year was 1887, when Kansas, Nova Scotia, Manitoba, North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, Arizona and New Jersey granted women either school or municipal suffrage. In 1888-9 England gave county suffrage, British Columbia municipal suffrage, Scotland county suffrage, the province of Quebec municipal suffrage to single women and widows.

From 1893 to 1898 only one year stands out in which women were not granted some kind of suffrage over a wide range of countries. In France women engaged in commerce were given the right to vote for judges of the tribunal court. Ireland gave women the right to vote for all officers except members of parliament. South Australia, Idaho and Utah gave women full suffrage. England gave parish and district suffrage to married and single women.

In 1900, 1901 and 1902 some notable victories were won. Western Australia gave women full suffrage, New South Wales full suffrage, Australia full suffrage, New York taxpaying suffrage and Norway municipal suffrage. In 1903 Tasmania gave full suffrage. In 1905 Queensland gave full suffrage. In 1906 Finland gave full suffrage. In 1908 Victoria gave full suffrage.

In 1911 California gave full suffrage, the biggest victory the women had won in the west. Honduras gave municipal suffrage in its capital city, Belize. Iceland gave parliamentary suffrage for women over twenty-five years of age. In 1912 suffrage boomed anew, Oregon, Arizona and Kansas giving full suffrage. In 1913 Alaska and Norway gave full suffrage and Illinois gave limited suffrage. In 1914 Iceland, Montana and Nevada gave full suffrage.

In 1915 Denmark freed her women and the action of the Icelandic parliament was sustained by the king of Denmark's signature, thus completing the enfranchisement of Iceland's women. New York has already given women the school and taxpaying suffrage in villages. In November the state will have a chance to be first over the line in the east to enroll for full suffrage. That is why from the Hudson to the lakes you hear little else today but "Vote for the woman suffrage amendment, Nov. 2, 1915."

METEOR'S DASH WAS A BRILLIANT EXPLOIT

Germans, Hemmed In, Escaped on a Norse Merchantman.

Berlin.—The story of a naval exploit which matches in daring the spectacular rovings of the Emden, the Prince Eitel and other German commerce destroyers was told when the details of the sinking of the German auxiliary Meteor were received.

After an adventurous dash in the North sea the captain of the Meteor, hemmed in by enemy patrol boats, succeeded in escaping with his crew and British prisoners aboard a commandeered merchant craft after he blew up his own vessel.

"According to private reports," says a news agency, "the Meteor, a converted merchant steamer, succeeded in breaking through the lines of British patrol ships and traveling to the Orkney islands, 550 miles from her base. She laid a large number of mines and destroyed British merchant ships.

"Finally she encountered the British cruiser Ramsey, which she sank after a splendid maneuver. The captain of the Meteor, whose crew consisted of about twenty-five men, saved and captured forty-three men from the Ramsey. About sixty others were drowned.

"British battle cruisers, notified by wireless, pursued the Meteor. After the Meteor had burned the Danish merchantman Jason, with a contraband cargo aboard, the little German craft, facing four British cruisers, stopped a Norwegian steamer, transferred the captured British contraband crew and also put the Danish sailors on board. This boat escaped from her pursuers with the captured Englishmen. The Meteor was sunk by exploding her mines."

Good Reason.

Physicians say that it was only her wealth of hair that saved her from a fractured skull. The other car was driven by Gustav Eberle of Germantown.

VENTON LIKED ENSIGN'S WORK

It Is Claimed That While in His Cups He Interfered With Army's Religious Services.

John Venton, of West Fourth st., who has been arraigned in police court on divers charges for the past few years, was once again in the toils this morning. Although Venton put up a strong story and made a fervent plea for clemency, it is very probable that he will receive a jail sentence this time, although Judge Wilson postponed action in his case until tomorrow.

Venton admitted taking a few drinks last night, but insisted that he limited himself to four. However, the Salvation Army meeting, in progress at the corner of South First and Cayuga sts., was about to close, when Venton elbowed his way through the crowd and caught Ensign Fitzgerald of the Army by the arm as the Ensign was leading the army in prayer. Venton, in a loud voice complimented the leader on his work here and was making himself very objectionable when Officer Smith walked out and asked him to leave. The officer says he asked Venton to go home three times. In spite of the fact that the officer offered him carfare to get home, Venton became abusive.

This morning Venton claimed he was the victim of persecution at the hands of the police force, and particularly Officer Smith, and swore he was not intoxicated when arrested. The man has a widowed mother who relies upon him for support, but he shows no inclination to go to work and settle down. He told Judge Wilson he would pay a fine Saturday, if the Judge would impose one, but inasmuch as he has been fined several times before, and in each instance the payment of the fine deprived those dependent upon him of money, the Judge seemed inclined to send him to jail, but remanded him until tomorrow morning.

FALL BEARING BERRIES ARE PICKED AT PULASKI

Pulaski.—Fruit growers and others, throughout certain sections of Oswego county for several years past have been giving much attention to the cultivation of fall bearing red raspberries and in which they are meeting with success. The ordinary red raspberry season usually closes at about the same time as the strawberry. W. M. Hollis is picking and shipping very large quantities of these late red raspberries.

Lawrence J. Farmer of Maplewood farm, prompter of the famous fall bearing strawberry, during the past few days shipped more than 150 quarts to various sections. The berry sells for 25 cents per quart. Mr. Farmer made a fine exhibit of the fall bearing berries in the Oswego county exhibit at the State Fair in Syracuse last week.

Many Dutiable Goods Coming By Mail from Stricken Continent

Rochester.—"Owing to some of the ordinary channels of transportation having been closed by war conditions, it is declared by the custom authorities, that the mails are being employed more than usual to convey dutiable articles from Europe to this country."

This word is sent out, in a bulletin by the Post Office Department to all postmasters. They are urged to use greater care than ever that letters and sealed and unsealed packages from foreign countries which may contain articles subject to custom duties are not delivered until the requirements of the postal laws with respect to them are complied with.

Through the international parcel post, firms in America have been able to obtain needed supplies of drugs, laces, wools, silks and a hundred and one other things with which Europe furnishes America. Without this medium there would have been a dearth here of some goods, and higher prices would have been asked for others. Realizing the need of undisturbed mail relations with the warring nations, the government has tried hard to keep the international agreements good. Occasionally they have been suspended, but the State Department has succeeded in having them re-established.

Eleven pounds is the maximum weight that can be sent to Europe by parcel post. The weight limit operates against practically none of the articles that are being shipped from Germany, France and other countries to the United States, except that it makes more packages. There are several European countries, notably Russia and Spain, with which the United States has never made parcel post agreements.

The money order business with Europe has been hard hit by the war. Usually, citizens of foreign countries residing in the United States send savings to relatives at home by purchasing money orders. The Italians especially use the mails for this purpose. Money orders have been less reliable since the outbreak of the war. Long delays have occurred, with other troubles to worry both sender and advised receiver. Gradually one country has followed another in suspending money order relations with the United States.

People fear to trust the mails for Europe with valuables, owing to unsettled conditions on the seas and the risk run on land routes on the continent. Much money saved by European laborers which ordinarily would have been sent out of the country in money orders is now finding its way into the postal savings banks of Uncle Sam.

This institution has experienced a marked increase in its deposits from the foreign population during the past year. Many unnaturalized foreigners are suspicious of banks, and besides their savings are often smaller than they would bother state or national banks with. The alien knows that back of the postal savings bank stands the nation, and it is easy to deposit his money at the post office, where he is in the habit of going to buy money orders, so he patronizes the banking branch of the postal service.

WEST BROADWAY BRIGHTER BY REASON OF INDUSTRY

There is a wide divergence between the practice of the culinary art and art made real by brush and paint—and skill, yet Vernon Severance, he of the West Broadway lunch car, is a proved demonstrator of both. For proof of the claim all that one has to do is to look upon Vernon's handiwork with pot of paint and a good wide brush. The car is now white, and black lettering adorning its sides. The work was done between times or when business within the car was slack.

BULL MOOSE OF WEST LOOKING TO NEW YORK

New York.—Fifty-five county chairmen of the Progressive party of this state and a number of party leaders met here yesterday. George W. Perkins, Victor Murdock and William H. Childs were among those who attended the meeting.

Mr. Murdock addressed the conference upon the condition of the Progressive party in Western states and particularly in California, Colorado and Kansas. He declared that the success of thep arty throughout the country depended largely upon what was done in New York, as the other states were looking here for leadership.

Mr. Perkins spoke on the necessity of getting out a large enrollment at the primaries next spring when delegates to the national convention will be scienee elected.

The meeting also discussed the advisability of the party recommending the voters the adoption of the new Constitution.

It was finally decided to appoint a committee to get reports from county chairmen as to whether the new Constitution should be voted for or against, the committee to report to a meeting to be held within two weeks.

After the committee report is received, the question of whether a letter should be addressed to progressive voters on the subject will be decided.

After the committee report is received, the question of whether a letter should be addressed to progressive voters on the subject will be decided.

It was announced later that the conference will hold its next meeting at state headquarters here on September 30.

Progressive leaders from several states will be the guests of George W. Perkins and other Progressives at a dinner Wednesday night in honor of Mr. Murdock.

Drug Famine is Predicted If European War is Prolonged

Rochester.—One effect the European war in this country will be a drug famine, according to William M. Gibson, of the Gibson Drug Company, a wholesale concern. Even now, according to Mr. Gibson, some prices are so high they are almost prohibitive, and some drugs cannot be obtained at any price. Rochester retail druggists say the condition of the drug market is alarming. One estimate has it that drugs commonly used have gone up from 500 to 800 per cent. since the first of the year.

From a survey of the drug list it is evident that drugs most affected are those imported from Russia, Germany and Austria-Hungary. England's blockade, according to Mr. Gibson, has stopped completely the shipment from Germany and Austria-Hungary of the finer oils and specialized products.

Coal-tar products are most affected and essential oils come next, Said Mr. Gibson. The chief difficulty with the drug market is the almost complete shutting off of the coal-tar products. These have come from Germany, where special equipment has been used. The products can be made in America, but not economically. To make coal-tar products at a profit all the by-products must be used. This will take an initial investment of about $2,000,000. If the war was to last five years longer this could be done profitably. As it is, there is no one in the United States willing to make the investment, for within a few months or a year they may be forced to meet German competition.

Carbolic acid is practically unobtainable. The little that is on the market has sold at an increase of 1,200 per cent. We have a small amount on hand and have restricted its sale to one pound to a customer. I don't think there have been fewer suicides by carbolic acid as a consequence of the rise in price. Carbolic acid is rather out of fashion as a means of ending one's existence.

Epsom salts have advanced about 300 per cent. This involves a large amount of money when the quantity sold every year is considered. We dispose of hundreds of carloads annually. Epsom salts contain potash and Germany has a complete monopoly of potash. For this reason there has been a decrease in the price of Epsom. The same is true of alum, which has risen about 100 per cent. This, too, contains potash.

STREET RAILWAY MEN ELECT THEIR OFFICERS

Rochester.—William D. Mahon, of Detroit, was re-elected amid wild acclamation president of the Amalgamated Assotiation of Street and Electric Railway Employes of America at its closing session in Convention Hall yesterday afternoon. Mr. Mahon has been president of the organization since its inception in 1893 and is the oldest labor leader next to Sampel Gompers in point of service. His followers aver that he has been and is the backbone of the union.

Providence defeated Cleveland in a fight to obtain the next convention, which is scheduled for September of 1917.

Other officers elected were: First vice-president, John J. Thorpe, of Pittsburgh; second vice-president, William Welch, of Wheeling, W. Va.; third vice-president, George Keenan, of Rochester; fourth vice-president, Benjamin Commons, of New Orleans; fifth vice-president, P. J. O'Brien, of Springfield, Mass.; sixth vice-president, W. S. Clenathan, of Chicago; seventh vice-president, Benjamin Bowbeer, of Oakland; eighth vice-president, Joseph Gibbons, of Toronto; ninth vice-president Fred Hoover, of Vancouver, B. C.; tenth vice-president, A. J. Dean, of Stockton, Cal.; treasurer, Rezin Orr.

JUSTICE URGES FULL APPROVAL

Judge Rodenbeck Favors Adoption of Work of Constitutional Convention—Explains Needs.

Rochester.—Judge Adolph J. Rodenbeck, of the Court of Claims, is strongly in favor of the adoption by the people of the Constitution reccommended by the Constitutional convention. Referring to this matter Judge Rodenbeck said:

"The proposed amendments are very important and far-reaching and should receive the unqualified approbation of the people at the polls. Among the most important provisions are those for home rule for cities, the short ballot and reorganization of the state departments. Another vital amendment is that requiring the state budget to be made prior to the assembling of the Legislature.

"Of course, I think that another important part of the new Constitution is the section which requires the Legislature to act with all convenient speed on the report of the Board of Statutory Consolidation transmitted to the Legislature on April 21, 1915, to enact a brief and simple civil practice act and to adopt a separarte code of civil practice rules for the regulation of the procedure in the Court of Appeals, Supreme Court and County Court. This provision, like all the others, must be ratified by the people before it is effective.

Code Changes Advised

"The report of the Board of Statutory Consolidation, of which I have been chairman since its establishment in 1904, does away with the entire present code of civil procedure by providing a short practice act of seventy-one sections, 401 rules of court, separate statutes embodying the practic in special and local courts, and matters of a substantive character now in the civil code. The report of the board may be modified or another system adopted, but the Legislature must act in some manner on this report in case the people approve the new Constitution.

"The report of the board consists of three large volumes and continuous work was done upon it for the last year and a half, while the whole subject was before the board for eleven years.

"Under the plan proposed in the report of this board, the procedure will be regulated by rules of court to be made by the courts themselves, which may be modified by the courts in the interests of justice as may be required.

Courts Made Responsible

"As a result, it will be useless to raise fine points of practice, and controversies over matters of procedure will be done away with. The responsibility for the administration of justice will be placed upon the courts instead of the Legislature and the change from statutory rules to court rules will release the bonds which now tie up justice.

"The new secton of the Constitution recommended by the Constitutional convention relating to civil practice is ti visit in the courts the power to make their own reules, subject to the right of the Legislature to direct, at intervals of five years, that changes shall be made in such rules. A radical revision is that which provides for the voluntary submission of a controversy to a trial court or judge with or without pleading and with no regard to technical rules of evidence or procedure. This will allow merchants or others to go before a court without counsel, informally, and submit matters in question for adjudication.

One Form for All Relief.

"Under the proposed procedure there will be but one form of action for all manner of relief except for special proceedings in the consolidated laws. The new system provides for one trial of the facts by reserving questions of law or by submitting the facts in such a way as to obviate a second trial of the same facts.

"There is great necessity for reform of our civil practice, as every lawyer knows and every suitor knows better. The bar associations have remedied some of its defects during recent years, but it was left for the Board of Statutory Consolidation to make a complete plan for the simplification of the civil practice."

Judge Rodenbeck has won fame by his work revising and codifying the laws of the state. He will deliver an address on "Simplifying the Civil Procedure" before the Ohio State bar in December. He has served one year as Mayor of Rochester and two terms as Assembyman and served as a member of the Court of Claims, of which he is now the presiding justice. For several years he was corporation counsel for this city.

Retirement of Fitzgerald Leaves Southern Men in Complete Control of House

Washington.—(Special Correspondence.)—The announcement that Hon. John J. Fitzgerald has relinquished congressional honors and will seek the graver atmosphere of the judiciary and a seat on the New York State bench, directs attention to two facts: First, that "Fitzy," long disgusted with the antics of his Democratic colleagues in Congress, intends to retain some remnants of self-respect; and, second, that at last complete control over Federal legislation will now pass into the hands of the Southern Democracy.

Fitzgerald was the only Democrat from a Northern State holding a chairmanship on a House committee of any importance. Several times during the last Congress, in his role as legislative buffer for the Northern and Western States for a lot of weird legislation, he took occasion to hand the Southern contingent some acid comment on the way they were plunging into the public coffers and scattering the taxpayers' money all over the South. Swagar Sherley, of Kentucky, will succeed him as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Practically all legislation of importance to the country is handled by 27 committees, and the power of a chairman over his committee is well-nigh despotic. There are 31 other committees of small account and a few of these have representatives from the North or West for chairmen.

In the Senate, Francis G. Newlands, of Nevada, is chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce; James A. O'Gorman, of New York, is chairman of the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, and George E. Chamberlain, of Oregon, is chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. The chairmen of the other important committees are all from the South.

With the Cabinet bossed by President Wilson and Son-in-Law McAdoo, both born in the South and both sending everything they can back there, it would seem that that section of our United States is pretty well looked after.

As one reason for adopting a policy of preparedness, which they have hitherto opposed, the Democrats point out that it would help restore prosperity. It is certainly up to them to restore prosperity if it can be done, for theirs is the responsibility for prosperity destroyed. But it doesn't occur to them to bring back good times by restoring the tariff laws which they repealed. Accustomed to superficial study of governmental problems and habituated to makeshifts in legislation, they figure that since "war orders" from Europe have brought a measure of prosperity to certain localities in the United States, more prosperity can be created by making place for a half million of the unemployed in the regular army and by placing orders for war vessels and for equipment for both the army and navy.

Most certainly a movement of that kind would have a large effect in relieving present distressing conditions, but the means by which it had been accomplished would fool no one. The record would be plainly written in the books of the Treasury Department, where accounts of public disbursements are kept. The American voter is intelligent enough to know the effect of expenditures of that sort and has reasoning power enough to know that prosperity based upon such business cannot be sound economically nor of permanent efficacy. What the American people want is to get back to economic principles that are sound, and to build an industrial system that will flourish in either peace or war. By a protective tariff policy, Germany built up her domestic industries until the nation became commercially independent. Today, when shut off from most of the other great producing nations of the earth, she is demonstrating the wisdom of her tariff policy. The lesson will not be lost upon American people and we shall not depend upon war orders from abroad or at home for permanent prosperity.

Difference Between Amusing and Convincing

By HERBERT KAUFMAN
Author of "Do Something! Be Something!"

AN ADVERTISER must realize that there is a vast difference between amusing people and convincing them. It does not pay to be "smart" at the line rate of the average first-class paper. I suppose that I could draw the attention of everybody on the street by painting half of my face red and donning a suit of motley. I might have a sincere purpose in wishing to attract the crowd, but I would be deluding myself if I mistook the nature of their attention.

The new advertiser is especially prone to misjudge between amusing and convincing copy. A humorous picture may catch the eye of every reader, but it won't pay as well as an illustration of some piece of merchandise which will strike the eye of every buyer. Merchants secure varying results from the same advertising space. The publisher delivers to each the same quality of readers, but the advertiser who plants flippancy in the minds of the community won't attain the benefit that is secured by the merchant who imprints clinching arguments there.

Always remember that the advertising sections of newspapers are no different than farming lands. And it is as preposterous to hold the publisher responsible for the outcome of unintelligent copy as it would be unjust to blame the soil for bad seed and poor culture. Every advertiser gets exactly the same number of readers from a publisher and the same readers—after that it's up to him—the results fluctuate in accordance with the intelligence and the pulling power of the copy which is inserted.

A Dollar That Can't Be Spent

By HERBERT KAUFMAN
Author of "Do Something! Be Something!"

EVERY dollar spent in advertising is not only a seed dollar which produces a profit for the merchant, but is actually retained by him even after he has paid it to the publisher.

Advertising creates a good will equal to the cost of the publicity.

Advertising really costs nothing. While it uses funds it does not use them up. It helps the founder of a business to grow rich and then keeps his business alive after his death.

It eliminates the personal equation. It perpetuates confidence in the store and makes it possible for a merchant to withdraw from business without having the profits of the business withdrawn from him. It changes a name to an institution—an institution which will survive its builder.

It is really an insurance policy which costs nothing—pays a premium each year instead of calling for one and renders it possible to change the entire personnel of a business without disturbing its prosperity.

A business which is not advertised must rely upon the personality of its proprietor, and personality in business is a decreasing factor. The public does not want to know the man who owns the store—it isn't interested in him but in his goods. When an unadvertised business is sold it is only worth as much as its stock of goods and its fixtures. There is no good will to be paid for—it does not exist—it has not been created. The name over the door means nothing except to the limited stream of people from the immediate neighborhood, any of whom could tell you more about some store ten miles away which has regularly delivered its shop news to their homes.

It is as shortsighted for a man to build a business which dies with his death or ceases with his inaction, as it is unfair for him not to provide for the continuance of its income to his family.

SYNOPSIS

Old Cyrus Martin, the head of the American soap trust, makes a bet of $50,000 with a friend, John Clark, a rival soapmaker, that his (Martin's) son Rodney would be making more money at the end of a year than Clark's son Ellery.

Martin takes his pretty secretary, Mary Grayson, into his confidence and enlists her co-operation. Rodney has been a spendthrift, and the father wants to make him reform and go to work.

Mary meets Rodney, and the son proposes marriage to her. Rodney tells his father about his proposal, and the old man pretends great anger. He tells Mary he will disinherit Rodney.

Rodney defies his father, and Mary is deeply touched at the lad's genuine affection for her. Mary makes a financial bargain with Martin to encourage the son to go to work.

Ambrose Peale, press agent, meets Rodney and agrees to go into business with the lad on a salary basis. Rodney has resolved to go into the soap industry and buck the trust.

Rodney, Peale and Mary go into the soap trade together. Rodney then endeavors to borrow $10,000 as capital for his newly formed company.

The offices of the "13 Soap company" are opened, and they advertise it as "the most expensive soap in the world." Peale talks advertising continually.

The 13 Soap company finds its expenses very heavy, and financial rocks loom ahead. Their chief business seems to have been to spend money for advertising under Peale's directions.

letter and exclaimed in disgust, when he had glanced at it. "Oh, French stuff."

"She says she was delayed abroad, but that she's due on the Northumberland this morning and that she's coming to see us at 11."

"It's half past 11 now," Mary sighed. "Oh, dear. She's late."

"Fear not," said Peale. "Remember, though a countess, she is still a woman. Give her time."

"Does she say anything about the $15,000?" asked Mary, to which Rodney was obliged to answer, "No."

Peale, however, had a hunch everything was going to be all right. Unluckily Miss Burke punctured it by entering and saying Mr. Jones, the ad. man, was here to see him and seemed very angry.

"My hunch is wrong," said Peale. "Here's where we take an aeroplane and dig a hole right through the ceiling."

"Keep a stiff upper lip," Rodney counseled.

"Oh, sure, I'm full of starch," Peale retorted.

"Good luck, Rodney," said Mary.

They looked forward to the countess and her $10,000, and instead here was Jones again with his advertising bill. Such were the ways of business life. A colorless, unprepossessing person enough was Jones, but in truth the soap trio would have been poor judges of any man's personal magnetism who came on Jones' errand. To them he was just the man with the advertising bill.

He entered quite boldly, allowing he'd come right in and not wait to be told they were all out. He was an experienced bill collector.

There was nothing to do but receive him bravely.

"Why, hello, Mr. Jones," said Rodney genially, pretending to be quite glad and surprised to see him.

"How are you, Jack?" began Peale. He even tried to shake Jones' hand, but was thrown off roughly.

"You may be in the soap business, but cut out the soft soap with me," was his unsympathetic comment. "Where's my money? Have you got it?"

"Why—er—the fact is"— Rodney began.

"That means you haven't."

"Well, you see"—

"Bury the stall, bury it," said Jones brutally. "Do you think you can put me off? You can bet your blooming liabilities you can't. I'm going after you good. I think this whole concern is bunk, and I'm on my way to the sheriff now."

Rodney grew provoked.

"I don't care for that kind of loud talk. Drop it," he said sternly.

"Drop it," repeated Peale.

"What?" exclaimed Jones in surprise.

"He said drop it," repeated Peale.

Rodney stumbled on:

"It's simply that I haven't had time to examine your bill in detail. This afternoon, however, I"—

"Old stuff, old stuff," Jones scoffed.

But something gave Rodney a new resolve.

"Meanwhile," he went on, "I'll give you a check for $2,500 on account," he said. "I presume that will be satisfactory, won't it?"

"Why—yes—sure—but"— Jones stammered, [illegible] and Rodney [illegible] ed to Peale [illegible]!

"You understand, Mr. Peale, that not a cent of that $50,000 we appropriated for our October advertising campaign is to go to him?"

"Absolutely," said Peale. This was a great word with Ambrose, pronounced always with a strong accent on the "loot."

Jones was impressed.

"Now, Mr. Martin, I'll admit I'm hasty tempered. I'm sorry I made a mistake, but a contract is a contract, and"— he began.

"Here's your check. Good day," said Rodney.

"But, Mr. Martin"—

"Show Mr. Jones out," Rodney went on to Peale, who obeyed with glee.

"Come on, Jack. This way to the elevator," he said.

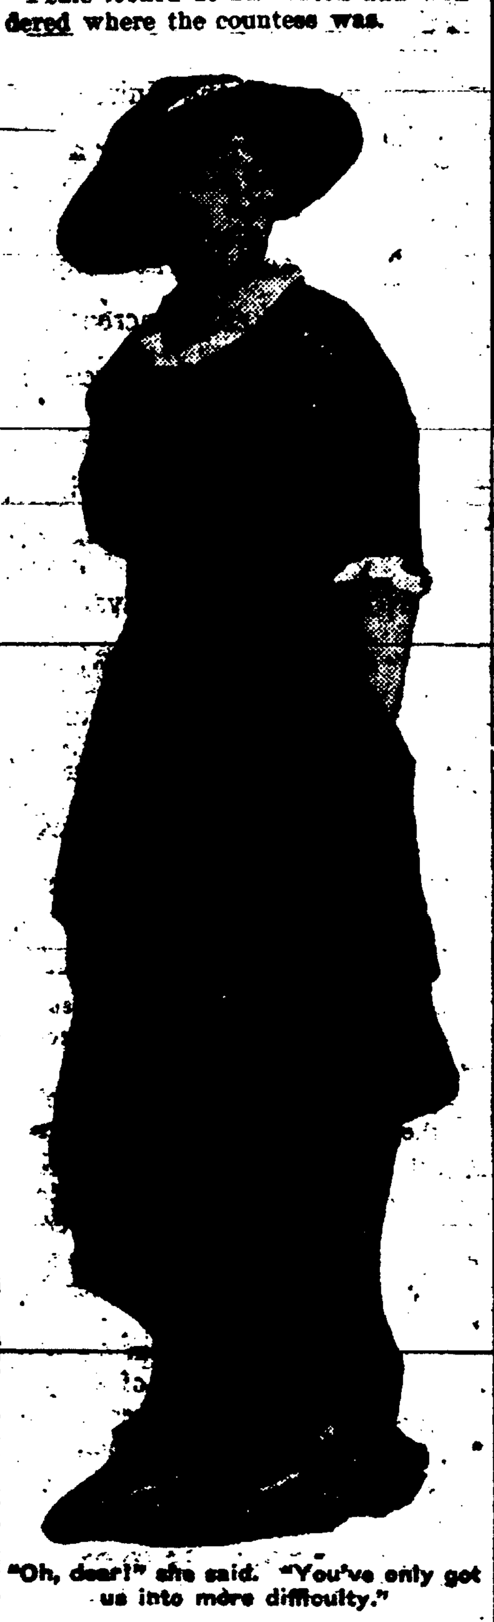
"Oh, dear!" she said. "You've only got us into more difficulty. You know there's no money in the bank."

"But the check won't go through the clearing house until tomorrow morning, and by then we'll have the $10,000 from the countess," protested Rodney.

Peale looked at his watch and wondered where the countess was.



"Oh, dear!" she said. "You've only got us into more difficulty."

"I'll bet she sank in midocean," he predicted dolefully. Wasn't that just the way with money when you wanted it? So things always went, it seemed, when they needed cash. They had looked forward so eagerly and so long to that 50,000 francs, and instead they had entertained a dun, a very vulgar and demonstrative dun at that.

Rodney could not pretend he liked such scenes and said so with some vigor. Even Peale looked a little sympathetic and forgot to spout his advertising gospel.

It was adding injury to misfortune when a card was presently handed to the president of the 13 Soap company bearing the name of Ellery Clark. How Rodney hated that fellow! He must admit that Ellery had never done anything to him, but he could not bear him, just the same. He said as much to Peale, whose curiosity seemed to be aroused:

"Let's have a peek at him," he said.

"Take a good look at him," said Rodney as Miss Burke went after Ellery, "and see what father wanted me to be like. Ellery went into business—so must I. Ellery loved work—so must I."

"But it was only his pride in you," said Mary. "Your father didn't want old John Clark constantly rubbing it in about Ellery's success."

"I didn't want it rubbed into me either," said Rodney.

"Well, this is our chance to impress Ellery," said Peale. "Who knows too? He may have some money."

"Meanwhile I'll go call up the steamship office again," said Mary. "Oh, Rodney," she called back, "find out how Ellery's doing in business, will you?"

Rodney watched her as she disappeared and was brought to presently by Peale.

"You're spoiling that girl—she used to be a good business woman. Now half the time instead of using her brains she sits and looks at you as if you were some marvelous antique work of art."

Rodney laughed and, as a matter of fact, liked this teasing. Above all, it was delicious to his heart to hear Peale say that Mary was in love with him. He did think Mary was beginning to show a little more love for him lately despite their troubles, and Peale's testimony made him glad. He looked up quite good naturedly, only forcing a frown on his face as Ellery Clark came in. Ellery bored him awfully at most times.

The truth is John Clark's Ellery was a real pinhead and always would be, overdressed in the latest style, affected, aping the English when he remembered to do so, but oftener than not, forgetting.

"Hello, Rodney. Mind if I come in?" he called out cheerfully.

"I'm very busy today, Mr. Clark," said Rodney coolly.

"Oh, I suppose you are," Ellery agreed. "Must take a lot of time to get up your advertisements."

Peale pricked up his ears at this.

"You like 'em? I write 'em. My name's Peale," he rattled off, coming over to Ellery, who, however, looked right through him as if he were empty air. That sort of treatment was lost on Ambrose, who only walked back to his chair, comically rebuffed, and settled down to the role of listener.

"What is it, Mr. Clark?" Rodney went on.

"You see, it's like this, old top," said Ellery. "I've been having rather a time with father lately. Silly old man. Of course with a dad like yours, who's perfectly satisfied with you, you can't understand that."

"No, of course not," said Rodney dryly.

"You see, my old man's out of date," Ellery went on, encouraged. "Insisted on the absurd idea of my going into business—beastly bore."

"But you wanted to, didn't you?" asked Rodney.

"I should say not."

"But I thought you loved work."

"Work? It's preposterous except for the lower classes. Men of intelligence go in for the professions. I paint."

"You look it," said Peale in a half aside.

"I'd heard you were a model son," said Rodney.

At this Ellery opened his eyes and stared.

"Why, that's just what father says about you," he exclaimed. "He says you're a great executive."

"Well, I must admit that business life is very congenial to me," said Rodney, mussing up some papers on his desk and employing his rubber stamp vigorously.

"Oh, I don't consider it a compliment to be a success in business! Think of all the blighters who are," declared Ellery.

"Yes, the bally rotters," Peale interjected, unable to keep still. He had been observing Ellery all this time as if fascinated by this new specimen. Unconsciously he began to mimic him. If Ellery crossed his legs he crossed his. He even took his handkerchief and stuffed it in his cuffs like Ellery.

"Father keeps reminding me of your success every day," said Ellery plaintively. "Most irritating. Of course he's sore because I haven't bothered much about business. Oh, I've tackled a thing or two, but luck was against me—just didn't happen to work out. Not my fault, you understand."

"I should say not. You couldn't be to blame," came from Peale, who must talk.

"Of course if I'd really devoted myself to business," Ellery went on, "but when you know you can do a thing if you want to why bother to do it if it bores you?"

"Good idea that," echoed Peale.

Ellery proceeded to explain that his father had been particularly offensive lately, so that he had decided to give a little time to business and make a success of it. He could, you know. It was really all figured out. Oh, quite. He had things all figured out. For the scheme he had in mind he had got to raise $7,500, and he wanted to talk about it. Peale and Rodney exchanged looks.

"I'm very sorry, Ellery," Rodney answered, "but money's tight just now."

"But not with you," said Ellery. "The way you're working you must be pretty rich. Heaven knows you ought to be—manufacturing soap."

"But all my capital is invested already," explained Rodney. "I can't undertake any outside ventures. Can I, Peale?"

"Not with my consent," Peale agreed. "You ought to see our assets and liabilities."

But Ellery went right on:

WAR'S EFFECT ON FURS.

Paris Depending on Russia For the Fall Output.

The precious furs from nearly all over the world always went to France and found their way back to the lands that had produced them. Whether or not Paris can take care of this trade this summer remains to be seen. She has handled the clothes question with all her old time skill and not left the rest of the world in doubt concerning the silhouette or materials to be adopted, although she will not attempt to produce her usual immense personal trade for the women who have always gone to her for their clothes. This work she leaves practically to America, the only country except the Argentine where fashionable clothing is sought and bought. It may be that America will supply the Argentine, and it is rumored that several of its buyers are coming to New York to buy French models or their copies.

The nonfreedom of the seas has kept the great bulk of American travelers away from France, and there is no reason to doubt, therefore, that the women will buy all their clothes, including furs, from the American merchants who have representatives now in France going their usual two a day rounds of the dressmaking houses.

Callot and Cheruit, the two houses that always have a significant influence on American fashion, are not yet open. The latter house always defers its openings until the others have finished their business, although some of the buyers do not wait for the event. It is quite safe to assert, however, that when this is the case the buyer who leaves will receive all the Callot models he desires.

So as the huge auction sales in London are not held this year and the Paris openings are not yet over the furriers here are uncertain which way the wind will blow by October, and this may be the reason that even the most important fur houses here are selling fur garments at unusually low prices. It is a good time for the purchaser who merely wants fur, but the woman who fears being saddled with a garment that is not in keeping with the fashions will go warily about buying peltry now.

Bucks the Indian.

The captains are chosen, and each captain then chooses alternately the remaining company until two long lines are formed. They face each other, holding hands tightly. One captain calls the name of one of his strongest boys, and this boy runs and hurls himself between two boys of the opposing side. If he succeeds in breaking through he takes back with him to his own side all the boys on the line below the place he broke through. If he is unsuccessful he must join the enemy's side. This is kept up, each side taking a turn until all the boys are on one side, the captain included.

The Boy and the Squirrel.

Up in the tree a squirrel,
Under the tree a boy,
While through nut laden branches
Murmured the breezes coy.

Gathering his winter hoard,
Never a moment's play time

"My, what a lazy fellow!"
(Chippy had spied the boy
Stretched on the grass beneath him
Nothing his time to employ.)
"Hit him a whack!" the wind cried.
Chippy winked back, "That's so!"
Then from his mouth a nut fell.
Up sprang the boy: "Oh, ho!

Some one's up in the nut tree,
Bet I can tell you who!"
While he was speaking—kerwhack!
Down came nut number two.
Then the boy seized his basket,
"Better get busy," he said,
"Else all the squirrels in Nut Town
Of me will get ahead."

Easy & Practical Home Dress Making Lessons

QUITE QUAINT AND FASHIONABLE.

It is possible to have an afternoon frock that is both quaint and fashionable, as is shown by the design illustrated here. Chiffon cloth in a pale shade of blue is the material used, and for the trimming there are bands of black panne velvet across the lower edge of the front panel and pipings of black about the neck and sleeves. Gause or some sheer fabric may be used for the front panel if preferred. The materials required to make the dress in average size are 5 yards 36-inch chiffon cloth, 1½ yards plain gause (or 2½ yards if underblouse is of the same material) and ⅜ yard velvet.

A simple underbody will serve to wear under the quaint bodice, and the rules for making the simplest guimpe will serve in this instance. When it comes to the neck finish, however, it will have to be gathered between double "TT" perforations so that the standing collar may be attached with center-fronts and backs even.

To make the outer-front and back first gather under-arm edge of front between double "TT" perforations; stitch tape under left edge, drawing gathers to the required size. Sew front to right shoulder and under-arm edge and sew stay to left as notched. Arrange on underbody, center-fronts and

Next, gather the sleeve between double "TT" perforations; close seam as notched. Close cuff seam as notched, sew to sleeve, single large "O" perforations and seams even. Sew sleeve in underbody armhole as notched, easing in any fulness.

If eyelets are found difficult to make tiny crochet rings may be sewn to either side of the front of the waist and the satin cords laced through them.

LUSITANIA IN TEN VOLUMES.

Mrs. A. G. Vanderbilt Has Record of Press Clippings Compiled.

An unusual record of the destruction of the Lusitania and the subsequent developments in the case has been prepared at the request of Mrs. Alfred G. Vanderbilt. The record consists of ten volumes of newspaper clippings concerning the sinking of the ship by a German submarine. Each volume contains 100 pages of clippings, and is an inch and a half thick.

The books are bound in Russian levant and bear the inscription "S. S. Lusitania, May 7, 1915." Many of the clippings tell of the heroic last moments of Alfred G. Vanderbilt, during which he assisted women and children on the sinking ship.

Mrs. Vanderbilt intends ultimately to present the volumes to the library of Yale university.

How to Make Flaxseed Lemonade.

Wash one ounce of flaxseed and place in a saucepan with one quart of water and the peel from three lemons. Boil slowly for one hour. Strain and add two cupfuls of boiling water and sugar to taste and the lemon juice. This is fine for a cold if taken hot.

HELPFUL HINTS.

To clean varnish and paint rub with a cloth dipped in a weak solution of vinegar and warm water. Polish with a wash leather.

To clean marble rub with a slice of lemon dipped in salt. Leave for an hour, then wash off. All stains will be removed and a nice gloss secured.

Before sweeping carpets take an old round tin, pierce holes in the bottom and fill with common salt. Sprinkle this over the carpet. It prevents the dust from rising, brightens the colors and prevents moths.

When cleaning mirrors and windows sprinkle a few drops of metal polish upon a cloth and rub over the glass. Leave to dry; then polish with a clean cloth.

To remove smoke marks from ceiling mix a thick paste of starch and water and with a clean flannel spread it over the mark. Allow it to get thoroughly dry; then brush off with a soft brush and the marks will have disappeared.

Hot water marks can be removed from japanned trays by rubbing with sweet oil. When the marks have disappeared rub with dry flour and a soft cloth.

EVENING GOWN.

A Simple, Tasty Frock For Fall Dances.

A GIRLISH DESIGN.

This simple frock is developed with white net or chiffon over pale pink. Its shortish skirt is finished with a wreath of roses, which also complete the unique sleeves, while two rose clusters finish the corsage and belt line.

The Cotton Net on New Handkerchiefs.

Sheer linen lawn is the material of which most of the handkerchiefs are made with the exception of the glove handkerchiefs, and they are usually made of crepe de chine. Cotton net or tulle forms the border band on which is gathered a plaited frill of the net, one inch wide. So it would seem that the frill has invaded even the realm of mouchoirs. Linen lawn in rose, straw and blue with rounded corners are the handkerchiefs that boast the net or tulle frill. Square corners are reserved for those with the hemstitched finish.

It is estimated that the cotton exports from this country for the year will fall but little below that of 1913-14 notwithstanding the disturbance of

LURING WILD GEESE.

Live Decoys Are Often Used and Made to Play the Traitor.

American wild geese each spring migrate from waters of the southern states to the shores of the Arctic in northern Canada. The two great common varieties of the bird are the honkers and the wavy, or white, goose.

Both of these are extensively hunted. Covering, as they do, about 5,000 miles on their annual migration, these birds rest at various places en route and are thus shot by sportsmen almost across the length of the continent. The birds have a peculiar trait of always leaving one of their number on lookout while the rest feed.

To aid in the shooting of wild geese live wild ones, captured young and raised in captivity, are often placed in feeding grounds in likely territory on the line of flight of the migrating flocks. These decoys are terrible traitors and by their calling often bring the flying ones within shooting distance of the sportsmen, who lie in hidden pits near at hand.

Painted decoys, shaped like geese and made of steel, are also used by the hunters. In the latter case the men, from their hiding place in the pits, call the birds by using a goose call, a metal instrument like a flute, which mimics the sound of the goose with remarkable realism.—Philadelphia North American.

WRITING ON METALS.

By the Use of Wax and Acids Etchings May Easily Be Made.

Usually a man attempts to put his name on his metal possessions by scratching with a file or knife point and makes the poorest sort of a job. It is really very easy to write on any metal—the blade of a jackknife, a watchcase, skates—if one happens to know how, and the attractiveness of the inscription is limited only by the artistic ability of the individual.

Cover the place where you wish to write with a thin coating of melted beeswax. When the wax is cold write plainly with any pointed instrument, being particular to cut the letters through the wax to the metal.

Then mix one ounce of muriatic acid and one-half of an ounce of nitric acid, or smaller quantities in the same proportions (and remember that those acids are deadly poisons), and apply the mixture to the lettering with a feather, carefully filling each letter.

Allow the acids to remain from one to ten minutes, according as the etching is to be light or deep. Next dip the article in water, wash out the acids and melt off the wax, and the thing is done. A little oil should be applied as a finishing touch. Gold, silver, iron or steel can be marked in this way.—Youth's Companion.

Berthollet and Robespierre.

It is said that the celebrated savant Berthollet in the most dangerous times of the republic sustained his fearless love of truth. Some days prior to the ninth Thermidor a sandy deposit was found in a barrel of brandy intended for the army. The contractors, suspected of poisoning, were immediately arrested, and the scaffold was already prepared. Berthollet, however, examined the brandy and reported it free from all adulteration.

"You dare maintain," said Robespierre to him, "that that brandy does not contain poison?"

As his reply Berthollet drank off a glass, saying, "I never drank so much before."

"You have plenty of courage!" exclaimed Robespierre.

"I had more when I signed my report," replied the chemist, and here the matter terminated.

Seventh Century Needlework.

Before the end of the seventh century needlework was carried to great perfection in convents, where it was used for the establishment of the church and the decoration of priestly robes. Artists did not think it beneath their dignity to trace the patterns used for embroidery in their natural colors. A certain religious lady, wishing to embroider a sacerdotal vestment, asked no less a personage than St. Dunstan, then a young man, but already noted for his artistic skill and taste, to draw the flowers and figures, which she afterward worked in gold thread. —Exchange.

"Cut out 'with grief,'" was the reply.—Chicago News.

German Advance Accompanied By Terriffic Losses

By Stanley Washburn.

Dvinsk.—I have spent the past three days on this immediate front, where a terrific battle is raging with little interruption. When the attacks die away at one place they begin instantly at another.

The nearest front is twelve miles from this town, whose deserted streets resound with the detonations of heavy gun fire. I visited the positions of certain divisions stationed fifteen miles from Dvinsk and was as far forward as the field artillery shelling first the German positions and then their assaulting column. The rolling nature of the country made it difficult to see the details without going into the trenches, which was not permitted owing to their being swept by artillery and rifle fire.

The Russians are holding Dvinsk front in an excellent line of trenches three deep, and in spite of constant and and fierce attacks supported by heavy artillery concentration, they have thus far held the Germans off. Many times the first line has been taken by the Germans, then retaken by the Russian counter attacks. The Germans have twice or three times the Russian strength and have an enormous superiority in guns, as always, but in spite of these facts they have so far gained no decisive advantage, each attempt being paid for by them with heavy loss of life.

In front of one of our companies as a result of a single German attack there were left 150 dead, which typifies the fierce nature of the Russian defense.

After being three days in constant association with the atmosphere at the front, seeing many troops come from the fighting line to the reserve as well as some units in advanced positions, I found their morale unimpaired. In spite of the German reports, the Russians are fighting in the same stubborn, determined way which has characterized them at Warsaw and in all the other campaigns. The situation as regards the supply of ammunition and rifles has materially improved.

The fate of Dvinsk and the whole Dvina line is undecided. The lines of defence between the present front and the town are of such a nature that the capture of the city will represent heavy sacrifices to the Germans. In the meantime, the town has been evacuated in the same orderly manner as at Warsaw, and if the Russians ultimately leave it, the Germans will occupy the same empty shell as in their former victories.

The character of the Russian defense is improving visibly every week, and if the outside world is of the opinion that the Germans are driving this army before them, it makes a gross mistake. If the Riga and Dvinsk sectors which I have visited personally are typical of Russian rear guard operations, their nature is such as should cause more depression among Germans than among the faces of prisoners and wounded, of whim I have seen many in the past few days.

With winter approaching and no important objective attainable before the change of the season there is growing fear in the hearts of Germans as to the Russian venture, which I believe even the German commanders must now recognize.

CHAMBERLAIN RETURNS FROM OLD MANHATTAN

Last Wednesday Mr. Washburn invaded Coney Island, and while bathing in the surf near the Parkway baths heard cries for help from far out in the ocean. Mr. Washburn, being a strong swimmer, plunged in and was able to reach a young lady who had ventured out too far and was in danger of drowning, and was able to support her until the life guards could reach them.

The young lady thanked Mr. Washburn profusely and invited him to her home. His friends feel that a real romance has begun.

While in the city Mr. Washburn attended several lectures on municipal and civic training and he will incorporate the new ideas in his work here.

SPIRIT DESTROYS HIS HAPPY HOME

Muttered at the Sink Because Water Didn't Run Fast Enough to Suit Her, Says Exasperated Husband.

Detroit, Mich.—Twenty-two times in the last fifteen years Mrs. Helen Ward has packed her clothes, the family pictures and china and quit her job as the wife of John F. Ward, a middle-aged druggist and violin maker.

Twenty-one times John Ward laid aside his pestle and mortar or a partly finished violin, as the case might have been, and sought out his wife to plead until she returned and put back into their places the china and family portraits.

A few days ago, in a dingy back room of his drug store, with a partly finished violin across his knees, he told the story of how his home, his business and seven years of his life had been wrecked. "It was seven years ago," he said slowly, "that a woman entered my home with this spiritualism tomfoolery. I tried to stop it, but I was too late.

"Mother took it up and wouldn't drop it.

"She never had the best of a temper, But we got along fairly well until she was medium-stricken. After that—oh, well! temper is a weak word after all.

Spirits Bad-Tempered.

"The deeper mother got into spiritualism the uglier she became. She never seemed to get an amiable spirit. It wouldn't have been so bad if she had. I think it was either 'Black Hawk' or 'Red Eagle,' departed Indians, whose spirit possessed mother. I've seen her, when she had 'em, mutter at the sink because the water didn't run fast enough to suit her.

"When I protested she would fly into a rage, pack the china and family pictures and quit. Often it took two weeks to find her. When I did, sometimes she was sorry and ready to return. At other times she was ugly and I had to coax her.

"Once I thought she was nearly cured. A daughter by my first wife attended a seance. The next day she was possessed of the spirit of her departed mother. Her stepmother didn't like that a little bit and the powers she summoned from below or above made the other spirit retreat over the divide.

Smashed the Vases.

"Two or three years ago, when the tight skirt had its inning, mother made one. After she put it on she came downstairs, twisted herself before the mirror and said, 'How do you like it, John?'

"'It's all right, mother,' I answered, 'but put your foot on the chair.' She did, and then I said, 'You will make a display, mother, when you get on a street car.'

"That night when I went upstairs after closing the store, mother, her clothes, the pictures and the china were gone. I found out where she was, but she wouldn't return. She had placed the china and several hand-painted vases at a friend's, and I got a writ of replevin to get them back.

"When the officer went to serve the writ mother was there. What could he do with the spirit of Black Hawk backing mother that night?

"In addition to breaking up our home it has taken money to keep mother traveling with the spirits of redskins and doctors who died a hundred years ago.

"Mother has had to tip Caesar, Brutus and those other fellows who are conductors on the transcelestial trains, or maybe they're in the subways; I've forgotten, though mother told me once. I've paid the bills; I need money now, but—no, I don't believe that mother had a good time out of it."

AUBURN MAN MADE PLANS FOR HIS BURIAL

Patrolman and Mrs. Thomas Allnutt and Fireman Garnett returned yesterday from Auburn, where they had gone to attend the funeral of the fireman's cousin, Walter Burch Powell.

Mr. Powell was well known in Fulton, having visited here on many occasions. His death was not unexpected, as he had been suffering from an incurable disease for a number of years. Prior to his death Mr. Powell had completed all plans for his funeral, even to namink of the pallbearers. He chose six men from among fellow lodge members. Mr. Powell was a member of the Knights of Maccabees and every member of the lodge attended the funeral, marching in a body to the cemetery.

SYRACUSE WOMAN RETURNED HOME; WAS NOT THERE

Mrs. William Rassmussen, 47, of 223 Putnam st., Syracuse, who disappeared Sunday night after boarding a Dudley car in that city, was found last night. At the time of the disappearance it was thought by some of her relatives that she had come to visit her sister, Mrs. Emma Sawyer, of this city, or her half-sister, Mrs. Julia Roy, of Oswego, but telephone calls to both places failed to locate her. Mrs. Rassmussen has been ill for some time. To pacify a restless spirit, Mr. Rassmussen took her for a walk Sunday night and while downtown, his wife pleaded to board a street car. Thinking she had no money, Mr. Rassmussen offered no opposition. This was the last seen of the woman until she arrived home last night.

Miracle Alone Stands Between Phils, Red Sox and Big Series

New York.—Unless either or both teams now leading the two major leagues experience a decided slump in the last few days of the campaign, it seems very probable that the world's series this year will be played between the Boston Americans and the Philadelphia Nationals, thus reversing the program of last year, when the Boston Nationals and the Philadelphia Americans decided the world's baseball championship.

The Boston Americans, by winning from the Detroit Tigers again yesterday, took three of the four games of the series and now are four and one-half games ahead of the Tigers. The Red Sox now have sixteen games to play, while the Tigers have to play twelve. With the comfortable lead Carrigan's men now have they can afford to lose five of the sixteen games and still win the pennant, even should the Tigers win every one of their twelve games. Both will play comparatively weak teams for the remainder of the season.

Although the Philadelphia Nationals were unable to play yesterday on account of rain, Boston and Brooklyn, who are now tied for second place, failed to embrace the opportunity to gain on the leaders. The Phillies are now five games ahead, and the only hope of the Braves and Superbas is that they will be able to prevent the Phillies from increasing this margin until the pacemakers come east to play a four-game series with Boston and Brooklyn.

AN UNWELCOME INVITATION

By I. E. Hyde

The public press has asked us to laugh, and we put this quiz in our own behalf— "Does the press man wear a grin? Does his corner roar with a loud ha! ha? Does he sing from his heart a tra-la-la? If he does, I say its' a sin. Of course a woman can't cast her vote, no more will a coward throw, off his coat, and leap in the thick of the fray. But, we who laugh last will laugh out loud, we won't grin and snicker behind the crowd. 'Tis said—every dog has his day. We're tired of the mongrel that snarls at our heels. We're tired of the puppets as slippery as eels. Tired, tired of a mush and milk diet. We're tired of the men (?) who say, this, that, and so. We're tired of the men (?) who say, "Watch Fulton Grow." We've studied your phiz on the quiet. A leader we need just as true as of old, A leader who'll lead without greed, graft or gold. One boss is enough for a city. The fellow who's kicking is quite void of brain; he won't read and study, it gives him a pain. he stays where he's put—it's a pity. Miss Justice will come on the wings of the morn. And—by Heck! we'll get her as true as you're born. A babe always walks after creeping. So Braun; don't invite us to laugh any more; it's no joke, for truly, we feel very sore. But, we've planted good seed for a reaping. We're now paying taxes, it seems for our health. Of course, there's a few who are hoarding up wealth. But, that is their business, not mine. And this proposition to laugh makes me sick. I like jam on my bread if it's not spread too thick. "Am I one of the ninety and nine?"

The Interest That an Out of Town Newspaper Has in Your City is Manifested by Its Treatment of Local Conditions. Fulton's Intelligent Readers Have Been Insulted by a Pretending Paper

Stripped bare of all its pretences to truth, by the unqualified statements of every Fulton attorney who could be in any way identified wit' a suit against the City of Fulton, the fairy tales which have been printed in current issues of the Syracuse Herald anent a proposed action to compel the Fulton Common Council to rescind its acti · in calling off the special election which was to decide whether or not this city would adopt Commission form of government under Plan C, now stand forth in their true light, as falsehoods, pure and simple, concocted out of whole cloth by the correspondent of the Herald in this city.

According to the stories in question, which had their inception in an issue of the Herald last week, on the day following the meeting of the Common Council at which the election was declared off, four or five men, interested in the adoption of commission government here, were making plans to bring suit against the city of Fulton and would compel the council, by mandamus proceedings, to hold an election. The stories continued in the issue of Saturday, Sunday, Monday and Tuesday in the Herald, and since the majority of the readers of that daily knew no such action was probable, the principal interest aroused was speculation as to the means the correspondent would use to bring the bogue story to a close. Last night, the author of the fanciful history of the litigation, came out with the statement that a disagreement between the men who were about to bring the action had resulted in the abandonment of legal proceedings, and in comment in an adjoining column, the writer breathed sighs of relief for the citizens of Fulton who had so narrowly escaped such a dire catastrophe.

The thin veil of truth which covered the statements was raised this morning when a quiet investigation revealed the fact that no Fulton attorney had been engaged or had even been consulted in regard to bringing an action against the Common Council for calling off the election.

The statements of the Fulton attorneys directly repudiate the stories printed in the Herald. In last night's issue of the Herald the correspondent elaborated on the great dangers averted in the cancelling of the suit, and said a local attorney admitted that he had been engaged to bring the action, but that a disagreement among his clients was responsible for the halt in proceedings. The correspondent, obliged to make some statement which would give ground for belief that the suit story was not a product of his own invention, went on to say that the abandonment of proceedings now did not mean that the suit would never be brought, but credited the fictitious litigants with the statements that the suit would progress afer election, if candidates not pleasing to them were elected. This story has also been disproved by the local attorneys who plainly stated today that they have never been engaged in any such action. The majority of the attorneys further stated that there was no cause for action and that they would not be a party to it.

Every attorney in the city, with one exception (and this lawyer is not in a position to bring a suit against the city,) said he knew nothing of it, and many of them classed the Herald story as a bad dream.

Throughout the story printed in the Herald, neither the names of the so-called litigants nor of the attorney in question were used and this fact alone raised a question in the minds of the readers of the paper. Another fact which augurs ill for the truthfulness of the story, is that the representatives of two other local papers made a thorough search of the city recently in an effort to find anyone who was willing to admit, even privately, that he was connected with the suit.

Summing up, it is clear that the Herald writer is either the victim of a palpable hoax, or is laboring under the delusion that the people of this city are willing to swallow anything that he sees fit to hand out. It is safe to say that his opinions will change in the very near future.

Stranahan Offered to Have Faulty Paper Corrected—Emerick

In a story printed in last night's issue of The Evening Times it made to appear that the petition of Louis W. Emerick for alderman from the Fifth ward had been held up by men who were supposed to oppose his candidacy. The story mentioned no names, yet the inference remained obvious and Mr. Emerick this morning denied the rumor.

Mr. Emerick's statement follows:

"In view of the many misstatements that have been circulated in regard to my petition for the office of alderman in the Fifth ward, I desire to say that State Committeeman Myron A. Stranahan came to my residence and informed me that my petition was faulty; that he voluntarily offered to secure two good bona-fide Republican voters of the Fifth ward, and take them in his automobile to Oswego and have the error corrected in ample time to make my petition correct so as to be filed with the Commissioners of Election.

L. W. EMERICK."

The many friends of Ex-Sheriff Stranahan are rallying to his support and several of them were outspoken this morning in their sentiments regarding the misstatements which they claim have been made concerning the State Committeeman. The fact that some of the local papers, as well as an Oswego paper, through its correspondent here, have printed unfounded rumors regarding Mr. Stranahan's influence in this section of the county, has incensed many local Republicans, and to a reporter for The Times this morning, one of Mr. Stranahan's staunchest friends, whose word is to be credited at all times, said the majority of the stories in circulation have been concocted out of whole cloth by men who oppose Mr. Stranahan and his party for personal reasons.

MILLER'S WOES INCREASE AS DISCOVERIES MADE APPEAR AGAINST HIM

Merrit Miller, who was arrested in Martville Saturday night, charged with the larceny of a team of horses belonging to a liveryman of Adams, may be indicted in this county on charges of forgery, if he is not convicted for a long term on the larceny charge. Investigations following his arrest by the local police have resulted in disclosing the forging of three checks by the man in this city.

Under the name of Henry Hilts, Miller forged a check for $5.50 drawn in the name of Brace Stevens of this city, and collected the money through the First National bank. Two other checks, one drawn on the account of Grover Gilbert and the other on Miller's father, were drawn at the bank, when one of the employes detected a [illegible]cy in the signatures.

[illegible]tion to these offenses, Miller is under a suspended sen[illegible] year for the larceny of a motorcycle, the property of [illegible]. When arrested in Martville, Miller had another motorcycle in his possession which he claimed he purchased in Rochester. The police believe this is also a stolen machine. Miller has been arrested here several times on minor charges, but always managed to escape a long sentence, until he stole Mr. Dann's motorcycle last Spring. He was sentenced to imprisonment for one year at that time, but was paroled. The local police believe he will receive a long term for the Adams theft, and when he completes that term, he will also be obliged to serve the sentence suspended in this county.

MACCABEES GROW AT RAPID RATE

Forty Men Have Joined Tent In Twenty-Two Days—Two Meetings to Be Held This Week.

Fulton Tent of the Maccabees initiated a large class of candidates last night, making forty new members for the month of September. After the regular business of the organization was transacted, a social session and smoker was held, at which speeches were rendered by several of the officers of the lodge. Warren S. Gardner, school superintendent, addressed the Tent. Deputy Great Commander Perry also spoke. The meeting was adjourned until Saturday night of this week for the purpose of initiating another large class. Next Tuesday night more members will be taken in, and all members will be present at that time.

From [illegible] the [illegible] paign will at once be under way to popularize the organization, the plans including a series of social and athletic events. This afternoon, the Maccabee baseball team meets the nine of the Pathfinder organization at Athletic Field in what promises to be a stirring game. Considerable money has been placed on both teams and a large crowd of rooters will be on hand to "cheer the boys along." Carroll, who will pitch for the Pathfinder team, is said to have been practicing on a "spitter" all week. Snow, who will be on the mound for the Maccabees is depended upon, however, to have a few things up his sleeve. Tonight the Maccabee members will be host at a dinner in the Lewis house, with a large number of the Pathfinder club present. The Maccabees have issued a challenge to the Odd Fellows for a pool tournament, the challenge having been accepted. The committee in charge of the pool tournament consists of A. Z. Wolever, [illegible] and Ralph K. Seymour. [illegible]mour was chosen captain [illegible] ing team. A Maccabee [illegible] team is also being [illegible] play all winter in [illegible]

Capt. Norton's Injuries Result of Chase Given "Second-Story" Man

Although the police department is maintaining the greatest secrecy in regard to the case, it became known today that a second-story man was surprised at work in a residence on Rochester st. Sunday night, and escaped capture at the hands of Captain Norton and another officer by leaping from the roof of the porch to the ground. The officers chased the robber through several back yards, but he managed to escape.

In the chase, Captain Norton collided with a clothes-line, in the dark and sustained several cuts about the face.

According to the story of a neighbor, the occupants of the house in question were aroused shortly after midnight by a scraping noise at the window. The owner of the house immediately called the police by telephone, and Captain Norton and another officer responded. When the robber heard the police approaching he leaped from the roof of the porch in full view of the officers, and ran down Third st., with the police in pursuit. By dodging into back yards and leaping fences, the man escaped, but the police were able to get a good description of him, and Chief Dyer hopes to effect his arest in a few days.

Theories Demolished by Facts

No finespun academic theory of eco nomies can stand up before the facts of commerce. Therefore we find the Democratic opponents of the policy of Protective advocating some form of Protective legislation for the development of the dye industry in the United States.

Their arguments are undoubtedly sound. The war is acting as a Protective barrier against the importation of German dyestuffs, and we are suffering as a result. When the war is ended the German dye makers will unload their goods upon the market and we shall once more be dependent on the foreigners for an article needed in our domestic business. There are experts who can tell the Ways and Means Committee of the House exactly what degree of Protection is needed to encourage American manufacturers tom ake plans permanently to supply theh omem arket. The nation expects Congress to put its theories in cold storage while it faces thef gacts, takes the advice of the experts and passes laws dictated by common sense.—Philadelphia Evening Ledger.

The Farmer's Lot

News from the State Fair indicates that the number of automobiles entering the Fair Grounds outnumbered the horse drawn vehicles by about 25 to 1. This looks as though the horse had ceased to be them eans of locomotion for the ordinary farmer.

Ith as been said that there have been hard times during the past two years. If this is so, evidently the farmer has been unaffected by them; for an increase so great in the number of automobiles owned by those who attend a State Fair spells anything but hard times.

It is said that a farmer always finds something to grumble about. Usually it is the weather, for which it must be admitted, few compliments have been received. Kicks are legitimate so far as this summer is concerned. The wretched rain, which has fallen so abundantly may have changed the now prosperous farmer to one who will next season visit the fair on foot; but we are inclined to doubt it.

The only kick then, that the farmer can have about the number of automobiles that came and went through the gates at the State Fair is that the figures would seem to indicate him more prosperous than he actually is. Those who figure out that an automobile is the same as opulence should remembzer that to present day farmers, automobiles have become necessities, and the kind that most can afford are no more expensive than a good team of horses.

Farmers, though they own automobiles, are never rich; but in spite of this, and legitimate kicks against the weather, at many other times than when they ride to the State Fair, their lot is one much to be envied.—Auburn Citizen.

ANOTHER ORGANIZATION NEEDED

The Evening Times has been asked by a subscriber who is in sympathy with all that has been done during the past season for the improvement and beautification of the city, to call attention to a movement that has its origin in California—the city planning conference which was in session all of last week.

The subscriber in this instance advises that many men and women of the Pacific state have given much time and thought to the subject ofm aking towns desirable in all respects as places of residence—sanitary, conveniently arranged as to streets, parks, public buildings and as attractive in all respects as possible. In presenting Mr. Subscriber's views The Evening Times is merely repeating the thoughts of dozens of good citizens of this city of diversified opportunities who desire to see right here a real city beautiful—a city whose sidewalks shall not be bordered by huge overhanging burdock plants and other weeds that give an impression of a jungle. In this connection, another complainant appears who protests the overhanging weeds by suggesting, without mentioning names, that a number of his neighbors would like to see Fulton's burdocks used to fill war orders. While the accomplishment of this idea might prove impracticable, it is at least suggestive of the formation of a society whose main purpose would be to encourage improvements of all sorts and gradually establish a standard to which every house owner and house renter might conform without in any way becoming copyists one of another.

The idea of such a society might be to secure pleasing results. Everywhere now the movement toward beautifying and improving cities and towns, large and small, in a systematic and artistic way is growing, and Fulton need not become an exception to the near rule.

A Fulton beautiful does not mean an array of fine mansions. This city has hundreds of cottages of the simplest sort that are capable of improvement—that can be made picturesque and artistic and, as is frequently the case in other towns, more pleasing to the eye than costly and elaborate buildings. A Fulton beautiful does not mean expenditure of money but the exercise of taste, to be stimulated and encouraged by the organization and workings of a band of men and women who want to see clean vacant lots, clean public buildings, clean stores, sidewalks and streets.

Haphazard methods, if productive of results, are commendable, but the experience of the far western people who want their towns and cities to blossom as the rose, is that nothing succeeds like intelligent thought, hence their city beautiful work.

TOYS

The Man stood looking into the distance. The shawl that covered hiss houlders was a common cloak, common in those days. How strange it would look now.

The face of the Man was pale, and down through his cheeks sorrow had carved two deep-graven channels. When he would meet a child he would smile, and then these channels seemed to change to paths of tenderness.

The nation was looking to him for the end of it all. A child had asked this Man to buy its omes oldiers—toy soldiers. And the Man left the big house, waded through the wet with his low shoes, to a toy-shop. The request of that lisping little Lincoln was to be respected by the President.

Finally the Man found, at almost the end of the streeet, a German toy-maker—a wounded German soldier, making toys. A Russian bullet hadf ound a fighter, and drove the German patriot from the field. He had crossed the ocean to get relief from it all.

The Man saw on the counter, in that little German toy-shop, gray soldiers, blues oldiers, flags, cannon, infantry, cavalry, and all the trappings in tin and wood, all the schemes, in miniature, that go to murder.

Almost unconsciously the Man tried to place a ggeneral, a gaudy general, up front; but the toy soldier would not stand alone.

The German toy-maker had fought with Napoleon, and he said: "Here, try this little general. He will stand where you place him."

There was as udden light in the Man's sad eyes—a glance of understanding. He had found a general that would stand alone.

Months afterwards the Man returned to the same shop and impatiently asked fo[illegible] soldiers, an[illegible] cannon and all of the men on hand; he mus[illegible] to end it all. He had found the g[illegible] Th[illegible]

Massachusetts Tries Out Its New Method of Voting

Boston — Massachusetts tries out a new method of voting Tuesday, and the experiment is being watched by the country at large. It is the first trial of the new singleb allot arrangement, under which the names of the candidates of all parties are placed on one sheet. As in the case of every important change in the ballot, many mistakes are bound to happen, and the question of the extent to which ballots will be thrown out because of errors is one of the uncertain things on which the politicians cannot reckon in advance. That it will be easy to invalidate a ballot under the new arrangement is admitted, and it is equally certain that thousands of voters will go to the polls without the knowledge of the ballot necessary to avoid falling into error.

The method in recent years has been for the voter to make use of the ballot of the party he might designate, or with which he was enrolled; there need be no mistake if the voter will bear in mind that under the new plan the ballots of the various parties, which have heretofore been on separate sheets, are now printed together on one sheet of paper, but that he can make use of the section devoted to one party only. There can be no split ticket. If a voter wishes to vote for a republican candidate for governor, he may do so, but if he has other preferences to express on theb allot they too must be from among the republican candidates. To vote for one republican candidate and another on the democratic or progressive list means the invalidation of the ballot. If he votes for candidates of more than one party on the ballot he is in the same position as if he had attended the primary of more than one party. It will be an easy matter in these days of independent voting for a voter to make his marks along the lines of preference rather than party, and it is to counteract this tendency that strong efforts are being made by the secretary of the commonwealth and by the parties themselves.

The feature of the new law which provides for the abolition of the requirement that voters shall state their party preferences at the polls will meet withc ordial approval. This provision, which has kept many voters from the polls, owing to their unwillingness to be publicly labeled, has been the subject of strong criticism from the first.

ERA OF HIGH WAGES WILL FOLLOW WAR

Better Pay In Europe Will Restrict Immigration.

ECONOMICAL and industrial conditions abroad, after the war, the enforcement of the laws of many European countries forbidding emigration, and the prohibition in our laws against the admission of physical incompetents to the United States, are factors which, in the opinion of Secretary of Labor William B. Wilson, will result in the greatest reduction in immigration in decades.

The probabilities are, in the opinion of the secretary, that workmen will command higher wages and more respect from employers, and that foreign governments, because of the almost helpless condition in which the warring countries will find themselves—fields devastated, bridges and factories destroyed and industry at a standstill—will call for labor to restore and replenish.

The great demand for labor abroad, compelling the payment of higher wages than in years, and the lessening of the influx of laborers from foreign countries, will have the effect not only of increasing the activity in the United States, but of increasing wage scales.

Such is the opinion of the head of the United States' labor department, who bases this deduction on what happened both at home and abroad after the Franco-Prussian war.

"I do not look for a great rush in foreign immigration for several physical and psychological reasons," said Secretary Wilson.

"First.—Men are likely to have an unusually strong attachment for those places where they endured hardship and suffered. It seldom is the case that there has been a great immigration from countries that have been at war after the conflict except where they have been driven out.

"Second.—The labor situation abroad will offer so much to the laboring man as to make him satisfied with his lot at home. There will be the work of restoration in all countries, the greatest field of activity the world has ever seen. Workmen will be more respected and will command consideration.

"Third.—Immigration will be restricted by our laws. Millions of men who have been maimed or injured or contracted chronic illness as the result of the war will reduce the number of people available for admission to this country. The physically defective cannot be admitted, and this also will keep out their families and relatives, as the families will have no means of support and cannot come here for fear they will become paupers."

CALLS LAWSON INNOCENT.

Sentenced to Prison For Life Because He Was a Union Man, Gompers Says.

John Lawson has been found guilty of being an officer of organized labor and sentenced to a living death in connection with the death of a man of whose death he knew nothing. Why? Because somebody wants to get John Lawson out of the way. It is a familiar trick of hostile employers to undermine unionism by getting the leaders out of the way by allurement, discharge or jail—some way, any way. The coal barons of Colorado have been dominated by a man who would sacrifice all his investments in Colorado rather than recognize the new industrial situation which assures wage earners a voice in determining conditions under which they work. In relentless pursuance of this policy John Lawson became a marked man.—Samuel Gompers.

Liability For Accident.

The federal employers' liability law will not prevent the applicability of the New Jersey workmen's compensation act in a suit for contract labor entered into in New Jersey even though the accident happened in Pennsylvania. This was the decision of the supreme court sitting at Trenton in the compensation suit of George A. Rounsaville of Phillipsburg against the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey.

Rounsaville was injured while working as a brakeman in Pennsylvania. The trial court held the federal liability law prevented recovering damages under the New Jersey statute. The supreme court took a different view and reversed the trial judge's ruling.

Free Speech Stilled.

Theodore Schroeder, attorney for the Free Speech league, testifying before the industrial relations commission declared the courts had lost sight of "free speech" in its historical sense.

"A study of conditions throughout the world has shown me that we have more penalized opinions in this country today than any other country has had since the world began. By that I mean we have less conceded freedom of speech than any other country."

They have improved war methods almost beyond recognition, but the ancient type of general who burns his bridges behind him to "win or die" could probably get a job in the czar's outfit.

Mexico's complicated money trouble recalls the plowboy's remarks as to the "grub" the thrifty farm wife set before him—"good enough what there is of it" and "enough of it sich as it is."

JOHN L. SULLIVAN NOW A REFORMER

Ex-Champion Pugilist Exhorts Crowd to Quit Drink.

Asbury Park, N. J.—John L. Sullivan made his bow as a public lecturer on temperance the other day. With an old reputation as a great consumer of liquor, the stalwart ex-pugilist attracted a large audience, among whom were many gayly attired women.

With few gestures, but with a good deal of force, Sullivan said:

"Ladies and gentlemen and my friends, now you know I could never be but one person, and that is John L. Sullivan as he is at all times.

"I want to speak particularly to the young man. He will say: 'I know men that drink every day. They are wonderfully prosperous and healthy.' I say to the young man if you want to be prosperous and healthy do not drink at all. Take the young ball players. They are a stamp of men who do not drink any liquor. I was a money making machine, and my success depended upon my spirit and ability to hang fast.

"In all my career in the prize ring I never was knocked down. It was said Charley Mitchell knocked me down. That is not true. I slipped and was up and at it again in a second. I had managers and trainers because of my superior skill. Naturally it was for their benefit to keep me in the best physical shape so that I could fulfill my best effort, because if John L. played out their meal ticket was gone. But they were generally unsuccessful when they tried to stop me. They were afraid of me.

"But booze wasn't afraid of John L. Sullivan. It was a long time before I began to realize there could be but one finish. So I took a tumble to myself.

"Now, I want to tell you something from the book of experience of John L. Sullivan. The booze has more ways of hitting you than you have of dodging, no matter how successful an individual you may be."

A PEEP INTO SPACE

Can the Finite Mind of Man Measure the Universe?

THE LIMITS OF THE VISIBLE.

Science Says the Bounds of the Stellar System Are Definable and That the Universe Is as an Island of Stars In an Infinite Ocean of Ether.

To the visible universe there are attainable limits. It may be that the greatest telescopes have not yet reached the bottom, or the boundaries, of the entire system, but they have almost done so.

This is shown by the thinning out of the fainter stars. These stars, as a whole, are the most distant, and if they were unlimited numerically every increase in the penetrating power of telescopes would bring previously unseen ones into view, in proportionately undiminished numbers.

As a fact, however, there is a rapid falling off in the proportionate numbers at great distances. This is shown by Kapteyn's "law of star density." Taking the "parsec" as the unit of measurement (a parsec is equal to nineteen million million miles), the density of the stars at increasing distances comes out as follows: At 0 distance, 1.00; at 50 parsecs, 0.99; at 135 parsecs, 0.86; at 213 parsecs, 0.67; at 540 parsecs, 0.30; at 850 parsecs, 0.15.

This does not mean that the absolute number of stars decreases with increase of distance, but that the ratio of their number to the volume of space occupied decreases in the proportion shown, so that at a distance of 850 parsecs there are only 15 per cent as many stars as there should be if there had been no falling off in relative density.

Various counts and estimates of the actual numbers included within various limiting distances have been made, and these show that the total number of stars in the visible universe is numerable and probably does not exceed a thousand millions at an outside estimate.

The fact that a fairly definite shape or outline has been found for the visible universe is in itself a proof that it is not unlimited in extent. We are virtually certain that it expands around us in such a manner as to assume roughly the form of a flat, irregular disk, the more distant parts or edges of which lie in the plane of the Milky way. It is thus like a floating island of stars in the ocean of space.

Space itself may be infinite, although what we call the universe is not. As to other universes existing beyond the limits of ours and invisible to us, that is purely a speculation, which appears more or less probable according to the manner in which one's mind approaches it.

But, at any rate, there is no positive evidence of the existence of such outer star systems. From time to time one hears suggestions that this or that nebula is an "outside universe," dimly shining to us from its millions of crowded stars across immeasurable tracts of intervening space. But it is far more probable that no nebula or other object visible in the mightiest telescope is unconnected with the universe to which our sun and our earth belong.

As to the continuance of the Creator's work in forming new suns and new planets, of that there can be no question. This work is, in truth, visibly going on before us in the heavens. There is the utmost variety of ages among the stars, just as there is among the human beings in a crowd. If our lives were lengthened so that a year would be but as a second to us we should see the stars around us disappearing and new ones springing into existence, as we see flowers fading and fresh ones blooming in the garden.

To return for a moment to the question of the infinitude of space, it is well known that the human mind cannot conceive a limit to space, for the instant you attempt to fix or imagine such a limit your imagination flies beyond it. You have got to think of an outside as well as of an inside.

And if you fly to another imagined boundary instantly another outside expanse stretches away before you! It is, then, perfectly legitimate to suppose that, while the visible universe is limited, the invisible universe has no bounds. In comparison with that, all that we see, or can ever see, is, truly, infinitely less than as a grain of sand to a desert or a drop of water to an ocean.—Garrett P. Serviss in New York Journal.

Enough Knowledge.

"Did you ever stop to think," said the shopkeeper recently as he measured out half a peck of potatoes, "that these potatoes contain sugar, water and starch?"

"No, I didn't," replied the boy, "but I heard father say that you put peas and beans in your coffee, and about a pint of water in every quart of milk you sell."

INDIAN SUMMER.

The Term May Have Had Its Origin In the Far East.

The origin of the term "Indian summer," like that of the word "blizzard," has been the subject of much research. It has been traced back only as far as the latter part of the eighteenth century, and it did not become common until after the first decade of the nineteenth.

Many explanations of the name have been offered, all of which assume that the term "Indian" used in this connection refers to the American Indians.

A recent note in the Monthly Weather Review calls attention to a totally different use of this term, in which the reference is not to the American Indians, but to East India.

Under the British board of trade regulations one of the load lines marked on ships bears the initials "I. S.," this being the maximum depth to which vessels can be loaded for voyages during the "Indian summer"—i. e., the fine season in the Indian seas.

How long has the term "Indian summer" been used in this sense? It is not recorded in any dictionary nor apparently in any work on meteorology. Is it possible that our autumnal Indian summer was so named by sailors or travelers who saw in it a resemblance to the fine weather attending the northeast monsoon in India?

Astounding Memories.

Horace Vernet is the best example of visual memory. He could paint a striking portrait of a man, life size, after having once looked at his model. Mozart had a great musical memory. Having heard twice the "Miserere" in the Sistine chapel, he wrote down the full score of it. There are soloists who during twenty-four hours can play the composition of other masters without ever skipping a note.

Pike's Error.

Lieutenant Pike, whose name adorns a lofty peak, was once sent to build a fort near our Mexican (Texas) border. He slipped up on his geography so badly as to place the structure well within foreign territory. It has been believed by many that his orders made ample allowance for such an error.

Entertaining.

Willis—Did they have a good time at your reception last night? Gillis—Yes, the guests enjoyed it hugely. All my wife's arrangements went wrong. —Boston Journal.

The word "tomorrow" was invented for irresolute people and for children.—Turgenev.

THE FIRST TELEGRAM.

It Was Not the Famous Message Sent by Morse's Daughter.

Hidden away in the archives of the Tennessee Historical society at Nashville is the account of the first actual message ever sent over a telegraph line. That dispatch differs materially from the solemn message that passed over the wire between Washington and Baltimore in the year 1844. It illustrates well, however, the lack of seriousness with which Mr. Morse's invention was taken when he first offered it to the world.

According to the account preserved at Nashville, Hon. Robert L. Caruthers of Lebanon, Tenn., was a member of Congress in 1843, and a member of the committee to which was referred Mr. Morse's application for an appropriation to build a telegraph line from Washington to Baltimore. Most of the members of the committee looked upon Morse as a visionary, and his proposal as impracticable.

On the last day of the session Morse went to the committee room and told them that he had stretched a wire to the top of the capitol building and had a young man up there. If they would write a message he would send it up, and the young man would bring them a copy of it. None of them believed it could be done. Judge Caruthers, however, pulled the envelope of a letter out of his pocket and wrote a message. Mr. Morse, who had his instrument with him, sat down and sent the message. In a few minutes the young man walked into the room with an exact copy of the message. The committee reported favorably, and recommended the appropriation.

The bill passed just before the adjournment. Some one went to Mr. Morse's boarding house to inform him that the appropriation was made. The daughter of the landlady went to Mr. Morse's room, waked him and gave him the welcome news. He said to her, "My daughter, you shall send the first message that goes from Washington to Baltimore." That promise was fulfilled when she sent the famous message: "What hath God wrought!"

Judge Caruthers was an ardent Whig, and in 1843 the Whigs were very angry with President Tyler, whom they accused of betraying the party. The message that Judge Caruthers sent from the committee room to the young man at the top of the Capitol was, "Tyler deserves to be hanged."—Youth's Companion.

MERCHANTS MUST WORK WITH TRADES DIVISION TO MAKE STYLE WEEK

The Retail Trade Division of the Chamber through its officers sent the following letter to the merchants of the city:

The Retail Trade Division of the Chamber of Commerce, after consulting with several merchants in various lines have set September 28th, 29th and 30th as the time for a Fall Opening and Display. They urge all merchants in every line of business to cooperate in making these three display days a success by putting special effort on window decoration and by displaying inside the stores more goods than are ordinarily on exhibit.

The purpose of this display is two-fold: (1) to convince the doubter, the man or woman who buys out of town, that he or she can get both quality and variety here in Fulton; (2) to advertise Fulton's advantages as a shopping district to residents in the surrounding country. For these reasons we hope that in your advertising during the next week you will make frequent mention of this display week and of your intention to take part in it.

Some of the merchants wish to display their goods on one evening during the week, and Tuesday evening, September 28th, has accordingly been suggested by the Division.

This is in no way an attempt to force merchants who do not believe in such displays to take part in them, it is merely an effort to secure the cooperation of all the merchants, to the end that the City may be made especially attractive in window displays during these days, and that the buying public may be induced to patronize our local merchants for whatever they need. The Retail Trade Division believes in the merchants of Fulton,—believes that they have both quality and variety in their stores. They want to make these facts known to the buying public. Will you help yourself and your neighbors to make this first general Fall Opening a success?

THE RETAIL TRADE DIVISION,

R. L. McCully, Chairman; D. L. Lipsky, Vice Chairman; Wm McCormick, Secretary.

Already a large number of them have announced their intention to take part in the display. The success of the movement, however, depends upon the participation and cooperation of all the merchants.

POWER MAN BRINGS LUMBERMAN TO LOOK AT SULPHITE PLANT

George Coffing Warner, of the Fulton Light, Heat and Power company, arrived from New York city early today, accompanied by several representatives of Adirondack lumber interests who will inspect the plant of the Battle Island Pulp company with a view to purchasing the plant and resuming operations there.

Mr. Warner would not divulge the names of the men interested, but said he hoped to see the plant in operation in the near future. The men made a thorough inspection of the plant.

Due in a great measure to Mr. Warner's indefatigable efforts, this city has become one of the most widely exploited manufacturing sites in the east, and the Fulton power company is in receipt of many communications from interested manufacturers in regard to sites and power here.

In speaking of the business activity here, Mr. Warner said this morning that he advocated the institution of a trust company in Fulton, under the laws of the state, so that the local merchants and manufacturers would be enabled to borrow money more freely for industrial expansion. He also spoke of the advisability of a savings and loan association here, similar to the building and loan companies in operation in other states.

TROWBRIDGE PLEADS GUILTY TO CHARGE

Pulaski.—Shortly after court had opened yesterday morning, James Trowbridge, whose case was on trial, decided to withdraw his former plea and entered a plea of guilty to the charge of excise violation. He will be sentenced on Monday. This left no case for trial, the next case, that of Daniel Buckley of Fulton, also charged with an excise violation, being on the calendar for Thursday. Court was adjourned until the afternoon at 2:30 at which time it was further adjourned until this morning when the civil case of Serles vs. Larraway is on thec alendar.

Michael McMahon of Oswego, indicted as a common gambler, withdrew his former plea of not guilty and pleaded guilty to the indictment. Another defendant to make a similar plea was James Signorelli, also of that city, held under an indictment charging him with a violation of the liquor tax law. Sentence in each case was deferred until next Monday.

DR. WHITAKER TOLD OF LECTURE

Heard Noted Surgeon Tell of How He Made Sanitary Havana and Canal Zone.

At Monday's meeting of the Borrowed Time Club Dr. G. G. Whitaker made a naddress covering much that he heard and learned at the International Health Conference held in Rochester last week.

The Doctor said that one idea advanced at the conference was the establishment of community health work upon a firmer basis. He was also greatly interested in an address made by General Gorgas who was Chief Sanitary Officer of the Panama Canal Zone. The General told how he had accomplished the eradication of yellow fever in Havana and how the Canal one became habitable, as the result of the discovery made that the fever was induced by mosquito bites. The General's next move was to eliminate the mosquito and this was done by draining all swamps and spreading on the surface of the ground kerosene oil, the oil aoting as poison to the pests.

Dr. Whitaker's address held the close attention of the club members who felt proud that one of their number had been an attendant at the Conference.

Secretary H. N. Gilbert read a com munication written by Mr. G. D. Granis of Syracuse, an honorary member, who reported the recent celebration of his 89th birthday. Mr. Granis had as his guests seven men whose aggregate ages totalled 650 years. The guests at the celebration had the pleasure of partaking of the largest cake ever baked in Syracuse.

ATTORNEY SPANGLE GETS DISCHARGE AS RECEIVER

Utica—The report of Floyd S. Spangle, receiver of Abram Aroneck, bankrupt, has been approved by United States Judge Ray, and the receiver has been discharged with an allowance of $36 for his services. He conducted the business and took in $249, and sold other property for $425. The expenses were $221. No creditor objected to the report. The appraisers were allowed $6 each, as follows: William Cook, Samuel Waldhorn and Robert Pendergast.

Moore, Shulman & Bamerick, attorneys for the receiver, of Syracuse, were granted $125.

Indorsed by Leading Men

The proposed Constitution goes before the people for their consideration with all the prestige involved in the indorsement of the most distinguished men of the state, regardless of party lines. A statement sent out bearing the names of Joseph H. Choate, Charles Andrews, Andrew D. White, D-Cady Herrick, Alton B. Parker, Adelbert Moot, David Jayne Hill, Thomas B. Dunn, William Nottingham, Nicholas Murray Butler, William A. Prendergast, Rrancis Lynde Stetson, and others almost as well known, announces that an independent committee "for a campaign of education in favor of adopting the new Constitution" has bee organized. All citizens "who will aid in a systematic effort to spread full information as to the character and provisions" of the document are urged to send their names to Robert S. Binkerd, secretary, 23 Washington avenue, Albany. No doubt there are many persons in Rochester who would be glad to assist in the work by joining in the movement to enlighten the electors regarding all of the points which may cocme under discussion in the course of the campaign.—Rochester Chronicle-Democrat.

LOAN TO ALLIES MAY BE CLOSED DURING THE WEEK

New ork—Bankers last night declared that with the exception of two comparatively minor questions all the details of the proposed loan of hundreds of millions of dollars by American banking institutions and investors to the governments of Great Britain and France had been agreed upon.

Within the next two days, certainly before the end of the week, they added, the Franco-British Credit and Finance Commission would be in a position to place a definite proposition before the bankers of thisc ountry and formal negotiations would then be opened.

Meanwhile, it was said, letters had been written to more than 30,000 banks and trust companies in all parts of the United States, sounding them on their attitude toward the contemplated transaction, with an idea of ascertaining the probable amount for which each would be likely to subscribe.

The character of the problems that remain unsolved could not be ascertained either from the commission or from the bankers. In view, however, of the positive statements that the amount of the proposed loan, the rate of interest, the maturity and the offering prices virtually had been decided it was taken for granted the questions could not be vital.

In some quarters it was intimated one of them might have to do with the proposed conversion privilege to be attached to the bonds issued, under the loan agreement. On all sides it was declared the disposition of the funds was not involved. The hitch over the subject of munitions had been straightened out. With conditions in the markets for exchange on London and Paris restored to normal, enabling the purchase of commodities to proceed unhampered, the settlement of bills for munitions of war could easily be arranged.

The oneg reat question in the financial district was the attitude of the German-American houses toward the loan. So far as the firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. was concerned, it was known the sympathies of two of the more important members were with the Allies and it was believed they individually would be found among the subscribers to the loan when it is issued. On the other hand it was learned one of the members of the firm had been a heavy subscriber to the new German loan now being offered here.

VENTON ON HIS GOOD BEHAVIOR

John Venton, of West Fourth st., who attempted to interrupt a meeting of the Salvation Army Monday night, while under the influence of liquor, was given a suspended sentence of thirty days by Judge Wilson in City Court this morning. Venton made a heart felt promise to mend his ways, and left the court room to go to a farm outside the city where he has promised to stay and work.

Venton interrupted the meeting while Ensign Fitzgerald of the Army was leading in prayer, and after Officer Smith had arested him he abused the officer almost every step of the way to the Police Station. In court yesterday, when first arraigned, Venton attempted to prove that he was not intoxicated, and said Officer Smith arrested him because of a private grudge. The officer's story, however, convinced the Judge that Venton had been given every opportunity to go home without molestation, and he was remanded to a cell pending sentence. After considering that Venton is the only support of his aged mother, Judge Wilson decided that a fine or imprisonment would only work hardship for her, and Venton was given another chance.

EACH VOTER GETS COPY OF CONSTITUTION

By handling the copies to voters personally instead of mailing them, $50,000 will be saved, Secretary of State Francis M. Hugo estimates.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Difference Between Amusing and Convincing

Author of "Do Something! Be Something!"

AN ADVERTISER must realize that there is a vast difference between amusing people and convincing them. It does not pay to be "smart" at the line rate of the average first-class paper. I suppose that I could draw the attention of everybody on the street by painting half of my face red and donning a suit of motley. I might have a sincere purpose in wishing to attract the crowd, but I would be deluding myself if I mistook the nature of their attention.

The new advertiser is especially prone to misjudge between amusing and convincing copy. A humorous picture may catch the eye of every reader, but it won't pay as well as an illustration of some piece of merchandise which will strike the eye of every buyer. Merchants secure varying results from the same advertising space. The publisher delivers to each the same quality of readers, but the advertiser who plants flippancy in the minds of the community won't attain the benefit that is secured by the merchant who imprints clinching arguments there.

Always remember that the advertising sections of newspapers are no different than farming lands. And it is as preposterous to hold the publisher responsible for the outcome of unintelligent copy as it would be unjust to blame the soil for bad seed and poor culture. Every advertiser gets exactly the same number of readers from a publisher and the same readers—after that it's up to him—the results fluctuate in accordance with the intelligence and the pulling power of the copy which is inserted.

(Copyright.)

A Dollar That Can't Be Spent

By HERBERT KAUFMAN

Author of "Do Something! Be Something!"

EVERY dollar spent in advertising is not only a seed dollar which produces a profit for the merchant, but is actually retained by him even after he has paid it to the publisher.

Advertising creates a good will equal to the cost of the publicity.

Advertising really costs nothing. While it uses funds it does not use them up. It helps the founder of a business to grow rich and then keeps his business alive after his death.

It eliminates the personal equation. It perpetuates confidence in the store and makes it possible for a merchant to withdraw from business without having the profits of the business withdrawn from him. It changes a name to an institution—an institution which will survive its builder.

It is really an insurance policy which costs nothing—pays a premium each year instead of calling for one and renders it possible to change the entire personnel of a business without disturbing its prosperity.

Advertising renders the business stronger than the man—independent of his presence. It permanentizes systems of merchandising, the track of which is left for others to follow.

A business which is not advertised must rely upon the personality of its proprietor, and personality in business is a decreasing factor. The public does not want to know the man who owns the store—it isn't interested in him but in his goods. When an unadvertised business is sold it is only worth as much as its stock of goods and its fixtures. There is no good will to be paid for—it does not exist—it has not been created. The name over the door means nothing except to the limited stream of people from the immediate neighborhood, any of whom could tell you more about some store ten miles away which has regularly delivered its shop news to their homes.

It is as shortsighted for a man to build a business which dies with his death or ceases with his inaction, as it is unfair for him not to provide for the continuance of its income to his family.

SYNOPSIS

Old Cyrus Martin, the head of the American soap trust, makes a bet of $30,000 with a friend, John Clark, a rival soapmaker, that his (Martin's) son Rodney would be making more money at the end of a year than Clark's son Ellery.

Martin takes his pretty secretary, Mary Grayson, into his confidence and enlists her co-operation. Rodney has been a spendthrift, and the father wants to make him reform and go to work.

Mary meets Rodney, and the son proposes marriage to her. Rodney tells his father about his proposal, and the old man pretends great anger. He tells Mary he will disinherit Rodney.

Rodney defies his father, and Mary is deeply touched at the lad's genuine affection for her. Mary makes a financial bargain with Martin to encourage the son to go to work.

Ambrose Peale, press agent, meets Rodney and agrees to go into business with the lad on a salary basis. Rodney has resolved to go into the soap industry and buck the trust.

Rodney, Peale and Mary go into the soap trade together. Rodney then endeavors to borrow $10,000 as capital for his newly formed company.

The offices of the "13 Soap company" are opened, and they advertise it as "the most expensive soap in the world." Peale talks advertising continually.

The 13 Soap company finds its expenses very heavy, and financial rocks loom ahead. Their chief business seems to have been to spend money for advertising under Peale's directions.

An alleged countess, who has appeared on the scene, desires to purchase the French rights for the sale of "13 Soap" and produces a draft for $20,000, which she desires to have cashed.

The "countess" is shown to be an impostor and despair settles over the 13 Soap company. The firm introduces her, however, to Ellery Clark. Father Martin visits the offices.

"This idea of mine is an automobile proposition. I really need $10,000, and I've only got $2,500."

At the mention of this latter sum Rodney and Peale walked over to Ellery at once and stood one on each side of him like a state coat-of-arms. Money! They took a good look at him.

"Ellery, why do you want to go into the automobile business?" began Rodney genially. "It's dangerous—unsafe"—

"The risk's tremendous," Peale corroborated.

"Ellery, our families are old friends," said Rodney. "Now, if you really want to show your father you're a money maker why don't you buy some shares in our company?"

"I don't care much about the idea of being in the soap business," Ellery protested; "rather vulgar."

"But you don't have to be in the business," said Rodney eagerly.

"Absolutely not," said Peale.

"It's a very simple proposition," Rodney began again. "All you do is invest and then sit still and deposit your checks when we pay dividends."

"I say, that sounds a bit better," Ellery agreed.

"We're not letting the general public in," Rodney explained. "But it would be such a joke on your father for you to make money."

"Yes, wouldn't it?" said Ellery, with a vacuous laugh.

"I fancy he'd be mighty glad I had sense enough to go in with you," added Ellery. "But is it a safe investment?"

"Why, we'd guarantee you against loss, wouldn't we, Peale?" said Rodney.

"Absolutely," said Peale, with a strong accent on the "loot."

CHAPTER X.
A Setback.

"YES, here's a statement," Peale went on to Ellery, taking his pink version of Mary's statement off its file.

"Twenty-two thousand eight hundred and eighteen dollars," Ellery read off from it, holding it in his gloved hand.

"And nine cents," added Peale.

"That sounds rather ripping," Ellery admitted. "Should I have to do any work?"

"You work? I should say not," said Peale.

"Of course," added Rodney, "before I can promise to let you in Mr. Peale would have to agree."

"Do you agree?" asked Ellery, addressing Peale for the first time.

"Oh, yes, I agree—I agree!" said Peale perhaps a shade too quickly.

"Now, what do you say, Ellery?" asked Rodney, trying not to appear too anxious.

"I'll do it," he said at last.

"God's in his heaven. All's right with the world," chanted Peale.

"Have you the money with you?" asked Rodney, his heart beating.

"Why, no," said Ellery, opening his eyes.

"Then you'll send us a check today?" put in Peale.

But Ellery wouldn't get the money until next week, it seemed. His father hadn't promised it till next Monday. He couldn't ask him for it now, you see. Ellery was afraid he couldn't really. His father was out of town.

"But we can't agree to hold the matter open until next Monday," said Rodney firmly.

"No, not till way next Monday," Peale agreed. "Why don't you telephone him?"

Yes, that wouldn't be so distressing, Ellery thought. If he could get him it would be considerably easier to talk to him on the phone. He could always ring off then.

"Come this way, then. It'll be quieter for you if he's noisy," said Peale eagerly, leading him to a booth. "Never mind the social chatter," he added as Mary came in and Ellery stopped to talk with her. "Ellery, you don't mind my calling you Ellery, do you, Ellery? You see, Ellery has work to do," he went on for Mary's benefit.

"It's very pleasing to find you both so beastly charming to me," said Ellery.

And that was a model son, thought Peale. Thank God he was a black sheep himself. That was always the way with money; it was never in the right hands.

Meanwhile there was still another chance, for Mary informed him that the countess' boat had docked three hours ago.

"Oh, you little life saver."

"Oh, Rodney, by the way," she asked, "did you find out how Ellery's doing?"

"He's doing great," said Rodney. "Hasn't made a cent. Wanted to borrow some money from me."

"Your father would be glad to hear that," she laughed.

"Where is our wandering countess?" sang Peale just as Miss Burke came in and announced:

"The Countess de Bowreen."

"By golly, she's entering on the cue," said Peale joyfully.

"We're safe now," said Rodney.

"Oh, I do hope so," sighed Mary.

Money!

It took some maneuvering to manage the coming countess with her $10,000 and Ellery with his prospective $2,500. They needed either or both of them to cover up that $2,500 they had handed to Jones. Mary and Rodney dared not think what would happen if new capital could not be obtained in time.

Then just as the countess was about to be shown in the capable Ellery stuck his head in the door and vowed he could not manage the telephone; he never had run a switchboard; he was not good at mechanical problems. Mary was told off to ring up his father for him, and Peale called after her to hold his hand or kiss him—anything to leave the floor clear for the countess. Needless to say, the kiss was not suggested by Rodney.

Rodney ran to a window and pulled down a shade on which was blazoned:

SAVON TREIZE
PAS BON POUR
LE SAL

He turned round to greet her full of hope. He was sure he could understand anything she said about money. He would leave to Ambrose the pleasant sensation of spending it on advertising.

When she finally swept in he met her with a delighted air and kissed her hand, which was the way in which he had conceived the part. He also said bon jour, twice, and pointed to the shade that bore the French advertisement. Rodney could make out also that she inquired if they had received her letter? Peale had been listening intently and couldn't keep still.

"Oh, you little life saver," he chirped.

He, too, kissed her hand, on Rodney's telling him it was French stuff. She looked like money, Ambrose thought. She must have it.

"Ask her, ask her!" he whispered to Rodney.

"Have you the money?" Rodney asked her nervously, thus enjoined.

"Eh?" said the countess.

"Come on, kid, say yes, say yes," whispered Peale, snapping his fingers.

"Vous avez l'argent?" Rodney began.

"Oui, oui, j'ai de l'argent," said the countess.

"What does she say?" asked Peale anxiously.

"She says yes," interpreted Rodney.

Peale gave a suppressed squeal of delight.

"The money with you?" Rodney asked again.

"Draft for $20,000," Rodney interpreted swiftly.

"Slip it to me, kid; slip it to me. I'm dying on my feet," cried Peale, as the Countess jabbered.

Rodney explained now that she wanted to send the draft to the bank to get it cashed; that she was not known there, and that she would give them their $15,000.

"I'll make a world's record getting it cashed," said Peale, and reached greedily for the check. The countess pulled it back, however, in surprise, and only gave it up again when Rodney explained that his manager was going over to the bank. Peale grabbed it, then paused dramatically.

"Say, wait a minute," he whispered hoarsely.

"What is it?" asked Rodney.

"Why don't we stall the countess off?" suggested Peale.

"What for?" asked Rodney.

"Why, borrow the money from her and keep the whole $20,000 for a couple of days. Get me?"

What followed this speech gave Ambrose Peale one of the biggest surprises of his life. The countess had been watching the conversation eagerly, like a bird, turning her head quickly from Peale to Rodney as they spoke and looking very innocent and chic. Upon the finale of Peale's scheme to "borrow" her money she broke out into perfectly good American.

"Why, you cheap grafter!" she cried indignantly, with a real Bowery accent.

"She spoke English!" cried Rodney, and the countess suddenly covered her mouth with her hand, realizing for the first time that she had given herself away.

"Suffering cats! She's a fake!" Rodney added.

The countess agreed, shrugging her shoulders.

"So is the draft. Gee, you were easy!"

"Well, you're frank anyhow," Rodney said to her.

"Three fakes. I'll keep mum if you do."

"Why not? It's all cold now."

"What was the game, kid?" Peale asked her, taking a professional interest.

"I was going to trim you for the $5,000 change from that draft," said the countess.

THE CORRECT JUVENILE.

A Serviceable Suit For School and Athletics.

IDEAL FOR SPORTS.

Corduroy, covert or serge will develop well this practical suit for the outdoor girl. Strong bone buttons, belt and sensible pockets are its only garnishings. Please note how every accessory—boots, gloves, tie and hat—carries out the idea.

Proper Lighting.

Add immensely to the attractiveness of your home by diffusing the lights instead of focusing them on one point. Eye strain will be relieved and shadows and outlines will be softened, especially when amber lights are used. The new indirect lighting fixtures are replacing old fashioned ones, making the lighting problem more artistic and less expensive.

Much the same effect may be produced with less expense by frosted bulbs and globes, gelatin films and glass diffusing plates. There are various types of this indirect lighting suitable for all rooms, from the kitchen to the parlor, and it is to be recommended as a blessing to the busy eyes and the tense nerves of today.

Overheard In the Hall.

"You all think yourselves really more than you really are!" exclaimed the riding whip, which was hanging on the top peg of the hatrack. "If I had a mind to I could whip the whole crowd of you, and I'll do it, too, if I hear any more boasting."

HIS FRIEND THE RAT.

The Mine Disaster Story That Went With a Stuffed Rodent.

Any man who will keep a stuffed rat in his room wherever he goes must have a story to tell about the rat. This man has.

"This story," he said, "concerns an experience that made my hair curl. I am an engineer. I was once retained to report upon the working of a mine in southern Arizona. The mine was called the Barbara. On an adjoining claim was another mine called the Hyperion. A dispute arose. The Hyperion people claimed that the lower levels of the Barbara had been bored into their ground and half a dozen fortunes in ore taken out of their mine.

"The first thing to do was to make a survey of the Barbara. The Barbara people, of course, objected. Finally, an order for the survey was secured from the court, and I was sent, with a man named Jim Banks, to make the survey.

"There are tricks in all trades, and the Barbara representative knew a few in his. When we reached the mine he said that the tunnel we wished to explore was in a dangerous condition. There had been a cave-in, the timbers were rotted, and so on.

"We classed him as a liar, though he turned out to be right. We worked our way into the tunnel until we ran against a jam of fallen timbers. The timbers, however, were sound and had plainly been arranged to stop our progress. Banks went back for an ax, while I worked at the roof with a pick to dislodge the center pieces.

"I succeeded and had climbed halfway over into the other side of the tunnel when there came a terrific crash of loose ore from the roof. It fell on both sides of the timbers, pinning me in a hole which would have been a grave but for a few sticks which held the mass of ore above.

"The place was barely large enough to move in, and I knew it was certain death in a few hours unless Banks could dig me out.

"The foul air was getting into my brain, and I think I was actually insane with the fearful dread of being buried alive.

"I had given up all hope and was almost swooning when I heard a strange, scraping sound above me. I yelled, but received no answer. With new energy I threw my body against the walls and tried to pick out the ore from between the lodged timbers. Still came the queer scraping noise, which seemed to come nearer and sounded not unlike the steady grinding of a saw. It seemed to last for hours, though it could hardly have been a minute after when a bit of earth dropped to my feet from the upper end of the wall, and along with it came a big gray mountain rat.

"That rat saved my life, for he left a clear hole for his trail, and through it came a breath of fresh air that gave life to me. The fellow had bored his way through from the shaft side of the cave. I stayed there two hours after that, until Banks found the cave, got help and dug me out without breaking the airhole.

"I caught the gray rat too. I kept him fed up like a king until he died, and I wouldn't take a lot of money for his skin now."—New York Times.

RAVEN BLUE SERGE MATERNITY SKIRT.

Simple and graceful in design is this three-piece maternity skirt, suitable to development in serge, ratine or voile. The extension at the top provides for lengthening.

This three-piece maternity skirt is so simple in design that it can be made at a minimum of expense and trouble. And, withal, it is graceful in design, being gathered about the waist and finished with a deep hem which gives balance to the folds. There is an extension top which allows for lengthening.

In medium size the skirt requires 2⅝ yards to develop. Of course separate bands of silk or velvet may be added, but this is about all of the trimming that is permissible.

The only way to avoid errors in cutting, with resultant waste of material, is to lay the pattern on the material as illustrated on the cutting guide. It will be noticed that the front gore of the skirt, indicated by the letter "A," is marked by triple "TTT" perforations. This means that this gore should be laid along a lengthwise fold of the goods to avoid an extra seam.

The back gore is perforated with the letter "B," and this is placed on a lengthwise thread of the goods. The triangular space between the front and back gores provides space for the piecing, which is added to the front to give further flare to the sides of the skirt.

The most inexperienced seamstress will find this skirt within her capabilities. It is made simply by joining the gores as notched, then closing the back seam from large "O" perforation to lower edge and finishing the edges above for placket.

A casing about ½ inch wide should be adjusted to position underneath the skirt so that an elastic can be inserted.

The hem may be turned under or a facing, turned backward to form an ornamental fold, may be used.

Napoleon's Temper.

A story is told of a sudden rage into which Napoleon I. fell one day as he was at dinner. He had scarcely partaken of a mouthful when apparently some inopportune thought or recollection stung his brain to madness, and, receding from the table without rising from his chair—his small stature permitted that—he uplifted his foot—dash went the table, crash went the dinner, and the emperor sprang up, intending to pace the room. Quick as a flash his waiter scratched a few magic symbols on a bit of paper, and the emperor's check had grown more than double. Napoleon appreciated the delicacy of his attendant and said, "Thank you, my dear Dunand," with one of his inimitable smiles. The hurricane had blown over.

Facial Foliage.

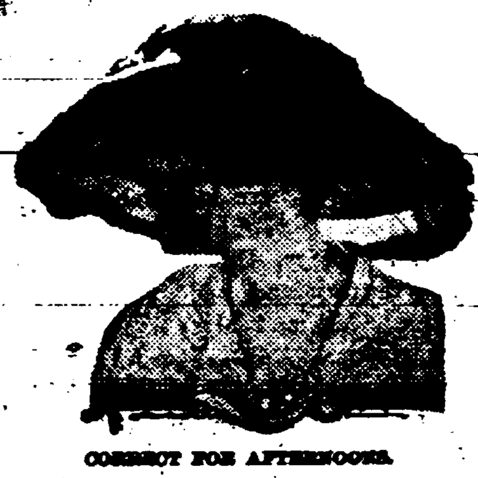
A CHARMING HAT.

One That Admirably Fits In Between Seasons.



CORRECT FOR AFTERNOONS.

With all the gauzy coolness demanded by warm weather, this hat nevertheless suggests fall with its fur edged brim and bright colored flower on the front of the crown. It is both elegant and simple.

Concerning Women on Juries.

"Do women have to sit on juries if they vote?" Dr. Anna Howard Shaw, president of the National American Woman Suffrage association, was recently asked:

"Not necessarily," said Dr. Shaw; "but I have seen a lot of juries which needed to have some one sit on them, and I have known women who have had to stand up at most difficult and disagreeable employments who would be glad to sit on juries and receive about double the price they can get by standing. And these men and women who prey upon the virtue of girlhood and boyhood would rather face Satan himself than a jury of mothers. Yes, we need women on some juries."

Activities of Women.

Philadelphia has a woman barber who has a lucrative business.

The British war department now recognizes women to the extent of giving them rank as noncommissioned officers in the army.

Women have so far supplanted men in some of the large industries of Germany that there are now 7,000 doing the ordinary work of their husbands and brothers. Out of this total 6,000 are in the iron works and have to do work customarily considered too heavy for women.

One Cent an Hour For Women.

Wages at the rate of a ½ penny or 1 cent an hour are paid to many women workers in the Belfast linen factories, according to a statement made by Miss M. Galway of the Textile Operatives' Society of Ireland. One cent an hour, she says, is paid to women who clip the threads of machine embroidered cushion covers.

YOUR CARES.

We brought no cares into this world, and naked of cares we shall leave it. Therefore to hug them here is foolish.

HOW THE HOUSEWIFE MAY SAVE ON HER GAS BILL.

The average housewife spends four times the amount of gas for cooking a meal than is necessary and at the same time positively injures food values and quality of the article she is cooking. To get the greatest amount of heat units from a gas range the flame should not be turned any higher than will give a perfect blue flame. When the flame becomes a yellowish red you are wasting gas and getting a heat that not only smokes and smudges your kitchen utensils, but decreases their longevity to one-half.

The flame should be about one-half inch of clear blue, and after the article you are cooking has come to a boiling point reduce it to a point that will just keep it boiling. This is equally true in the oven. Invariably the gas is turned too high for baking and the bread or cake is burned. This also means waste of gas and a constant anxiety about the oven, which would not be necessary if gas were used at a lower temperature.

HOUSECLEANING HINT.

How the Modern Housewife Has Revolutionized Her Methods.

Modern methods have at last revolutionized housecleaning. As quickly as closets are cleaned and blankets laundered the vacuum cleaner wagon drives up to the door, the dust and air hose are rushed through convenient windows, and the fray is on.

Every speck of dust is literally sucked from the house. All upholstery to the last button receives attention. Draperies, curtains, rugs and mattresses are gone over, and pillows after being cleaned seem double their usual size and are as light and fluffy as when they were new.

This whirlwind cleaning takes but a few hours and is conducted by competent men, whose business it is. They rapidly detach and attach the various hose nozzles for different branches of the work. While this is going on windows are being washed, brasses polished, bric-a-brac is being cleaned, floor polished, and as fast as a room is finished it is set to rights. In a wonderfully short time it is all over and at a surprisingly small cost.

By dinner time everything has assumed its normal appearance minus the pile of dust and dirt the men have carried away in their wagon. And the man of the house has not only escaped all discomfort, but in most cases does not realize that anything has happened during his absence. Our grandmothers might look with suspicion on this kind of housecleaning, doubting its thoroughness, but we know that from every point of view it is far more thorough and sanitary than their more laborious methods.

One secret of this present day housecleaning is the general use of rugs in place of the old fashioned heavy carpets and the daily use of modern cleaning appliances. These special wall brushes, stair brushes, dustless dusters that polish as they go, dustless mops, waxed floor polishers and the improvements in all branches of housework keep the home always clean.

The pantries and kitchen receive their weekly cleaning much as in the olden days. Here, perhaps, science has done less to reduce labor than in other parts of the house, for as long as we use dishes they must be washed, silver must be polished and glassware cleaned carefully and perfectly. And until fashion supplies and encourages the use of table fittings that may be destroyed after each meal the dishpan must be reckoned with in the round of each day's duties.

The housekeeper who would keep up to date should make a tour frequently of the large household shops or departments in the larger stores and get acquainted with the many conveniences offered for her consideration. She should acquire the time saving devices that make for efficiency in the kitchen, just as a man seeks for efficient office and shop devices.

How to Use Burlap Upon Your Walls Artistically.

One advantage of a good burlap is that it can stay on the wall for years before painted a new color when one desires. In a house where walls are uneven or cracked this is an admirable treatment, as its roughness hides the defect. Where a hall is dingy it can be freshened by two coats of water color wash.

A favorite paper for dining room or library where there is a high wainscoting or plate rail two-thirds up the wall is a scenic frieze put on the upper third. Wonderful color effects are shown in these papers, which are cool northern landscapes and again tropical scenes.

How to Prevent Food From Scorching.

If your vegetables or preserves scorch while cooking, advises cook, remove the vessel instantly from the range and set it in a pan of cold water, letting it remain there for ten or fifteen minutes. At the end of that time you will find that the scorched taste has all vanished from the food.

When cooking cabbage, turnips or onions boil at the same time some vinegar with few spices. This will destroy all vegetable odor.

When boiling a ham leave it in the water in which it has been boiled until it is quite cold. This will make it juicy and tender.

The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

HOMEMADE DRINKS.

GRAPE PUNCH.—Take one pint of grape juice and juice of six lemons, one pound granulated sugar and two quarts of water; mix and serve from a punch bowl. An orange or pineapple may be sliced in if desired.

Take dead ripe gooseberries, wash and drain and mash as for any other wine. Add their own bulk of boiling water and let stand for twenty-four hours, or even twelve hours longer if the weather is cool. Press out all the juice, and this means all of it, whatever the appearance may be. Measure and to each gallon add three pounds of white sugar. Stir well every day for a week, then cover with cheesecloth and let stand until fermentation ceases. Then cover tight and let stand for six weeks and strain, filtering the sediment through several thicknesses of cheesecloth.

Pineapple Lemonade.—Boil one pound of granulated sugar in a pint of water until it is a thick sirup. Squeeze the juice of three lemons in a bowl and peel a pineapple, cutting out all the eyes. Then grate the pineapple into the lemon juice, pouring in the sugar sirup after this and stirring briskly for about three minutes. Add a quart of fresh water and strain into a glass pitcher, putting in a lump of ice when serving.

Mixed Fruit Drink.—The more varieties of fruit used in this the better the drink. Cut up the following fruits in small bits and cover them for three hours with plenty of sugar: Pineapples, oranges, lemons (also peel of these), grapefruit, one or two large apples and some juicy pears. When ready to serve cover the fruit with distilled or mineral water, add maraschino cherries, a few softened figs, several slices of preserved citron and some big sprigs of fresh mint. Put in cracked ice and serve the drink in big glass pitcher, so that the pretty effect of the fruit can be seen.

Cold Tea.—Cold tea can be made the foundation of many delicious hot day beverages. Mixed with an equal quantity of ordinary lemonade the result is refreshing. Orange juice combines well with tea too. Any odd bits of jelly that are in the refrigerator can be melted and added to it, with lemon juice to counteract undue sweetness. The addition of fruit juice of any sort with cold vichy water or apollinaris or imported ginger ale makes of plain cold tea a very tempting drink.

Administration Admits War Has Good Effect on Industry

Washington—(Special correspondence).—Directly reversing the statements of Secretary of Commerce Redfield that revival of American industry was not due to war orders, the Department of Commerce has just given out a statement concluding with the assertion that "surveying the whole field, it may justly be said that the world's conflict has been of unmeasured value to American industry as a whole.

The same statement contains practical admissions of the soundness of the protective tariff principle. The Department's bulletin says: "In a more or less uncomfortable way, we have suddenly been brought to recognize the unwisdom, the folly, of shipping vast amounts of the crude material of our farms, forests, and mines 3,000 miles across the ocean, and buying it back in a manufactured form, at a vastly enhanced price." We have likewise come to recognize the absurdity of allowing many natural products of the tropics, of South America, of the Far East, to find their way to Europe, and of paying foreign intelligence and skill to transform them into articles of daily need in our lives."

This attitude now taken by a Department under the control of a Democratic Administration is exactly what Republicans have contended for from the foundation of the party. During every Democratic Administration, weh ave shipped raw material abroad and bought itb ack in manufactured form at a vastly increased price. We were doing exactly that under the present Democratic tariff law, until the European War intervened and served as a protective wall to cut off foreign imports.

Probably nothing that has come out of the Department of Commerce will serve more to embarrass the Democratic party in the coming campaign than this statement expressly acknowledging the vital importance ofm anufacturing goods at home. The Department points to the course of events that followed the cutting off by war of the aniline imports from Germany and the supply of potash from the same source, with the resulting "tremendous impulse given to the expansion of domestic manufacture." The Department might as well have made its acknowledgment apply to a long list of commodities heretofore supplied largely from abroad but cut off by the war "with resulting tremendous impulse to the expansion of domestic manufacture."

In the acknowledgment of facts as they exist, the Department seems to have made a complete confession. In expression of opinions it does notg o so far, for it says that it "does not believe that the cost of production in the warring of Europe will be lowered as a result of the war, or that there will be danger from that source to the holding of new markets already gained." In view of the fact that the Department's opinions have been found erroneous so many times in the past, there will be little disposition on the part of the business men of the United States to accept the mere opinions of the Department as a guarantee against the return of exactly the same conditions which the Department now admits were unfortunate for this country and which the war alone served to overthrow.

Upon the close of the war, millions of men will return to active industry and the removal of the shipping embargo will release a vast quantity of manufactured articles now held in Germany because of the destruction of that country's merchant marine. These are facts which the Department will be compelled eventually to admit, along with other admissions reluctantly made.

VARIATIONS OF FAT IN CREAM AND MILK

All dairymen know that there is considerable variation in the percentage of fat in cream and skimmed milk at different times, even when the same separator is used. The general impression seems to be that the separator screw is the governing factor, and that if the adjustment of this screw is not changed the percentage of fat will be constant. But the dairy authorities at the state college of agriculture at Cornell say this is not the case. Their investigations show that the fat content of cream and skimmed milk is affected also by the temperature, by the speed at which the separator is operated, by the rate at which the milk flows into the separator bowl, by the percentage of fat in the whole milk, and very slightly by the amount of liquid used for flushing and by the deposit on the inside of the bowl—which in time, will clog the passages and prevent satisfactory separation.

The results of the studies of these variations are contained in Bulletin 360, entitled "Variations in the Tests for Fat in Cream and Skimmed Milk," issued by the Cornell university agricultural experiment station, which may be obtained on application to the state

MANAGER PROWDA'S GRIM REMINDER OF SING SING

An odd advertising novelty adorns the front of the Happy Hour theatre today in the form of an electric chair. the article, a sombre-looking affair, is equipped to the last item with leg and arm straps and special headpiece. The subject of the scenario which this imitation death chair advertises deals with Sing Sing life and is built around the Becker case. Pedestrians passing the theatre have stopped to look at the outfit, noting all of its details.

New York state is one of the few states still carrying out capital punishment in this way. Warden Osborne, of Sing Sing prison, the millionaire Auburn philanthropist, is so opposed to this form of carrying out the death sentence that he purposely absented himself from the prison the day of Becker's electrocution.

The apparatus on exhibition is a duplicate of the chair in Sing Sing and Auburn prisons.

Russian Army Breaks Through German Ring Drawn Around Vilna

By Frederick Rennet

Petrograd, Sept. 21.—I am able to state definitely that the Vilna army group has successfully extricated itself from the difficulties of envelopment on three sides by the Germans.

After violent combats for the crosssings of the middle Vina the Russians retreated to Vilna toward Oshmiana, fighting on flanks and front so successfully that the Germans were compelled to fall back from the line of Novowileisk and Molodetchno to Wilia.

After entering Vilna the Germans evidently extended along front of thirty miles to Biniakow to the south and were held by the Russians in a successful action.

London, Sept. 21.—The Germans have cut the Vilna-Baranovitchi railroad over which the Russians had hoped to retreat from Vilna, and the Czar's army of 300,000 men is now practically without a railway line of retreat. Still Petrograd officially expresses the hope that the army will escape.

The Russian armies have been cut into three parts and the Germans are making superhuman efforts to lock in the force around Vilna.

Already a group of Hindenburg's forces has pressed well east of Lida, an important junction point on the Vilna-Baranovitchi railway, and is maving against Minsk in an effort to cut off the Russian retreat in that direction. Control of the railroad by the Germans prevents the Russians from retreating in any other direction than Minsk, except due east, and there the Teuton forces which captured Widzy three days ago are advancing southward, hemming the Russians in.

Meanwhile Prince Leopold's armies, forcing their way northward against heavy resistance, are endeaxvoring to complete the ring. The German official statement today states that these troops have crossed the Moltshad River at Dworzeo, moving in a northeasterly direction. General von Eichhorn, at the same time, is operating in great strength in the district around Novo Grodek.

An afficial statement issued in Petrograd today said:

"The sitiation of the Vilna forces is good, thanks to the heorism of the rearguard, whicch obstinately defended the Vilna-Lida Railway, This railway was kept free of the Germans, and the retreat is going on under normal and favorable conditions."

While the principal interest centres in the German effort to encircle a large part of the Russian forces, heavy fighting is going on along the Divina River before Dvinsk.

The outer defenses of Dvinsk already are being battered by the German guns and a determined effort to force a passage of the river is expected soon. All along the Dvina from Dvinsk are endeavoring to shell the Russians out of their positions and throw pontoons across the stream.

The Russians are putting up a terrific battle at their bridgehead positions, and large reinforccements are reported to have been brought up from the interior. A crossing of the Dvina would practically seal the fate of Dvinsk and Riga, and the Russians are fighting desperately to hold back the invaders from the rich railroad city and great naval base.

The Russian losses in th e retreat from Vilna are admitted in Petrograd to have been very great. Strong rear guards have been thrown out to be slaughtered in order that the main bodies might escape. The bravery of the rear guards is described as superb, their heorism so far having saved great forces of their comrades.—

PRODUCTS OF SOUTHLAND ON EXHIBITION HERE

William Harder, who spent some time in this city as foreman on the construction work of the new Post-office building, and who is making his home now in Laurel, Miss., has sent his friend, Victor C. Lewis, of this city, several interesting samples of Mississippi agriculture. By express yesterday, Mr. Lewis received several branches of the peanut plant, with clusters of the nuts, and some sprigs of the cotton plant with the balls of cotton in full bloom. Mr. Harder also sent some pieces ofs ugar cane.

In his letter to Mr. Lewis, Mr. Harder spoke of the intense heat that has pervaded Mississippi during the summer just past and said the temperature at present hovers around the 90's. The cotton picking season is just beginning now, he said, and the growers anticipate a record crop.

Mr. Lewis has placed Mr. Harder's samples on display in the window of his tobacco store in Cayuga st.

9 MONTHS OF WAR COST GERMANY 260,000 A MONTH

While Britain's Loss Reached 250,000 During Same Period—Total for Countries Placed at 6,500,000

By Hilaire Belloc

Paris.—The general conclusion of the French higher command from captured documents, stories of priconers, etc., made on July 31 was that, during the first five months of the war the German branch of the Central Alliance alone was suffering permanent losses at the rate of 260,000 a month.

Whatever the rate was, it has been maintained, for the struggle has, if anything, increased in intensity, taking the eastern and Western fronts combined. The vigorous offensive in Poland has more than made up for the intermittent quiescence of the western front since thisc alculation was published, and even on the western front there have been interludes of very heavy losses, as, for instance, in the prolonged fighting north of Arras.

The date gives one to the eleventh month of active warfare upon a grand scale. This would give, for permanent German losses alone, if the French General Staff's estimate be correct 2,860,000. Allowing one-quarter of all casualties to be really temporary in character. and only three-quarters to be permanent, this would give the total German losses, permanent and temporary, roughly 3,800,000.

This line of argument only applies to the German losses. The French General Staff can only apply its analysis to the western front. Applying the proportion of eighty per cent for the Austro-Hungarian quota, as compared with the German 3,800,000 total German casualties, gives us for the total Teuton casualties 6,800,000 odd—more than our minumum of 6,450,00, but less than our maximum of 7,000,000, and close to the average.

British Loses One-fifth

After nine months of fighting upon a grand scale the British forces had lost somewhat over 250,000 men. Of these losses one-fifth were killed. The number of men sent overseas by Great Britain from the beginning of large operations (the last ten days of August, 1914, to, that date was somewhat less than one-tenth of the men put under arms by the German Empire alone.

In making a calculation for the end of July we are dealing not with nine months, but with eleven. On the analogy of the British losses the German dead alone in the first nine months of the war would not have been less than 500,000; that is, supposing the German fighting to have been of not more than the same character and intensity as the British fighting.

After eleven months one would get in the same proportion, and, always supposing the German fighting toh ave been no more severe and exhaustive in the latter than in the earlier part, one would have just over 600,000 German dead. But the German fighting has been, as a fact, in the latter two or three of these eleven months far more severe in its effects upon German numbers than the British fighting.

The mass of the British forces, those in Northern France, have stood for the most part upon the defensive in trench warfare during that period, consonant with the general plan upon all the western front since the early summer. The same has been true of about half the German forces.

But another portion of the German forces, rather less than half, has been fighting in a desperate contimued offensive of the most ex-

VON PAPEN HAS BEEN ORDERED TO LEAVE

New York.—Captain Franz von Papen, Military Attache of the German Embassy, whose letter to his wife, in the course of which he referred to "the idiotic Yankees," is one of the classics of the Archibald collection, in all probability will not resume his connection actively in Washington as a member of the German Embassy there.

Since Captain von Papen's name became closely connected with many of the stories of the abuse of American passports and with the promotion of the German propaganda in this country by divers and devious means he has been absent from his post in Washington enjoying a "vacation." He has been travelling through the West with the avowed intention of seeing the country, going to the Yellowstone Park, the San Francisco?Panama Exposition, and other attractions which appealed to a hard working military diplomatist looking for rest and recreation.

It will not be Captain von Papen's first trip to Mexico by any means. In fact he is already officially accredited to both Mexico and Washington in the capacity of German Military Attache and has been so accredited for some time. In that capacity he made a trip to Mexican capital in March, 1914, at the time when the Wilson administration's embroilment with Huerta was coming to a head, when the port of Vera Cruz bristled with American war ships and just about one month before the American bluejackets seized the Mexican port and held it at the cost of the lives of nineteen American seamen and of many more Mexican.

MOTORMAN BLAMES FLAGMAN; ENGINEERS SHIRK RESPONSIBILITY

New York.—The single blast fired at the heading of the subway construction work in Seventh ave., corner of 25th st. yesterday morning ripped out a block and a half of the shoring work beneath which the work of construction is being done. Three hundred and fifty feet of roadway from curb to curb crashed down thirty feet below the street surface, killed five men and two women and injured fifty-nine others, more than half of whom are working women.

A Seventh avenue surface car bound north and crowded to the platform with passengers on their way to business had advanced to a point about midwkay between Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth streets. Suddenly the entire temporary street structure rose several inches and then settled into the excavation with a crash that could be heard nearly a mile away. Every person on the car, save two men, who managed to jump from the rear platform, was carried down into the hole with the car, which folded up like so much cardboard when it struck the rocky bottom of the excavation.

There are conflicting reports concerning the car which did go down in the ruins. The contractor's flagmen insist that instead of halting when warned at the corner of Twenty-fourth street the motorman speeded up and did not stop until the blast had been fired and it was too late to escape.

The motorman, who was seriously injured, made a statement to District Attorney Charles A. Perkins to the effect that a flagman did not stop him until he was half up the block north of wenty-fourth st. He instantly obeyed the warning signal, he said. An examination of the ruins of his car showed that the controller was turned off and that the brakes were set. In ordinary circumstances the car would have been perfectly safe where it stopped, but it would have had to be a full block south of that point to have escaped the cave-in of yesterday.

Business men and residentso f the neighborhood of yesterday's tragedy told the District Attorney that the blasting on that section had been unusually severe, and it was learned that hundreds of complaints have been received of the blasting on other sections of the new subway.

The commission engineers believe that most of these complaints are due to nervousness on the part of persons who do not understand theu se of dynamite and are alarmed at the unusual noise. Yesterday's accident, however, has convinced city officials that some of those complaining have had foundation for their protests, and as a result the blasting will be modified all over the city, even if it seriously delays the work of subway construction.

Through Robert E. Livingston, the Consolidated Gas Company issued a statement last night to the effect that illuminating gas had nothing whatever to do with the disastrous accident. Mr. Livingston explains that since the work of subway construction began in Seventh avenue the large mains have been disconnected and gas is carried in eight—inch mains which run along the street surface.

George B. Cortelyou, president of the company, and William H. Bradley, chief engineer, made a thorough investigation at the scene of the accident, according to Mr. Livingston, and established beyond question that illuminating gas had nothing to do with it.

MACCABEE NINE WON GLORY

The K. of M. Boys Whacked the Pathfinder Bunch to the Handsome Tune of 13-7

In a baseball game replete with sensational plays and a few "boneheads" the Maccabees baseball nine defeated the Pathfinder club to the tune of 13-7. Heavy hitting by the Maccabee players featured the game, three home runs helping to swell the big score rolled up by the K. of M. On account of the cold weather, the game was not largely attended, but the teams' loyal supporters who went to the Athletic Field to see a closely contested game were not disappointed, notwithstanding the large score. The Maccabees bunched four runs in the first inning and three more in the third. In their half of the third inning, the Pathfinder team broke into the scoring column sending four runs over the plate,. From this time on, the game was interesting, neither team being able to bunch hits.

Carroll, who occupied the mound for the boys from the Island, was unfotunate in having the first man up for the Maccabees pound out a home run, followed by several other clean hits. Snow pitched a good game for the Maccabees and received good support. Scudder, who did the receiving for the Pathfinder team, prevented every attempt to steal second. In this department of the game he featured himself. Conley at 2nd base ably supported Scudder in nipping the runners attempting to steal. The only casualty listed was an injured knee receiveed by "Doc" Kellar, when he failed to sidestep a swiftly pitched ball. As one of his friends remarked, Doc was so anxious to get on 1st base he "just rambled along like a little Ford," when the umpire signalled to take his base.

At 7 o'clock last night the players of both teams besides a number of friends enjoyed a banquet at the Lewis House, the affair being well attended.

With yesterday's game to their credit, the Maccabees lay claim to the championship of the city and are willing to play any team who disputes this right to the title. The lineup of yesterday will remain intact the rest of the season and the baseball team will not disband until one or two teams who have signified their intention of meeting the lodge have been allowed ample time to arrange for a game.

Maccabees		Pathfinders
Smith	R F	Cornell
Lewis	1B	Cole
R. Seymour	ss	Flanders
F. Decker	3B	Buell
Ed Seymour	C	Scudder
Cavanaugh	L F	Kellar

TROLLEY COMPANY PURSUES POLICY OF PATIENT WAITING

Ordered by Board of Works to Improve Bad Conditions They Persist in Refusing to Comply

Although the Syracuse Lakeshore and Northern Railway was ordered by a Board of Public Works resolution passed more than a month ago, to repair the paving between and adjoining its tracks through the city, the company has made no effort to comply with the demand. At the time the resolution was passed, the company was ordered to repair the paving within ten days, or the city would do it at the company's expense.

All over the city the brick paving between the company's tracks is in wretched condition. In East 1st st. below Broadway there are several ruts in the street, made when the trolley company repaired its track, which have not been filled and remain a menace to all kinds of traffic. In the business section there are long stretches of paving which were torn up by the trolley company during track repairs and were replaced in a slip-shod manner, with any sort of brick procurable.

The attention of the Board of Public Works was called to this matter some time ago, and after much deliberation, the Board passed the resolution demanding that the trolley company repair the damage to the city paving. The trolley company has thus far paid no attention to the order, and still the city has taken no action to repair the paving in accordance with resolution.

MACHINERY LONG IDLE IN DEPARTMENTS GETS UNDER WAY AT MILL

There are unmistakeable signs of renewed activity at the plant of the American Woolen Co. which point to the employment on full time of all the mill-hands in the near future. Monday night, the combing room force started a full time schedule for the first time in more than a year, and the combing department is now busy night and day and will remain on that basis indefinitely.

Although the sewing room is operating on the same basis as before except that the working hours are spread over a full week, and many weavers are still unemployed, several have been notified to report at an early date or as soon as the combing, spinning and other departments are far enough ahead with the work to justify the operation of the weaving department on full time.

A good business in domestic serges, with promise of an exceptional foreign trade, is forecasted for this winter and, according to advices from Boston, the local mills will soon resume a full-time schedule. Many of the American company's mills in other sections of the country are supplied with an abundance of work.

In the past few days, the New York World has printed several startling discloeures of British operations in the textile industry in this country which account, to some extent, for the dull trade in the textile industry. According to The World, the British Textile Board has a form of agreement which it circulates among all the textile companies of this country, in which the manufacturers are compelled to promise that they will not export goods manufactured here to countries hostile to England or to any other country on the English black-list. Since England's colonies control a great portion of the raw materials in use here, most of the manufacturers are compelled to sign the agreement or risk closing down because of the lack of raw materials. Great Britain controls the greatest wool producing colonies in the world, and among the different American companies which were approached with this agreement, was the American Woolen Co. In The World of Monday the president of the company, William M. Wood, is credited with the statement that his company would go into bankruptcy before it would accede to Great Britain's demands, and in his words, "Great Britain could go to h——!" The World goes on to say that the American Woolen company has been obliged to suffer the inevitable consequences because of its refusal to meet Great Britain's demands.

Not Pleased With Censors

While it has not yet been conclusively shown that censorship of moving picture films is a failure, the discussion going on in several nearby states indicates that censorship falls far short of accomplishing all that was expected of it. A typical case occurred in Massachusetts recently. The censorship law was amended there on purpose to make sure that the Board of Censors had sufficient power to suppress the "Birth of a Nation" film. When the time came to pass on the film, however, the censors promptly gave it their indorsement incidentally thereby legalizing its production in Boston. Recent court decisions in Pennsylvania have been to the effect that the municipal authorities cannot interfere with the production of a film after it has been approved by the censors. This gives film censors dangerous powers, and is a serious encroachment on municipal authority. No body of outsiders should have authority to stay the hands of the officials of a particular city if they find that because of peculiar local conditions a certain film play ought not to be produced within the territory nuder their jurisdiction.—Rochester Chronicle-Democrat.

The State's Big Show

It appears that the State Fair was not all that could be desired from the point of view, even of the people of Syracuse; for it is noted that prominent citizens of that town are organizing to "help fair, help city," to quote one of the citizens, and we rather suspect that "help city" is the big aim in view.

Harold MacGrath, who writes fiction and also writes a letter to the newspapers now and then, which also may include fiction, writes that "The State Fair attendance this year has fallen short of what it should have been." He may have spoken for the benefit of those who ought to have gone, or his point of view m be that of those who make money out of big crowds. At any rate, MacGrath says that what the Fair needs is automobile races three times a week—hummers that bring crowds of 50,000 a day the way the races did 2 years ago. This year the entire week's attendance was only 125,000. What Syracuse wants is the crowd.

The State Fair costs New York upwards of 100,000 a year and its manifest purpose is to promote agriculture in the commonwealth. The amount of money would support quite an agricultural school. The cost of supporting the State School of Agriculture at Morrisville, for instance, is less than $50,000, and the St. Lawrence School of Agriculture $35,000 more, and it can be contended very well that the two schools do more for the genuine promotion of agriculture than the horse races and the rest of the big show, much of which has nothing to do with raising hay and producing cheese.

It may be necessary to have automobile races, side shows, etc., in order to get the farmers to come to the big attraction, but we should hate to see the State College of Agriculture at Cornell run on the same plan. The boys would have a hilarious time, no doubt, but it would cost them some money and they wouldn't learn much about the relation of spraying to crops.

It is possible that the State gets its money's worth, though it may be doubted. It is noteworthy that a big share of the people who go to the show live in houses where milk is delivered in bottles every morning, and live on eggs imported from Chicago. It would be interesting to know just how great the majority is.—Utica Observer.

Time To Take a Stand

Republican organization men will be wise if they give hearty support to the proposed constitution for which their party is responsible. Those leaders whoh ave opposed certain provisions will er politically if they fail to come out strong for the constitution. Covert opposition will not count. The party will regard men not advocating the constitution as opposed to it. No Republican may hope for future recognition if he has no part in the adoption of a constitution concededly an improvement upon the present very excellent organic law. Good citizens are awaiting the announcement of men holding high position in the Republican party to the effect that they are heartily in favor of the work of a convention controlled by their party.—Watertown Standard.

CENTRAL KICKS ON BATAVIA'S ASSESSMENT

Batavia.—The city assessors of Batavia have been served with a notice by the New ork Central Railroad Co. saying that its assessment is in excess of the actual value of its property in Batavia. A similar notice was served regarding the assessment of 1915 on which the tax was recently paid by the company. An action has been brought against the assessors to compel the reduction of the assessment.

NOT GUILTY

If there is a single reader of this newspaper who has a grain of sympathy in his makeup for a man flayed in the manner that this week's issue of The Patriot flays The Evening Times, he will appreciate the position of the writer of this article who places himself in the same situation as a client who wrote to his lawyer down in Mississippi. The client wrote as follows:

Dere Sir:— I am in Jale and the Man sayes I am likely to go to the pen. I did not steel the cowe and I am Purfectly Innercent. Pleese gete me out, if it are the last act of yure Life. This is not a nice place. Pleese do get me out. I think I can pay you sum day. I did not Steel the cowe. Tell the Judge that, and if You get me off Free I am willing to do all I can for you. DISCOVERING THE YOUNG MEN

If the question were to be asked, 'Who discovered the young men, a person acquainted with conditions in places where the Y. M. C. A. exists would say, the Young Men's Christian Association. We think of the young men of a town as they look about for healthy amusement in the evenings that they mean just so many boys. When we visit the rooms of an association we see dozens or hundreds of young men of our own flesh and blood and sons of people like us who come into the service of the world and who help us as we help them.

In taking this view of the Y. M. C. A. work one is only in harmony with thousands of the big men of the country and of the world for that matter and not as an individual. The world might be compared to a dreadnought and the equipment, but it is the men who man the great ship who make the engine of war, truly valuable and able to defend us. Of what use is the dreadnought if we have not skilled men, not as sailors only, but, in self-restraint and self-control? A full realization of this example is seen in the growth of the Y. M. C. A. and the causes which lead up to theg rowth. It is why big men are more interested in the work of the association than in any other organization in America, for it is exerting a most wholesome, physical, intellectual and spiritual influence upon the young men in the service of their employers.

Is there a Big Brother in Fulton who would like to have his name enrolled as a benefactor of the young men of the city?

MR. PUT-IT-OFF

Procrastination is the average man's greatest fault. Putting things off, waiting until tomorrow, the idea of delaying, has wrecked more individuals than any other one fault in business.

One inactive, indolent, put-it-off man can stall the success of a whole organization; and he will.

When the prompt, alert, aggressive members of an office or a plant see some lotus-eating loafer going to sleep on the job, it has a bad influence—very bad.

There are men who start out to do something, to meet a customer, to sell; and down deep in the back of their brain they hope that the customer is not in. They seem to feel a sense of relief when told by the office boy that the would-be patron will not be back for four days.

If the truth were known, these bluffing-themselves men are not convinced in their own hearts that they are on the right track. They do not expect to sell to the customer, but they would not for worlds be so careless, so indifferent, as not to call on a customer. Calling is the easiest thing they can do. It's a habit. They go through a regular routine of calling once a day, of telephoning and bluffing generally.

They will sit at the desk in the morning and potter and pudder; they will waste time in faddle and in fibble, until the best part of the morning is lost. They will sit and balance a penholder on their first finger; but this will never balance their drawing account, their salary. They are expensive luxuries.

They seem to want to doze, drowse, snooze their success away. Anything to put it off.

Instead of getting things done and out of the way, they seem anxious to let a lot of letters pils up on the desk—to leave a lot of work undone. They would rather have a lot of unfinished business at night, and worry over it for hours, than take an extra half hour after quitting time and worry through it.

This class of men are half-brothers to the big clock called Ben. Only for intervening genius, only for a man like the parent of Big Ben, they would be sleeping until noon.

Some men seem to think they can live and prosper and hold their jobs on the unfinished memorandums they hang on the hook. These are prospects, to be sure; but thousands of men have starved with a spindle full of bright prospects.

The man who decides to wait until next Tuesday afternoon doesn't believe in his heart that he can do it.—Silent Partner.

THE WAR AND IMMIGRATION

For years the restrictionists have sought to have a law placed on the statute books which would cut down immigration. What they have been unable to accomplish themselves, the war has done for them. In the years 1913 and 1914 the totals of aliens admitted to the United States were 1,427,227 and 1,403,081, respectively, and the gains in alien population, aafter deducting the numbers of those who returned to Europe or elsewhere, were 815,303 and 769,276. The increase in alien population in the course of the immigration years which ended June 30th was 50,070. The number of aliens who were admitted was 434,244, while the number who left was 384,174. The most drastic restrictive legislation could not have cut down the flow as the war has done.

Not only has the war fulfilled the desires of the restrictionists in respect to a wholesale reduction in numbers, but also in respect to the racial character of the immigrants. The restrictionists have argued that those from central and southern Europe were undesirable because they were not closely allied in blood with the original settlers of the country, and because their political institutions and social habits were different. One of the results of the war has been that the majority in 1914-1915 came from the countries fronting on the North Sea and the Atlantic Ocean. Of the large number who went home, in many cases to join the colors of their respective countries, by far the larger proportion were of the class of so-called undesirable nationalities.

The period of reduced immigration is likely to continure more than a year, and the indications are that it may last for three of four years. It is not generally believed that peace will be concluded within a year. Following the war there will be much constructive work to be done in all parts of Europe. It can be said with confidence that the countries now at war, or which become involved, will not encourage emigration. Some of them, on the other hand, will do what they can to discourage it. This will be particularly true of lands where industry has been built up on a considerable scale. Some governments will not, of course, be in so good a position to interfere as others, owing to the freedom of movement guaranteed by the laws or customs. Fighting for the salvation of the Fatherland stimulates patriotic feeling. Doubtless this will play some part in retarding emigration.

It is evident, also, that war is rapidly depleting the ranks of those who emigrate. These are the men under forty-five years of age. The stupendous casualty lists suggest that there will be many in this class who, because of physical or mental disabilities, will be unable to meet the requirements of our immigration law regarding capacity to earn a livelihood, and mental soundness.

With a much smaller immigration we shall have an opportunity to study the social and economic effects of restriction without committing our selves to the policy. We have knowledge based on experience of the results of a large immigration. By permitting proposed legislation to lie upon the table for a while we shall be enabled to decide upon our future policy with greater knowledge at our command.—Scientific American.

THE OCTOBER AMERICAN MAGAZINE BRISTLES

In the October American Magazine Olive Higgins Prouty begins a new serial novel entitled "The Fifth Wheel." It is the story of the revolt of Ruth Vars, a New England girl of good family, who tired of the conventional prospect before the ordinary woman and decided to break loose and live her own life. This is the story of her personal and business adventures.

Norman Strong, writing under the title "Growing Old at Fifty," tells how he made himself over physically and mentally when he had reached the late forties. He was old at forty-six, with death just around the corner. At fifty he is ten years younger, well, strong and more youthful, simply by following a few simple rules.

Stanley Johnson gives the second installment of his series, "Youth Leads the Way," in which he tells of the tremendous work done by boys and girls under the direction of the Department of Agriculture. Jerome Travers, present open and four times amateur golf champion of the United States, tells many stories of great golf plays and players under the title of "Heroes of Wood and Iron."

More fiction is contributed by John Taintor Foote, Ruth Sapinsky, Philip Curtiss, Edgar L. Hampton and Alice Wood. James Montgomery Flagg does an amusing piece in words and pictures entitled "How the World Empties and Fills." Ray Stannard Baker tells why he is in favor of Woman Suffrage. The regular departments—Interesting People and The Family's Money—are filled with good reading and good ideas. The prize winning letters in the contest entitled "The Jew" complete a number of rare interest and freshness.

BENEFITS OF THE SEAMEN'S LAW

Provides Greater Safety For the Traveling Public.

GIVES FREEDOM TO SAILORS

Opens the Way For Upbuilding of the American Merchant Marine—Equalizes Cost of Operation as Between United States and Foreign Ships—Effect Will Be Worldwide.

By VICTOR A. OLANDER.

[Vice president International Seamen's Union of America.]

The passage of the seamen's act is the emancipation proclamation for the seamen of the world. For them it means freedom, which has heretofore been denied. For the traveling public it means greater safety of life at sea. In these things it sets the standard for the entire world. For the nation it means the restoration of the American merchant marine in the oversea trade.

The seamen's calling is essentially international. A national law governing that calling is necessarily international in effect. This is true of the seamen's act, and therein is its greatest importance. The right to quit the service of an employer, a right without which freedom cannot exist, has been long denied to crews of American vessels in foreign ports and to the seamen on practically all foreign vessels in American ports. This denial of liberty has been in the form of an American statute law, combined with some twenty odd treaties with foreign nations, under which seamen were held to service on the ships or punished by imprisonment for quitting work during the terms of contracts which all seamen under the laws of every nation are required to sign upon accepting employment. The seamen's act repeals the statute and provides for the abrogation of such parts of the treaties as require the arrest and punishment of seamen for what is called "desertion." The necessary changes in the treaties are made in accordance with the method and within the time provided for by the treaties affected. Thus American soil for the first time becomes free soil and slavery under the stars and stripes ceases to exist not only for Americans, but for all others who step upon our shores. Thus the seamen come into their own, and since the effect is international the seamen of the entire world have the door of opportunity opened to them.

The new law provides for greater safety of life at sea for the traveling public and for the seamen as well, by providing a standard of efficiency applicable to the deck crews of all vessels leaving American ports, requiring that a given percentage of the sailors must be men of experience and by designating the lifeboat capacity which such vessels must provide. True, the number of efficient seamen required under the new law is not as large as it should be, and except in the oversea trade the number of lifeboats is woefully small, particularly on the excursion vessels. Nevertheless, there is improvement over present conditions, and standards have been laid down upon which to base more substantial improvements in the future.

For the nation itself the new law opens the way for the upbuilding of the American merchant marine in the oversea trade, providing for an extension of American commerce, by removing unwarranted privileges which foreign ship owners have been allowed up to the present and by the enforcement of American standards of manning and equipment equally upon all vessels in American harbors, whether such vessels be domestic or foreign.

The new law giving freedom to the sailors abolishes the system under which, by the aid of the United States, foreign ships were enabled to hold cheap labor. When the law goes into operation the men on those ships will have the right to quit and even to go on strike in American ports when they so desire. The immediate effect will be that the wages paid by oversea vessels will be determined not alone by the low wage port from which they sail, but also by the higher wage port to which they sail. Wage cost of operation will be [illegible]. Further [illegible] and foreign vessels is obtained by the standards of manning, efficiency and equipment, which under the new law are made applicable to foreign vessels when such vessels are in American ports. Thus the cost of operation as between American and foreign ships will be equalized and the American ships will have equal opportunities in competition with all others. In doing this the United States has simply taken advantage of the international law that each nation has a right to govern its own harbors. The result will be the steady growth of the American merchant marine as a whole.

Eight Hours For Oil Men.

The Standard Oil Company of New Jersey has conceded the eight hour day to its workmen. The announcement was made after a special meeting of the board of directors. The New Jersey company is the parent and most powerful in the Standard Oil group, and it is believed all the subsidiaries of the vast organization will follow its example.

STRENGTH IN UNIONS.

Women are learning the old story of strength in union. They are developing a sense of responsibility, a keen appreciation of justice and their industrial rights and knowledge of the way to enjoy and maintain them.

They have learned they must achieve their own freedom—that they must work out their own betterment. Others can help, but the women themselves must do the work.

The greatest thing about human freedom is the self reliant, resourceful spirit, conscious of its responsibility and able and unafraid to accept the results of its own determinations. This is the spirit unionism instilled into women workers.—American Federationist.

COMMEND ORGANIZATION.

All Members of Industrial Commission Favor Trade Unions.

In the midst of the numerous conflicting and disjointed conclusions reached by members of the federal commission on industrial relations, following its long study of the subject, one point of general agreement stands out conspicuously, says the Chicago News. All the nine members are agreed that organization of wageworkers, as well as organization of employers, is commendable and useful.

Naturally the four members selected to represent the labor element express this view. In the special report signed by Professor Commons of the University of Wisconsin and Mrs. Harriman of New York, who represented the general public, it is asserted that "the labor unions are the greatest Americanizing agencies in the country." The members of the commission who represented the employers of labor frankly recognize the evils for which some employers are responsible in their relations with wageworkers. These members conclude that organizations of employers must purge themselves of such abuses. They say, "If we were wage earners we would be unionists." It further appears that they would be determined advocates of trade unionism in every sense of the word. This report, however, does not fail to call attention to the abuses for which some trade union members have been responsible.

In short, the representatives of the employers declare that serious abuses exist on either side in the industrial field and that these abuses ought to be removed. Then strong organizations of employers, dealing honestly, openly and sympathetically with strong organizations of wageworkers, would do much to allay industrial unrest. "The ideal day in the industrial world," it is true, "will be reached when all labor disputes are settled as a result of reason and not as a result of force."

Possibly this does not go to the root of the trouble. More elaborate suggestions of socialistic remedies are made by other members of the commission. Nevertheless, the idea is wholesome and good and fundamental in so far as the direct relations of workers and their employers are concerned. Its adoption would be undeniably beneficial.

Anyway, He Wasn't.

"Own up, now. Who's the head of your family?"

"My wife used to be," admitted Mr. Henpeck, "but since my daughters are grown up we have a commission form of government."—[illegible]

MODERN RIP VAN WINKLE RETURNS

PRISONER TWENTY YEARS.

Electric Cars, Autos and Women's Styles Amaze Pardoned Wife Slayer Remembers Seeing Henry Clay Playing Game of Poker—Praises Warden Osborne's Mutual Welfare League.

New York.—George W. Cram, a modern Rip Van Winkle, awoke here after hibernating over twenty years near the foothills of the Catskills. But unlike his legendary predecessor, Cram's exile was involuntary. He has been a prisoner in Sing Sing and was the patriarch of the grim prison's convicts. At eighty-five he was freed by a pardon from Governor Whitman after escaping death in the electric chair to which he had been sentenced for killing his wife.

On his return here the aged man, who, despite his years, was known in prison as "Kid" Cram, rode for the first time in an automobile and an electric train.

A long drawn "A-h-h!" was the only exclamation he uttered as he emerged from the Grand Central station and gazed with bewilderment at the busy scenes.

"Gosh, how it's grown!" he said as soon as he got his breath. "That's one of the electric street cars, eh? They are big things, all right. Gee, when I went away they had just got cable cars, and we thought them wonderful."

Cram had left the prison after bidding goodby to all his old cronies and the officers at Sing Sing.

"The old rum is no good for any one," he said, "and my advice to a boy is, don't take your first drink. I remember my first drink, all right. It was way back in 1848, on a Mississippi river steamboat.

"I was a young lad then, and I saw Henry Clay playing a game of poker with some other men. He took me between his knees and gave me his 'hand' to play. After it was over he gave me his glass of wine to drink. I don't remember whether I won the game or not; but I know I've played many games since then.

"Say, boys," he began suddenly, veering his conversation to Sing Sing, "Warden Osborne's Mutual Welfare league is the greatest thing that was ever instituted in a prison. When I first went into the prison it was a hell on earth. Now it is a paradise."

Reverting to his own case, he said:

"When I was fighting in the Indian campaign near the California line in 1846 I was hit in the nose with an Indian musket. I think that old wound was the direct cause of my trouble. You know, I served in three wars—the Mexican, Indian and civil wars.

"I had been out of work for some time and I began to worry. After that I don't remember a thing, until I woke up to find I had been in the death house at Sing Sing for over a week and was under sentence of death for killing my wife. I never quarreled with my wife."

"Gee," he whispered, "how the women dress nowadays! In my time they would have been locked up if they went about with as little clothes on as that.

"I don't think I'll go down to Coney Island yet. It's thirty-five years since I was there. I'm going to California after a few days here. I haven't been there since the days of '49."

Cram was given $10 when he left Sing Sing. He had earned one and a half cents per day.

"I sent that to my family," he said. "Altogether I earned $136 while I was there. I think they ought to pay convicts a dollar a day. They earn it."

ALLIGATORS' BILL.

Worries the Town Council of Anderson, Ind.

Anderson, Ind.—Two small alligators, each about three feet long, but nearly twenty-five years old, are causing the city water department some concern because of their meat bill, although the cost has averaged not more than $20 a year.

The last bill just presented for meat was $15, and because that bill was for only one feed City Clerk Collins and City Comptroller Richter were astonished. It was explained, however, that the alligators had fasted since October last. It is regarded doubtful whether the alligators will again manifest hunger until next spring, but the records show that perfectly good meat for the two alligators has cost the city about $400.

Strenuous Kindness.

She—Here's a story in the paper that tells about such a kind policeman. He—What did he do? She—He found a man asleep in the street, it says, and fanned him till he woke up.—Baltimore American.

AVIATORS WILL HUNT IN SEARCH FOR SEALS

Fur Men Engage Aeroplanes to Overcome Winter Difficulties.

New York.—No ice pack hereafter will prevent a successful season's catch of seals. Aeroplanes have been engaged by the sealing companies of the northern states and Canada, with expert aviators to help locate the herds.

The preparation for the coming season have been thrust upon sealers by the disastrous ice conditions along the eastern coast and the gulf of St. Lawrence. All last winter constant inshore winds piled hummocks of ice wherever the water shallowed.

These high walls of broken ice prevented the lookouts on the sealing steamers and sailing vessels from locating the seal herds. As a result the catch was one of the smallest on record, the total being less than 50,000 pelts. This has meant a financial loss to the sealing companies of not less than $250,000.

Cruising along the shores, the aeroplanes will follow scouting tactics, not only locating the herds, but returning to the vessels and piloting them to the navigable channels through the ice. As these "leads" change from hour to hour, the need for the aviator is constant. This will prevent fruitless months of search on the part of the sailing vessels.

Moreover, the aeroplanes will be able to report adverse ice conditions at a distance, so that vessels will be able to make their way to a point of safety before the heralded ice pack comes down to crush them. This alone will mean the saving of many vessels, annually caught by the treacherous floe.

Owing to the restriction on the killing of fur seals, which are extinct except in the Bering sea, the pelt of the true seal is in great demand. The greater ease in locating the herds will give the sealing companies the opportunity to select the bigger and more mature animals.

Free Speech Stilled.

Theodore Schroeder, attorney for the Free Speech league, testifying before the industrial relations commission declared the courts had lost sight of "free speech" in its historical sense.

"A study of conditions throughout the world has shown me that we have more penalized opinions in this country today than any other country has had since the world began. By that I mean we have less conceded freedom of speech than any other country."

NO HOPE FOR BAD BOY.

Doctor Says Operation Didn't Cure Youth Who Set Refuge Afire.

New York.—Henry Samara, sixteen years old, of 2060 Washington avenue, the Bronx, who tried to set fire to the house of refuge out of sheer viciousness last April, was sentenced to the Elmira reformatory by Judge Malone in general sessions. The judge acted upon a report submitted by Dr. Gregory, chief of the psychopathic ward in Bellevue hospital, who informed the court that the boy was not of unsound mind, but so thoroughly bad that he would be source of danger to the community.

While the boy was under observation in the psychopathic ward he was operated upon for a depressed fracture of the skull, which was thought at first to be responsible for his mental aberrations and lack of moral sense. However, Dr. Gregory states that he does not believe the fracture had anything to do with the patient's viciousness.

Samara was sent to the house of refuge in July, 1914, for attempting to kill his stepfather and for trying to set fire to a building in the neighborhood of his home.

On April 6 last, while he was employed in the laundry of the house of refuge, he piled a bundle of papers under the stairs and threw a lighted match among them. The fire was extinguished, and the boy later pleaded guilty to arson. He was sent to Bellevue hospital for observation.

MARRIED AT MIDNIGHT.

Bride's Brother and Sister Surprised Witnesses on Auto Trip.

West Orange, N. J.—A courtship of eleven years reached a climax when, after an automobile ride through the Orange mountains, Charles J. Grady and Miss Ella M. Enderlin, daughter of Herman Enderlin of this town, aroused the Rev. Louis Sheld, pastor of the German Presbyterian church in Pleasantdale, and had him marry them.

Mr. and Mrs. Grady, in company with Miss Clara Enderlin and Herbert Enderlin, started out in the automobile of Grady for a ride. Shortly after midnight Grady told his companions that he brought them along as witnesses to his marriage to their sister. The ceremony over, Mr. and Mrs. Grady continued their honeymoon in the machine after leaving the latter's sister and brother at their home.

GENTLEMEN:

I wish to extend to you my appreciation of your designating me for the office of Mayor of our city. It is an office which I did not seek, but the unanimous manner in which the committee requested me to accept, caused me to allow my name to be put forth as your candidate. In accepting the nomination, however, it is only fair to you, to state the position which I shall assume if I am elected. I shall assume the duties of Mayor without having made any promises or given any pledge to any individual as to my conduct and acts.

I have been a member of the Board of Aldermen of this city for four years, and during that time I have given to the needs of the city as careful consideration as I was capable of, and I think that I speak from some experience on these matters. I believe that an effort should be made to obtain a simpler form of government than is now in force The City Charter was drafted in 1902, and as the city grew and time went on it was found inadequate and in some instances contradictory. As I have stated time and again while a member of the Common Council, on being asked to vote upon propositions submitted by other boards, I feel that the Board of Aldermen, being the elective choice of the people, should have more responsibility and more authority, especially in spending city money, than they have under our present charter. I believe, for instance, that all matters which affect the taxpayers should be passed upon by the men who will have to face them on election day, and not by men who obtain office through appointment by the Mayor or in other ways. Therefore I believe that all Boards and appointments, so far as possible, should be abolished, to the end that those matters—and some are important—which are now passed upon by numerous separate boards shall be decided by the Board of Aldermen or a similar body. Then the taxpayer who may be dissatisfied with any action creating an indebtedness on the city and consequently on him, will know where to put his finger on the man or men who are responsible. I believe that all moneys received and disbursed by the city should be received by the Chamberlain and paid out by the Chamberlain under the direction of the Common Council or governing body, so that all funds of the city will be handled by one department. For example the Water Department funds should be handled through the Chamberlain's office like all city funds, instead of having an entirely separate department. It is a poor plan where the officers who raise the money for the city's use, the Board of Aldermen, have little to say where and how it shall be spent.

I believe that the minutes of all boards in the city should be published, so that the taxpayers and people of the city may know at all times the proceedings taken by any Board or Department of the city.

I believe that our system of assessment should be regulated so that no individual shall pay more than his just proportion of the taxes, and no individual less. I think under the present condition, in fact ever since the city has been incorporated, that there has been a great discrepancy in the assessment of property.

Therefore, I shall exert my efforts to obtain for the city a charter which will simplify, so far as may be, the city government and dispense with all boards and appointments possible, excecpt the Board of Aldermen, and, of course, the Board of Education and Civil Service Board required by State law. That is, a system similar to the former simple village administration, with a Board of Aldermen who will have full authority to direct the affairs of the city, and who must accept full responsibility for doing it.

In regard to expenditures of public money, I shall take the same position that I have taken for the last four years while a member of the Common Council; that economy should be practiced; not to the detriment of the city, but that each expenditure should have careful consideration, and the reason for every expenditure well known and investigated.

In closing I wish to say that I shall be pleased at all times to receive suggestions from you, or from any person interested in the welfare of Fulton, and to carefully consider them. I shall, however, maintain my right to act in matters independent of any political or other influence-believing that my duty lies to the community at large rather than to any men or class of men.

Sincerely yours,

MYRON F. FOSTER.

APPLE SUPPLY MUCH LESS

Fruit Available for Commercial Supply Reported Much Less Than Last Year---Market Shows Improvement.

The Agricultural Department's Weekly News letter says:

The marketing of the 1915 apple crop opens with more encouragement to growers and dealers than they found in the prospects for the 1914 crop. According to investigations conducted by the Bureau of Crop Estimates last reports show the condition of the crop to be approximately 80 per cent of the yield last year. The merchantable supply or commercial crop, as distinguished from total production, therefore, would appear to be approximately 40,000,000 barrels at the highest, whereas the commercial crop of 1914 is variously estimated as having been from 50,000,000 to 60,000,000 barrels.

It is reported that, in the large areas where barreled apples are produced, the crop of early fall varieties is relatively larger than the crop of winted varieties. This would seem to indicate that within a very short time a considerable quantity of apples included in the bureau's estimates will be eliminated from consideration. Furthermore, it is said that the crop in some sections is seriously affected with fungus and blotch. To the extent that these defects prevail will the merchantable supply be reduced. Under these conditions, therefore, it would appear that the commercial crop ofw inter varieties may be considerably smaller than the total production the report would seem to show.

Business Conditions Good

The business conditions show a marked improvement over last season according to trade reports received by the Office of Markets and Rural Organization. The South, particularly, is in easier condition, and it is said that the United Kingdom and countries in the north of Europe will take liberal quantities. However, with reference to Europe, it is to be remembered that steamer space is in great demand. It is reported that all cold chambers are under contract with meat packers until the first of the year, and ordinary space is said to be more limited than in 1914. In shipping circles it is maintained that Europe may not be expected to take the same quantities as last year.

According to trade reports the abundance and cheapness of apples during the past year will be reflected in a satisfactory consumption this year. In other words, it is thought that the habit of eating apples may be expected to hold over from last season. However, one or two correspondents maintain that the conditions of one season do not affect the next in so far as consumption is concerned.

It is generally reported that abundant storage space will be available and that comparatively there will be no great difficulty in financing the movement of the crop. Conditions for liberal consumption are said to be good in most markets, and altogether there is a decided feeling of optimism on the part of those concerned as compared with absolute gloom this time last year.

It is to be remembered, however, that 40,000,000 barrels of merchantable apples, which is thought to be the maximum estimate for this year, are a goodly supply, and that to assure a steady normal movement throughout to the conclusion of the season next spring, large quantities must pass into consumption between now and the first of the year. Unreasonably high prices at this time will mean a curtailment of consumption and the storing by the growers of larger quantities than the conditions might justify, with the result that later on they might receive net prices below the level of opening values.

Good Judgment Needed

By this it is not meant that growers ought to sell now for less than market value, nor is it meant that buyers are to be encouraged in depressing opening values. The outlook is normally encouraging for satisfactory profits to all concerned if good judgment is used, and it is meant to urge upon growers and dealers alike the advisability of breaking deadlocks with reasonable concessions on the part of all. Arbitrary ideas of values should be avoided, so that the movement of the crop may proceed in a healthy way.

Unfortunately, when the demand for apples is good, many growers and [illegible] ing is justified, and in such years there is a tendency to lower standards. Attention is called to the fact that no condition can justify anything but an honest pack. For a poor grade and shoddy pack thep roducer ultimately must pay, although temporarily the packer may receive an advantage. Apples should be sold for just what they are, according to the recognized grades. Whether or not the price may be high, growers and dealers alike should adhere strictly to that policy.

Under all conditions there are certain fundamental processes that ought to be observed in preparing the crop for market if success is to be assured.

Thef ruit should be picked and packed ins uch condition as to insure it against abnormal deterioration. With perishable varieties having a long ripening season it is suggested that growers should not attempt to harvest the crop at one picking, but rather should glean the trees for only such fruit as is ready to come off, repeating the process until the crop has been picked in uniform condition. The advantage is that the shipping period may begin earlier and last longer, thereby securing greater time for effecting distribution. Furthermore, if all the fruit is harvested at the same time, it is to be remembered that shipments represent extreme stages of maturity, ranging from ripe to green in the same package, and that frequently toward the end of the season overripe condition ofa portion of the crop may result from failure to pick first only what is in condition for marketing.

Care In Handling

Careful handling from tree to car is necessary to prevent deterioration. It is not diffcult to understand why a lot of fruit does not arrive in the market in prime condition if it is picked and piled on the ground in the hot sun, placed in packages in a heated condition, and finally hauled in wagons without covers and springs over rough roads. With proper facilities apples picked on hot days should not be packed until the following day. For this purpose shelter should be provided in order that the fruit may be packed in a cool, dry condition. Growers who have no packing sheds should either build them or arrange to use their barn floors. The wagons should be equipped with springs and cover provided for the protection of the fruit from the weather.

Culls and cider stock should be eliminated from the better grades and as far as possible diverted to cider mills, canneries, and evaporators, While in short-crop years there is a fair demand for low-class apples,still by filling the autumn markets with poor stocks, it is possible to obstruct seriously the disposition of the standard grades, and force into cold storage larger quantities than the conditions may justify. In general, only long-keeping standard-pack apples should be placed in the coolers, though it is frequently profitable to store for relatively short periods such sorts as Grimes, Wealthy, and Jonathan, for withdrawal during autumn and early winter as the demand justifies. In packing fruit for storage, special care should be exercised to pick the fruit in sound condition, pack it carefully, and rush it into storage without delay. Such methods add materially to the life of the product.

Early Season Advantageous

Owing to geographic location, some important apple-producing States have the natural advantage of an early season. It would be folly for such States not to profit by that advantage. It is possible for growers so situated to leave their crop on the trees until the period of greatest movement, and frequently in years past they have suffered great loss by doing so. The Southern States of the apple belt should begin early and market the greatest portion possible prior to the period of greatest movement and thereby avoid competition with the producing areas of the northern belt. On the other hand, States that go to market latest should be in no hurry to rush the markets during the period of greatest movement. In brief, the crop should be distributed throughout the longest time possible, cold and dry storages being judiciously utilized for conservation.

Small towns outside of the apple belt are often poorly supplied, even in large crop years. Growers of the Middle West have taken advantage of this condition by going to such towns with cars of apples and selling on the track. In order to succeed with this method the shippers should know conditions of supply and demand in the town selected, ascertain the railway and township regulations controlling track sales, and precede delivery of the car by judicious advertising. The mayor can give information [illegible] a license is required, and the railway agent as to whether track sales are allowed.

In so far as the apple grower is concerned, cooperation in distribution and marketing is highly commended as an economic system for securing judicious handling. Of course, it would be impracticable for growers to organize upon the eve of crop movement, because disaster would likely result as the consequence of too little time for perfecting business arrangements. However, in communities where cooperative packing and selling agencies are operated, the growers should do all possible to strengthen such exchanges with their patronage and counsel. The disloyalty of members is the chief element of failure in cooperative circles, and apple growers are strongly urged to stand by their associations as the best way to solve the problems that are common to all.

MRS. REUBEN ELLIS DIED AT THE QUIRK

Within a few minutes after entering the Quirk theatre this afternoon and being seated, Mrs. Reuben Ellis, 71, of 311 W. Second street was suddenly stricken, and died before a physician could be summoned. Mrs. Ellis, in company with a friend, Miss Nellie Thomas entered the theatre with two other women shortly after the afternoon performance began. Mrs. Ellis complained then of being rather exhausted, and of pains in the region of the heart. Only a few people in the darkened theatre were aware of anything wrong when Mrs. Ellis suddenly threw back her head and gasped. Doctors Fox and Cusack responded immediately, but death had been instantaneous.

Undertaker Cole removed the body to his undertaking parlors and telephoned Mr. Ellis, who is employed in the woolen mills. Mr. Ellis, who is in the seventies, was overcome on hearing the news.

MRS. JULIA COLLETT

Mrs. Julia Collett, 44, died at her home, 455 West 5th st. yesterday. Mrs. Collett had been ill for some time. She was born in St. Lawrence county, but moved to this city several years ago.

She is survived by her husband, seven children, two brothers and two step-brothers. Her funeral will be held from the Church of the Immaculate Conception tomorrow morning at 9:30 o'clock, where Father John L. Lindsman will officiate at a requiem mass. Burial will be made in St. Mary's cemetery.

SUPERINTENDENT RUMSEY STOPPING WATER WASTE

A gang of men under direction of Superintendent of Public Works, Frank Rumsey have repaired several large leaks in the city mains, which have impaired the water supply, both in the houses and at the fire water hydrants. Two of the leaks were found in East 1st st., and one in particular, near the gas works, was wasting several hundred gallons of water da[illegible] [illegible] st. fire was the best afforded the department in months, and was occasioned by the fact that the standpipe was full at the time. For night fires, the standpipe pressure is available, but during the day the flow to the stand pipe is cut off, and the pressure to the mains is taken direct from the pumping station. The water pumped into the standpipe before midnight is sufficient to meet ordinary demands until morning, however, and the pumps at the water works are not needed except in case of fire.

WHEN TO SHOOT PUZZLES THEM

Hunters Perplexed by Conflict of Federal and State Laws, But Wise Hunters Obey Fed. Laws.

According to the law of New York Mr. Hunter, you may go out this morning and shoot such waterfowls as ducks, but according to the Federal law you may not. Furthermore, the Federal government is on the lookout for violations of this law. All hotelkeepers in places frequented by waterfowl have been told to warn hunters that the duck season will not open until October 1st.

This novel conflict of state and Federal laws has been puzzling many a hunter where wild ducks and other birds abound, and many have been trying to learn what is their status as Nimrods. When the hunting license was obtained a little booklet was given out and that said that the season for ducks would open on September 16th. The gun was taken down and cleaned and oiled preparatory to starting something last week, Washington. With gun in readiness and ducks flying in flocks, it was a big temptation, but most of the hunters decided to await further information.

Game protectors who have been in Albany say that, while the state authorities have not ordered them to enforce the Federal law, they advise all hunters to comply with it.

Season for Migratory Birds

The open season for migratory birds in this state, according to the Federal law, follows: Waterfowl, October 1st to January 16th; rails, coots and gallinules, September 1st to December 1st; woodcock, November 1st to January 1st. Insectiverous birds are protected indefinitely. Band tailed pigeons, cranes, swans, curlew, and smaller shore birds are protected until September 1, 1918.

The Federal and state laws agree on one point, and in this particular it is said they are to be enforced to the letter. There is to be no shooting of any kind between sunset and sunrise. For instance, the sun rises this morning at 5:59 o'clock and sets this evening at 6:09, and only between those times can any shooting of birds be done legally. The days shortens three or four minutes each day, so that by October 1st shooting from about 5:45 o'clock in the evening until 6:15 the next morning will be prohibited.

RED SOX NEED ONLY GO 50-50

The Boston Americans, who now are making their plans for participation in the World Series, recovered the ground they lost Tuesday by being idle by winning a double header Wednesday from Cleveland. The Red Sox now are four and one-half games ahead of the Detroit Tigers, who defeated Philadelphia. With only twelve remaining on their schedule, the Red Sox have only to win seven, even should the Tigers fail to lose one of their ten games.

Neither Philadelphia nor Boston in the National League played yesterday. Brooklyn played a double header, winning and losing. The standing thus remains virtually unchanged the Phillies leading by five and one-half games over Boston and six over Brooklyn.

Difference Between Amusing and Convincing

By HERBERT KAUFMAN
Author of "Do Something! Be Something!"

AN ADVERTISER must realize that there is a vast difference between amusing people and convincing them. It does not pay to be "smart" at the line rate of the average first-class paper. I suppose that I could draw the attention of everybody on the street by painting half of my face red and donning a suit of motley. I might have a sincere purpose in wishing to attract the crowd, but I would be deluding myself if I mistook the nature of their attention.

The new advertiser is especially prone to misjudge between amusing and convincing copy. A humorous picture may catch the eye of every reader, but it won't pay as well as an illustration of some piece of merchandise which will strike the eye of every buyer. Merchants secure varying results from the same advertising space. The publisher delivers to each the same quality of readers, but the advertiser who plants flippancy in the minds of the community won't attain the benefit that is secured by the merchant who imprints clinching arguments there.

Always remember that the advertising sections of newspapers are no different than farming lands. And it is as preposterous to hold the publisher responsible for the outcome of unintelligent copy as it would be unjust to blame the soil for bad seed and poor culture. Every advertiser gets exactly the same number of readers from a publisher and the same readers—after that it's up to him—the results fluctuate in accordance with the intelligence and the pulling power of the copy which is inserted.

A Dollar That Can't Be Spent

By HERBERT KAUFMAN
Author of "Do Something! Be Something!"

EVERY dollar spent in advertising is not only a seed dollar which produces a profit for the merchant, but is actually retained by him even after he has paid it to the publisher.

Advertising creates a good will equal to the cost of the publicity.

Advertising really costs nothing. While it uses funds it does not use them up. It helps the founder of a business to grow rich and then keeps his business alive after his death.

It eliminates the personal equation. It perpetuates confidence in the store and makes it possible for a merchant to withdraw from business without having the profits of the business withdrawn from him. It changes a name to an institution—an institution which will survive its builder.

It is really an insurance policy which costs nothing—pays a premium each year instead of calling for one and renders it possible to change the entire personnel of a business without disturbing its prosperity.

Advertising renders the business stronger than the man—independent of his presence. It permanentizes systems of merchandising, the track of which is left for others to follow.

A business which is not advertised must rely upon the personality of its proprietor, and personality in business is a decreasing factor. The public does not want to know the man who owns the store—it isn't interested in him but in his goods. When an unadvertised business is sold it is only worth as much as its stock of goods and its fixtures. There is no good will to be paid for—it does not exist—it has not been created. The name over the door means nothing except to the limited stream of people from the immediate neighborhood, any of whom could tell you more about some store ten miles away which has regularly delivered its shop news to their homes.

It is as shortsighted for a man to build a business which dies with his death or ceases with his inaction, as it is unfair for him not to provide for the continuance of his income to his family.

SYNOPSIS

Old Cyrus Martin, the head of the American soap trust, makes a bet of $30,000 with a friend, John Clark, a rival soapmaker, that his (Martin's) son Rodney would be making more money at the end of a year than Clark's son Ellery.

Martin takes his pretty secretary, Mary Grayson, into his confidence and enlists her co-operation. Rodney has been a spendthrift, and the father wants to make him reform and go to work.

Mary meets Rodney, and the son proposes marriage to her. Rodney tells his father about his proposal, and the old man pretends great anger. He tells Mary he will disinherit Rodney.

Rodney defies his father, and Mary is deeply touched at the lad's genuine affection for her. Mary makes a financial bargain with Martin to encourage the son to go to work.

Ambrose Peale, press agent, meets Rodney and agrees to go into business with the lad on a salary basis. Rodney has resolved to go into the soap industry and buck the trust.

Rodney, Peale and Mary go into the soap trade together. Rodney then endeavors to borrow $10,000 as capital for his newly formed company.

The offices of the "13 Soap company" are opened, and they advertise it as "the most expensive soap in the world." Peale talks advertising continually.

The 13 Soap company finds its expenses very heavy, and financial rocks loom ahead. Their chief business seems to have been to spend money for advertising under Peale's directions.

An alleged countess, who has appeared on the scene, desires to purchase the French rights for the sale of "13 Soap" and produces a draft for $20,000, which she desires to have cashed.

The "countess" is shown to be an impostor and despair settles over the 13 Soap company. The firm introduces her, however, to Ellery Clark. Father Martin visits the offices.

CHAPTER X—Continued

"But why pick on us?"

"I didn't start out to. You wished it on yourselves," said the countess. "I came to trim your father. You remember I wanted to see him. But I looked so soft you thought you'd grab me off and sell me the French agency of your 13 Soap. I didn't think your father could be as big a boob as you were, so I changed my plans."

"Now I'm going to get the cops to get you!" said Peale sternly.

"I should burst into laughter!" cried the countess. "Why, you pikers; I'm on. You're busted. You haven't got any money, and you have got a phony company!"

"Now, see here," expostulated Rodney.

"Preserve it, preserve it," the countess interrupted. "Don't forget I've understood everything you two guys were talking about." To Rodney she said:

"Kiss her hand; it's French stuff."

To Peale:

"Ah, there, you little life saver."

To Rodney:

"The money with you—l'argent avec vous? Gee, your French is rotten."

To Peale, who moved away from her:

"Shall I kiss her?"

Then she added after a pause:

"Send for the cops and I'll blow the whole thing to the papers."

She rested her gloved fingers coolly on her umbrella handle and surveyed the two boys.

"Well, I guess we're quits. If you had any money I'd ask for a piece of change to keep me quiet. But as it is I can't waste my time."

"You're not French at all?" Rodney queried.

"I was educated over there. Immense, wasn't I? You never tumbled at all."

"But why the foreign stuff?" Peale inquired.

"Well, I can talk good French, but my English is punk," explained the countess.

"You won't say anything now?" Rodney pleaded.

"No, I don't hit a fellow when he's down. Anyhow, we're all in the same class. Three fakes. I'll keep mum if you do."

Oh, money, money!

So much for the $10,000. The $2,500 was no nearer, as was presently to appear, when Ellery Clark stuck his head in the door, grinning, and asked to see Rodney a moment. Peale could not help noticing the change that had come over the countenance of Ellery.

"You seem very beastly pleased, Ellery," he said. "Is everything all right about father?"

"Oh, yes, so to speak, in a way," said Ellery, still grinning.

"What do you mean—so to speak, in a way?" Peale demanded, suddenly suspicious.

Oh, money, money!

And Ellery explained. The trouble was that Ellery couldn't get father on the telephone, and that did make it so much easier, Ellery thought. He did not fancy talking to father about money. That was the truth, and he couldn't get father because father was off on [illegible] somewhere, with his yacht and wouldn't be back till Monday. Apparently Ellery was relieved by this unavoidable postponement, and so he grinned and thought it was all right.

Poor Ambrose, thinking of the $2,500, thought it was all wrong.

The countess, taking in the general appearance of Ellery, thought something might be doing, for she eagerly and promptly dropped her handkerchief. Ellery pounced upon it at once, handing it to her with a flourish.

"Is there no one to take me to my taxi?" she cried next. It was a general invitation, which Ellery accepted on the spot.

"These American buildings are so big I am lost," she went on, with a more marked accent than she had used a moment ago.

"Ellery, you take the countess," suggested Rodney, willing now to get rid of them both.

"Oh, I'd love to," said Ellery. "I say charming, what?"

"Mme. la Comtesse de Beaurien—Ellery Clark," said Rodney, introducing them.

"Dee-lighted," cooed the countess.

"So am I," said Ellery, adding audibly, "Ripping little filly."

"You speak the French?" the countess purred as they went toward the door.

"No, not at all," said Ellery.

"A pitee."

"But I can speak German."

"Aber prachtvoll — ich liebe das schoene Deutsche."

"Ich auch"—

"Warum laden Sie mich nicht zum Thee ein?"

"Mit dem groessten"—

"Vergnuegen?"

"Yes," said Ellery, relieved, "that's the word—Vergnuegen."

"Au revoir, Mr. Martin," said the countess, looking back at Rodney over her shoulder. "Vous etes trop aimable. Je vous remercie beaucoup de votre politesse. Au revoir." Then in her American accent she added to Peale in an undertone, "So long, kid, call me up sometime."

And chattering a stream of German to Ellery, she went out.

In fact, it all went, the $2,500 and $10,000 together. Peale viewed the two departing figures sadly with mixed emotions. She was a ripping little filly indeed, that "countess," as that silly ass Clark had said, but the silly ass was having a ride with her now in a taxi, and the clever man, Ambrose Peale, was staying behind worrying about his advertising bills. Oh, money, money!

CHAPTER XI.

A Visit From Father.

DURING this trying month old Cyrus Martin, the soap king, had sat in his library in Fifth avenue, or in his swivel chair at his office, and wondered how things were going with the boy anyway. From such information as reached him, he was not so encouraged as he would have liked to be. A month was not long enough to tell, of course, in the normal course of things, but that fool advertising made another matter of it. Those huge billboards and electric signs and balloons and sandwich men—piffle all of it, but Martin knew what such things cost, and was sure that Rodney's company could not possibly stand it. He was worried. And he was annoyed too. These abominable sandwich men: he had had one set of them arrested that afternoon on the avenue. He couldn't stand it. People might know who were in this ridiculous 13 Soap company, and he should be well laughed at.

Another and contradictory thing was the rumor he had heard downtown yesterday that the Andover Soap people were backing Rodney's company, going to build a plant for them. In fact, putting one thing and another together, he decided he would drop down and give the boy a call at his office. It wouldn't be bad to see him again, and Mary Grayson too. So he presented himself at the new soap company's office, on Broadway, and was kept waiting for his pains. A Miss Burke took in his name, and he guessed that it caused some excitement, for he could hear Rodney's voice and another chatting inside while he cooled his heels.

When he was at last ushered in the place looked like a real office, on the whole, and there at a desk sat Rodney, talking through the telephone. His father caught something about "not considering it," and "not having any stock for sale"—"quite out of the question," et cetera, et cetera, as he took a chair.

"Well, well," thought Mr. Martin, rather pleased and proud. "What's this?"

Rodney in a moment dropped the telephone and espied his father.

"Why, hello, father!" he greeted him genially.

"Hello, son!" said Mr. Martin. He observed with astonishment that Rodney was very busy filing papers, opening and closing drawers and then [illegible] a letter viciously with a rubber stamp.

"Sit down, won't you?" said Rodney presently. "I'll be with you in just a moment."

"Thanks," said his father dryly.

"Have a cigar?" said Rodney, handing the old gentleman a box in an absentminded way.

"Thanks," said Mr. Martin, biting off the end and lighting it at the match which Rodney held for him. Rodney lighted one too.

"Surprised to see me, I suppose?" said his father presently.

"Not a bit," said Rodney, flourishing a contract and signing it. Mr. Martin had some curiosity to see what it could be, this thing which really looked like a contract, but his son turned it upside down and blotted it ostentatiously on his desk pad.

"There, that's done," he added. "Now, father, what can I do for you?"

"Well, my boy," said Mr. Martin, "I just dropped in for a social call. The fact is I've rather missed you."

"I've missed you, too, father," said Rodney.

"Thought I'd have a look in and find out how things were going," said Mr. Martin abruptly.

"Fine—fine!" said Rodney. "Everything breezing right along. Of course I'm always glad to see you," he added, pushing the buzzer, "but right now, father, I'm pretty busy, so you'll excuse me if"—

He got very busy indeed again with his papers.

"Well, if you can spare the time I'd like a little business talk with you, Rodney," said Mr. Martin, with a certain sarcasm.

"Certainly, in just a minute," said Rodney, still preoccupied with his papers, but pricking up his ears.

Ambrose Peale, coming in, stopped suddenly when he saw who their visitor was. Rodney looked up at him.

"That's all right; come right in," he said. "Father, you remember Mr. Peale? Peale, my father"—

"Indeed, yes, I recall very well," began Peale effusively.

Mr. Martin gruffly cut him off.

"How are you?" he said.

"A bit tired," said Peale, sitting down comfortably; "just back from Buffalo, where we're conducting a big campaign."

"Is that so?" said Martin, senior, crustily.

"Perhaps you've heard about it?" inquired Rodney, looking at his father.

"No. Why should I hear about it?" said that gentleman for Peale's benefit especially.

"I don't know," said Peale helplessly.

"You see, Mr. Peale handles all our advertising, and perhaps"— began Rodney.

"Oh, he does, does he?" said Mr. Martin dangerously. "Then it is to him I should address myself."

"Either or both of us," chirped Rodney.

"Then both of you listen to me," Martin began. "You've got to cut out this nonsense you call advertising"—

"What nonsense?" asked Rodney.

"Yes, what?" echoed Peale weakly.

MISS WINIFRED HOLT.

Miss Winifred Holt, secretary of the New York Association For the Blind, writes from Paris, where she has gone to establish with the help of French military authorities permanent surroundings and occupations for soldiers blinded by war:

"The purposes of the committee are to find the blind sufferers, some of whom are marooned in improvised hospitals, farmhouses or chateaux, and many of whom are segregated in the large hospitals or Red Cross stations.

"The committee will send visitors and teachers to these blind soldiers, furnish them with entertainment through reading, games, etc., and for those physically able it will start the task of putting eyes on their finger tips and giving them 'light through work.'

"We have found all the blind men in the hospitals of Paris and some in their homes. I estimate that there must be from 3,000 to 4,000 blind soldiers in this immediate neighborhood.

"We have begun teaching in the hospitals here and have among our pupils two very interesting and grateful blind officers who will make good teachers and attractive agents for the Paris Lighthouse when it is opened.

"The committee will seek to consider the men's individual interests and abilities and as far as possible to train them in trades and occupations for which their blindness has temporarily unfitted them or to find new openings in which they may become wage earners.

"When they have become proficient it is hoped wherever possible to return them to their home surroundings with the knowledge and tools to make them self helpful. When this is not practical it is hoped to establish them in congenial surroundings, where they may again have a feeling of independence and well being. Without prompt expert assistance soon after loss of sight the blind man is apt to become despondent, to lose his intelligence or to drift into an apathy from which it is difficult, if not impossible, to arouse him later.

"The work is very heartrending, but unspeakably essential. We found a blind soldier the other day who had not left his room in the hospital since the accident and was afraid to walk. After we told him of Fawcett's wonderful life the man jumped up, looking a new human being, and, to the amazement of his nurse and everybody else, strode forth, with his head lifted high, into the corridor and walked up and down with his hands behind his back like any other proud man. That is what hope does for these people, who were desperate until we brought them light.

"I wrote you last week of the young officer who was blind, had lost his arm and had only two fingers remaining on his right hand. He is doing wonderfully and is full of hope and light. His fiancee comes from Corsica to see him at the end of the week. I am to see her before she has the shock of receiving what remains of her soldier, so as to prepare her to appreciate what life may still hold for them both."

Miss Holt wrote that there should be a corps of at least fifty teachers to cope with the work and that funds were badly needed for materials for work and clothes. She hopes her American friends will send her a million dollars. "I can use all of it and to good purpose," she writes.

A Wedding Breakfast.

Serve a fruit cocktail for the first course. This must be ice cold and the fruit prepared long enough in advance for the several flavors to be well blended. Follow this with creamed chicken and mushrooms and potato and nut croquettes, else chicken croquettes and peas, with finger rolls, then tomato salad with dressing and last the ice cream, cake and coffee. Any light wine will be suitable, if there is no objection to its use. Serve with chicken course.

Shredded pineapple, grapefruit and orange pulp make a delicious cocktail. Prepare each separately and sweeten to taste. Let stand on ice several hours; then mix and let stand over night on ice. Serve in sherbet glasses with maraschino cherry on top of each.

TABLE LINENS.

How to Keep Up With the Styles In Household Linens.

No matter how great a pride the matron takes in her rugs and pictures, her eggshell china and cut glass or the shimmering glory of her silver, if she is a real housewife the corner of the home that lies closest to her heart is her linen closet. Here, amid the faint fragrance of dried rose leaves or lavender, are stored the fine tablecloths, the napkins, the extra towels and hemstitched sheets and, in fact, all the linens which her fingers have worked upon—clean and fresh and fragrant, a monument to her good housekeeping.

It is this pride of the home maker that makes the question of linens so important a one. Fashions change in these as well as in gowns, but so slightly that the linens of our grandmothers would be equally useful and in style today. In fact, in many instances the fine heavy linens are kept from one generation to the next.

The prevalence of round tables nowadays is bringing to the fore some very handsome tablecloths with a round design in the center and a deep border, and these entire tablecloths are far more in vogue than the kind that are bought by the yard and not much more expensive. Napkins may be bought to match, the fine dinner ones being, if possible, larger than ever, and the housewife who takes pride in her linen cannot do better than choose those which are nearly a yard square. For luncheon there come, of course, smaller sizes, and all are marked in one corner with the initial in white, since colors are never used for marking household linens, and nowadays are seldom used even for the hand embroidered centerpieces.

The damask table linen in striped design or with a flower wreath on it is especially popular just now, while luncheon cloths and doilies in damask with a simple hemstitched border are nice for the housewife who has a fine table and are much smarter than using a tablecloth for the noonday meal.

Of course every housewife knows that table linen must always be hemmed by hand if it is not hemstitched and should be ironed while wet that it may have a smooth gloss and yet be unstarched, for starched table linen is by no means in good taste.

For the center of the table the round doily edge with deep linen lace or cluny lace is much in vogue just now, having superseded both the embroidered centerpieces and the drawnwork, but such bits of the household linen are never regulated very much by changing season, but represent simply the taste of the housewife.

The use of cross stitch to mark the guest towels, which are so popular now, continues in favor and is also seen on some of the larger towels, but a single letter heavily worked in white is to be noted in the linens of the fashionable brides of the autumn.

Single initials also mark much of the bed linen this year, hemstitched sheets and pillow cases and plain counterpanes with pillow shams to match being most in vogue, though elaborate flowered sets are still seen in many of the shops that make a specialty of this sort of linen.

Doesn't Like Water.

Marion, Ind.—John Dinkle, arrested for vagrancy, told the police he had not taken a bath for seventeen years. When he was turned over to O. P. Wright, sheriff, it was directed a bath be given the man. Trusties of the jail applied soap and brushes, with the result that Dinkle received a scouring he will remember for some days.

Easy & Practical Home Dress Making Lessons

Prepared Especially For This Newspaper by Pictorial Review

MODISH, MODERATE AND MANNISH.

A very pretty new waist design that lends itself to various forms of development in crepe, silk, linen or satin.

The shirt waist that does not adapt itself to two or three distinct styles of development this season is sadly lacking in essentials. Take the accompanying design, for instance. It can be made with a tuck at either shoulder and a double turn-down collar, or it can have a deep V-shaped neck with a pointed collar, or it can be finished with a high collar and elbow sleeves, finished with shaped cuffs.

Linen, silk, silk crepe de Chine or faille would make up the model effectively. In medium size the waist requires 2¼ yards 36-inch material.

The cutting lesson given today will be useful in making almost any simple waist, for the directions are practically the same in every instance, especially when the shoulder yoke is to be simulated by extending the back over to the front.

First, the material is folded carefully and smoothly, exactly in half. To the right of the crosswise edge is placed the front section of the pattern, immediately over a lengthwise thread of the goods. The collars (either one preferred may be used) and the back are laid on the lengthwise fold. The stay, the piecing and the cuff are laid on a lengthwise thread between the back and the selvage edge, there being just enough space for these small sections of the pattern. The last section to be placed is the sleeve, which is arranged on a lengthwise thread.

When two or three-ply collars are used they are fashioned of the sheerest material possible and finished with a picot edge.

Turn-over collars of linen promise to be popular throughout the Fall and Winter and are finished with black bow ties, of the kind that has to be wrapped around the neck once and tied in front.

Very fine hand embroidery ornaments many of the latest collars, the designs being invariably simple.

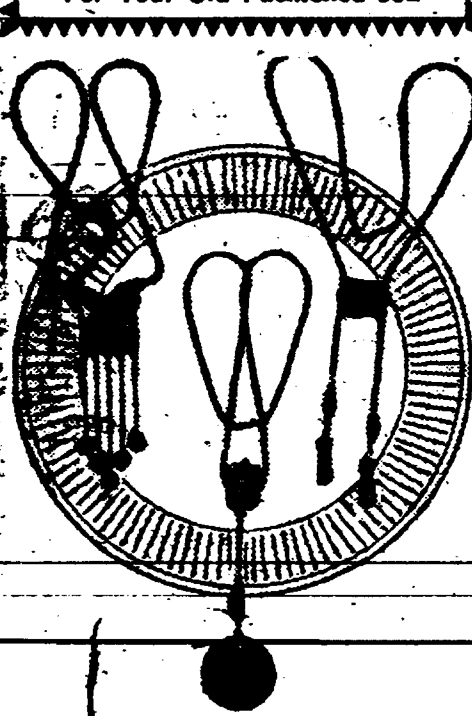
BLACK JET JEWELRY.

Three Beautiful Designs For Your Old Fashioned Jet.



NEW LAVALLIERES.

These beautiful necklaces are fashioned of dull gold with pendent settings of jet, jet and pearls, and onyx and pearls. With all sorts of jet trimmings in vogue, these designs will suggest fascinating possibilities for the old jet pieces laid away in your jewel box as castoffs. This is a season of jewelry, and new uses for old favorites in attractively wrought designs will be acceptable.

Mexico's complicated money trouble recalls the plowboy's remarks as to the "grub" the thrifty farm wife set before him—"good enough what there is of it" and "enough of it sich as it is."

Here is a mixture for bath bags which is truly delightful: Four pounds of fine oatmeal, two quarts of clean bran, one and a half pounds of powdered orris root, one and a half pounds of almond meal, one pound of white castile soap, powdered and dried, and three ounces of primrose sachet.

Instead of placing in cheesecloth bags, which is a wasteful way of using the delightful meal, sprinkle a little of the mixture on the moistened wash cloth.

Here is a bath for the emaciated which was a favorite with the ancients: Mix one tablespoonful of lavender water with several times the amount of pure olive oil. Apply a little at a time and rub it well into the body with the entire hand, using a rotary motion. Keep the body warm while taking the treatment.

Flowers of Many Countries.

The thistle, a plant with prickly stem and leaves, is the national flower of Scotland. It was chosen because the Scotch think it saved some of them from an enemy. This is the story: A long time ago a great army marched quietly into a Scotch city one night. They thought they could easily capture the city, for all the people would be sleeping. But just as they reached the city a barefooted soldier stepped on a thistle, which stung him so badly that he cried aloud. He was heard by the Scotch soldiers, who woke the people and they saved the city.

The shamrock, a kind of clover plant, is the flower of Ireland. St. Patrick first used it in telling of the Holy Trinity. There is a superstition that snakes will not touch this plant.

The fleur-de-lis is the emblem of France, but it is not known whether this comes from the tame lily or the iris or flag lily. There are many stories about the origin of this emblem, one of them being that an angel gave it to King Clovis when he was baptized.

The chrysanthemum, the flower of Japan, decorates much of the embroidery done by these people and the chrysanthemum fete is celebrated every year in Japan.

The flower of England is the beautiful rose, the queen of all flowers, which has blooms of many colors.

Goldy's Guest.

Goldy received his name some fourteen years ago, when he was a fluffy yellow kitten. Now he is a big, handsome cat with long soft fur almost orange in color.

One day not long ago Goldy went out into the highway, found a little field mouse and brought him home in his mouth.

Goldy's mistress keeps on the floor a clean newspaper, which serves as Goldy's dining table. The feast was spread when Goldy walked in and gently placed his little mouse right in the middle of it.

Whatever may have been his motive or whatever conversation passed between him and his guest, this much is certain: Goldy settled himself comfortably on the floor at a convenient distance from his guest, winked first with one eye and then with the other and began to sing.

The little mouse was unhurt, and after recovering from his fright he began to eat the dinner. Nibbling daintily at the food, he tasted first one thing and then another.

However, with apologies Goldy's mistress carried the little mouse outdoors and gave him his liberty. So, thanks to Goldy, one little field mouse had an amazing adventure to tell his family when he reached home.—Youth's Companion.

The Spartans.

A dancer once said to a Spartan: "You cannot stand so long on one leg as I can." "Perchance not," said the Spartan; "but any goose can."

Some Spartans as they traveled met a person who told them they were most fortunate, for a gang of robbers had just left the place. "No," answered one of them, "the robbers were the fortunate ones."

A traveler, observing the respect commanded by age in Sparta, said, "Here alone it is a pleasure to grow old."

A Spartan mother presented a shield to her son going to battle, with these words, "Son, return either with this, or upon this."

Another, to a son who complained that his sword was too short, "Add a step to it."

Demaratus, king of Sparta, being asked whether he was silent through folly or wisdom, replied, "A fool cannot be silent."

Skilled In First Aid Work.

"One of the greatest benefactors of humanity in Pittsburgh" is rather a high sounding way of referring to a fourteen-year-old scout, but that is what the doctors of the Southside hospital say about Howard Evans, a member of Southside troop No. 10. Within the last few months this boy, who is recognized as a first class scout and has won medals for heroic conduct, has rendered first aid to more than 200 injured persons and afterward saw to it that they were taken to the hospital and given proper treatment.—Pittsburgh Press.

My Fairyland.

I went to Fairyland this morn.
I went before the day was born.
A dewy path I walked along
Until I heard a fairy's song.

Beneath a giant tree I sat,
With grass and clover for a mat.
The busy bees began to hum;
They were so glad that I had come.

The meadow lark now welcomed me
From where he hopped beneath the tree.
A little squirrel just peeped out
To make his bow and hang about.

The fuzzy worm came forth to add
His greeting too; he was so glad.
The clover red began to play,
Entreating me that I should stay.

I'm glad I've found the fairylands,
The fairies real in throngs and bands
That have such power, such charm to give
And make me see and know they live.

TODAY'S FASHION NOTE

Semi-tailored dresses are in constant demand for the school girl and this design is well liked because it is suitable to development in materials that look smart and wear well. A Quaker collar of white linen and satin straps with tiny buttons are the chief decorative features. To make the dress requires 2½ yards 44-inch material, with 3-8 yard organdy for collar.

Salad Dressing to Keep In the Refrigerator.—The ingredients needed for this old time recipe are: One tablespoonful of mustard, one scant tablespoonful of salt, one cupful of cream (or milk), one tablespoonful of sugar, three eggs, one-half of a scant cupful of melted butter and one cupful of vinegar. Mix the mustard, salt and vinegar. Then add the yolks of the eggs, beaten thoroughly, then the butter, beating all the time. Add the cream, then the beaten whites of eggs and, lastly, the vinegar. Cook in a double boiler until the mixture thickens. This will keep a long time if kept in a covered jar in the refrigerator.

Cold Chicken Bouillon.—Get good roasting chickens and remove skin and fat when cleaning them. Put them on in cold water, adding at the same time one leek to each chicken; two tender carrots, one onion and a sprig of parsley. Let the chicken barely simmer until it falls to rags. Take it off the fire, remove superfluous grease and then strain. Clarify the bouillon with the whites and shells of two eggs and then strain again. Put on the ice until needed and serve in bouillon cups.

Inexpensive Peach Ice Cream.—Stir into a quart of boiling water a level tablespoon of flour, rubbed smooth in a little cold milk, add the yolks of two well beaten eggs, strained. Stir carefully, cooking only a few minutes; add one cupful of sugar. Beat the whites to a stiff froth and stir them into the custard after taking from the fire. This gives a creamy taste and is an improvement when cooled. Add one-half of a pint of thick cream with the same measure of sifted peach pulp with a little granulated sugar.

Opportunity Awaits Makers of Paper Boxes; Their Usefulness Increasing

In days gone by the question of bringing to this city a manufacturer of paper boxes, because of logical reasons why it is practicable to make here, and place the product on the market was discussed and investigated, but nothing came of the inquiries then made. Now that renewed interest is taken to secure manufacturers, the following facts should be of value:

Two factors have contributed largely to the growth of the paper-box industry in the United States during the past few years. One is the great increase in the number of manufacturers who are marketing goods in individual containers and the other is the substitution of paper boxes for wood.

In the first case advertising has had a great influence. Through it consumers have been taught to buy packages instead of from bulk. Instead of scooping crackers from a barrel where the cat had been reposing a few minutes previous, the dealer now hands the customer a neat package containing the desired goods. And the same principle has been worked out in hundreds of other lines. In the second case the increase in the cost of wooden containers, due to the growing scarcity of wood, has broadened the box-markers' market.

According to American Industries in 1899 "there were in the United States 729 box factories, employing 27,653 persons, who received annually in wages $8,151,625, and who produced by their combined labor a paper-bag product valued at $27,316,317. It was during the next ten years, however, that the paper-box industry enjoyed its greatest growth. During the period from 1900 to 1910, the number of factories increased to 949, employing 39,514 people and paying wages of $14,015,383 annually. The value of the product of these factories was estimated at $54,450,015, of which value $28,733,774 had been added by manufacture. In addition to this, boxes to ther alue of $6,098,306 were produced by other private establishments which did not engage in box making as a chief industry."

J. Phillip Bird, who furnished the information to American Industries, says in another portion of his article:

"The story of the paper-box is the story of many other industries. Startingf rom humble beginnings and made in small quantities, the box has grown to be an indispensable commodity in modern commerce. The cheapness and variety of uses to which it can be put, have in a great measure brought the box to its present estate."

9 Months of War Cost Germany 260,000 Men

pensive sort alpl through the summer in Poland. We certainly do not exaggerate if we add 10 per cen or tom ake the argument stronger, rather less, to the total number of German dead in the total period and call it, on the analogy of the British lists 650,000 for the German Empire in the eleven months ending July 31.

Now let us check this hypothetical figure by the known figures of the Austro-Hungarian dead in the same period. They should come to 80 per cent of the German force for force. That would give us 520,000 Austro-Hungarian dead. Now we hhave as our known minumum for the Austra-Hungarian dead to July 1 about 505,000.

German List 650,000 July 31

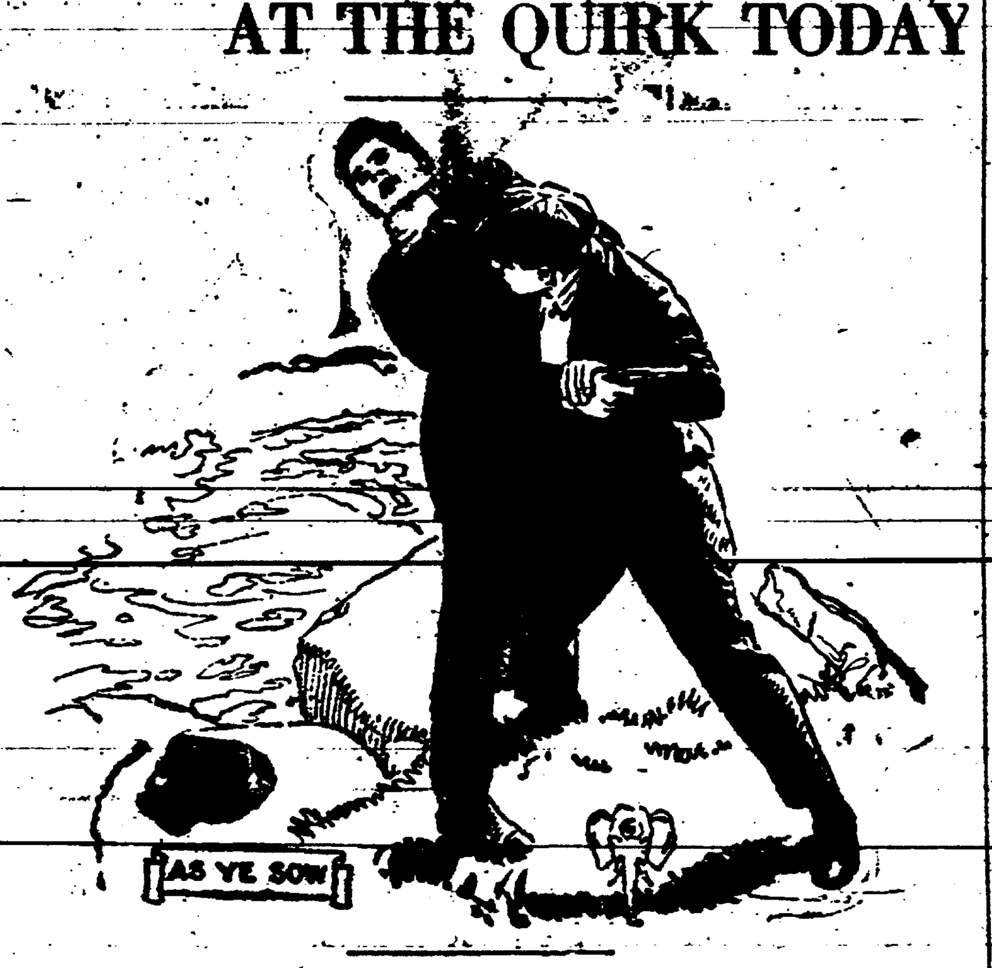
Lastly, we come to the less valuable, but curious and interesting, scraps of evidence afforded by occasional pieces of news published in their papers and relative to special categories of their fighting forces. Among these facts we have the very proper and legitimate pride of certain German professions in the sacrifice they have made upon the field for their country. The German lawyers, for instance, have given their fellow-citizens a list of their number dead in the field among those called to the colors, or voluntarily enlisted.

The Bavarian schoolmasters have done the same. Other special sections of the German population have favored us with similar all-important information. And we discover in every case that in the first ten or eleven months of the war these losses in dead fluctuate around ten per cent of the total number of men engaged.

The German Empire has armed from 7,000,000 to 7,500,000 of men so far. It should, therefore, have lost in dead—upon the proportion of these particular professions—one-tenth—that is, from 700,000 to 750,000. Allowing for the excess due to their particular position and the preponderance of reserve officers among them, we can fairly scale that down to at least more than 650,000.

It is but a round figure and a rough estimate taken from but a small corner of the total evidence available, but it is striking. The first eleven months of the war roughly corresponds to a total Teuton loss, permanent and temporary, of 6,400,000 or thereabouts, and we set down that figure.

"AS YE SOW," BENEFIT OF MARY PATERSON COURT AT THE QUIRK TODAY



Manager Dan Darleigh has procured for the benefit performance at The Quirk today, a play bound to please the members and friends of Mary Patterson Court, Order Amaranth, "As Ye Sow" is the attraction whose plot is like this:

Mrs. St. John lives with her two sons, Frank and John, and her daughter, Dolly, in a small town on the Cape Cod coast. John has been studying for the ministry and is appointed to take a place in the little church. Frank, the black sheep of the family, goes to New York to seek his fortune.

He gets a position in the sales office of an automobile company. Dora Mason—daughter of a millionaire, persuades her father to buy her a new automobile. They go to the sales rooms where Frank is working. She is attracted to Frank immediately.

Frank persuades Dora to run away and get married. The night that Dora leaves, her father dies of heart disease. Frank takes to drink and becomes very abusive. A little baby girl is born and Frank becomes jealous and devotes more of his time to his fast friends. Dora asserts herself and says that unless he reforms, he need notc ome back.

The nurse has the baby out in the park. Frank steals her. Heg oes to the little Cape Cod town and leaves the baby on the doorstep of his mother's home. He runs away and ships on board a fishing schooner. When Mrs. St. John finds the little baby, she thinks it is a gift from heaven to take the place of her lost boy, Frank.

After mounring three years for her child, Dora thinks a trip to the sea shore would brighten her up and gets off at the little Cape Cod town, not knowing that it is Frank's home. John the brother, falls in love with Dora. Dora's heart has gone out to little Katie, little dreaming that it is her own child. The day of the wedding arrives. The fishing schooner that Frank is on, is driven ashore and wrecked. A life boat is safely launched. Frank is rescued and brought ashore. He wanders out to the edge of the cliff, followed by Steve, an old friend of his evil days. There is a struggle, they lose their balance, and Frank falls over the cliff, the gun explodes and kills Steve.

"IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE" AT QUIRK TOMORROW

Seats are now selling for the engagement of Cohan and Harris' latest farce hit, "It Pays to Advertise," due at the Quirk Theatre, Friday September 24th, for an engagement of one night only.

Rodney Martin, a rich man's son, who has been the despair of his father because of his disinclination to go to work, is persuaded, through love for his father's pretty stenographer, to go into business after his father has disinherited him. Rodney's father is a soap king and the son decides to go into the same business and adopts a strenuous advertising campaign to attract the attention of buyers. Father doesn't believe in advertising and tries to dissuade his son, the only result being to make the boy plunge more heavily into the advertising game.

This, in brief, is the story of the play, the complete plot of which it would be impossible to give in a way that would adequately express its intensely humorous situations to the feminine portion of the audience.

LYONS MAN GETS LAMB'S LEGS MIXED

Lyons.—Franklin H. Miller, of Montezuma street, this village, is the owner of two freak lambs. One of them, which he purchased some time ago, has five legs. Its four legs are normal, but directly back of the left foreleg there is a fifth leg protruding from the body. On this leg, from the knee-joint down, the leg appears to be double, with two separate feet attached.

The other freak consists of a three-legged lamb, which Mr. Miler purchased yesterday. This animal has three normal legs, but none in front on the left side and there is no sign of any shoulder on this side. Both of the lambs appear on this side. Both of the lambs appear to be in perfect health and move about as well as any normal lamb.

Mr. Miller will exhibit his freaks at several fairs this fall, starting at the Waterloo fair tomorrow.

WORK OF U. S. DOCTORS IN SERBIA NEAR END

Naples.—Dr. Richard P. Strong, head of the American Sanitary Commission in Serbia, on way to the United States, said today the majority of the American doctors engaged in Red Cross work in Serbia would leave on October 10.

The entire Serbian army and numbers of the people had been vaccinated against cholera and typhus, Dr. Strong said.

New York—The freight handlers' strike is seriously interfering with the delivery of stock and some of the transportation lines have made very few deliveries up to a late hour. Third British War Budget

Yesterday, Reginald McKenna Chancellor of the Exchequer, introduced in the British House of Commons the third British budget since the beginning of the war. Itc alls for the largest expenditure on record, and the imposition of the most drastic and far-r-e-aching taxes in the history of the United Kingdom. The chancellor estimated the revenue of the current year at $272,000,000 and the expenditure at $1,590,000,000. In the latter part of the year, hes aid, the total daily rate of expenditure might be $5,000,000, and that the country would start the financial year 1916-17 with a dead weight debt of $2,200,000,000.

The duty on tea is to be increased 550 per cent. That on sugar is also to be largely increased, but the consumer will have to pay only an extra penny per pound, for the sale of this commodity is now regulated by royal commission, which will reduce the price to refiners and leaders. On a considerable number of imported manufactures a duty of 33 1-3 per cent. ad valorem will be imposed, but the chancellor explains that the objects of such taxation are "purely temporary and without regard to a permanent effect on trade," being primarily designed to discourage imports and remedy the foreign exchange situation. Spirits and beer remain untouched in the new schedules the reason being probably that these products are already so heavily taxed that the sale and consumption of them have materially decreased, and that an additional tax might lessen rather than increase the revenue from them.

It is proposed to add 40 per cent. to the existing income tax rate, and to reduce the exemption limit to $130. The very wealthy must contribute to the Government more than one-third of their income. There will be a special tax on "war profits," 50 per cent. of the proceeds above the amount assessed for the income tax last year being subject to levy. Half penny mail will be abolished entirely, and the weight heretofore carried in the mails for a penny will be reduced Rates on telegrams and telephone messages are increased one-third.—Utica Dispatch.

Germans Send More Troops to Western Front

They Anticipate Early Drive by Allies Who Are Strengthening Fortifications in France and Belgium.

London.—Advices reaching London from German and Dutch sources indicate that the German positions in Belgium and France are being heavily re inforced in anticipation of an early general offensive by the Allies. Unusually large movements of troops westward have been noticed in the last week. These, observers say, are in the main fresh levies apparently just out of training.

In addition to strengthening their fortifications along the Belgian coast, which have been severely battered by Franco-British war ships in their occasional bombardments, the Germans are said to be rebuilding the fortifications at Lillie. Once a strong frontier fortress, the French abandoned it before the first German drive on Paris and after destroying asm uch of the fortified work asp ossible. As the key to the entire German front in Northern France, it is expected every effort will be made to provide as formidable a barrier to an allied advance as military engineering can devise.

The feeling is growing here that a wide spread offensive will begin in the near future. The autumn rains are due before another six weeks, and the wet season will preclude any great operations, especially in the low lying country along the coast. This fact leads observers here to believe General Joffre and Field Marshal French will order their advance by mid-October at the latest.

BULGARIA'S ATTITUDE GIVES LONDON ANXIETY

London.—Serbians see in the bombardment of their northern frontier an attempt by Germany to force a pas sage through their country to aid the Turks against the Allie in Gallipoli. Advices from Nish state that there are 800,000 German troops available for this purpose.

In order to succeed in this movement the Germans would have to conquer the eastern half of Serbia. Their further progress toward Turkey would then depend on the attitude of Bulgaria. The cause for the mobilization of Bulgaria's forces remains unexplained. One report from Athens says mobilization has been postponed, but the fact remains that Bulgarian officers and men have been summoned from all the neutral countries to rejoin the colors and are now returning home.

Uncertainty exists, even in official circles here, regarding the intentions of Tsar Ferdinand and his advisers. The Tsar has always been ambitious of ruling the united Balkan nations and a few years ago took the title of Tsar. The Kaiser recently was reported to have offered him the "crown of Byzantium." Dr. Radoslavoff, the Bulgarian Premier, has announced the signing of a convention with Turkey for the maintenance of armed neutrality. This, taken in connection with the recent cession of territory by Turkey to Bulgaria, military observers here believe, indicates that Bulgaria will not fight against Turkey.

Diplomists Puzzled

Would she join Germany or allow the Germans an unobstructed passage through her territory to Turkey? That is the question which is now puzzling the Entente representatives at Sofia and the other Balkan capitals. These representatives are now engaged in an effort to reconstruct the Balkan League and prevent the different States from warring among themselves.

Much depends on the attitude of Roumania and of Russia. The Roumanians would certainly not look upon any increase of Bulgaria's power with friendly eyes. With Russia more than holding her own against the Austro-Germans in Galicia and Volhynia, it is believed here that the Balkan Powers would hestitate before going contrary to the wishes of their big neighbor and former protector.

Bulgarian officials here repeat Dr. Radoslavoff's statement that Sofia's position is merely the precautionary one of armed neutrality. Mr. Nincoff, First Secretary of the Bulgarian Legation here, reiterates the declaration Mr. Minchoff, the Bulgarian Minister, made on Wednesday to that effect, adding:—

"Up to now we have been the only civilians in the armed camp of Europe. Roumania and Greece have been mobilized for a considerable time, and even Switzerland is under arms. Why, therefore, is it so astonishing that Bulgaria should follow suit? Why should mobilization mean any change in our national policy?

"I am not prepared to make any prophecies, as they might fall of fulfilment owing to unexpected developments. Wem ust wait and see."

British Press Watchful

Meantime the British press is watching the Balkan situation with keen attention, if not anxiety.

"At the best the Bulgarian stroke marks the whole Balkan situation as urgent and immediate," says the Westminster Gazette. "This may not be a misfortune if it compels all the States, and the Allies with them, to come to definite decisions about the Bulgarian demands.

"The Germans are threatening to join the Austrians in another attack on Serbia. This may be partly a bluff but it might come to a dangerous reality. If Bulgaria were willing to throw her lot with the Turks and the Central Powers, then we should see the unloosing of incalcuable forces throughout the peninsula."

The Gazette adds that this is stated merely as a hypothesis and that it does not intend as yet to attribute any design to Tsar Ferdinand; nevertheless, it is worth while to get to the bottom of the matter.

DR. DUMBA URGES VIENNA TO GRANT REQUEST

London.—Dr. Constantin Dumba, Austro-Hungarian Ambassador at Washington, according to a despatch received here last night from Berlin, has requested the Foreign Office at Vienna to pass at once on his application for a leave of absence, so he may report personally to his government. Dr. Dumba says he desires to leave the United States aboard the steamship Rotterdam and that he can request safe conduct from the American government only after his formal recall.

TEACHERS OF FIFTH DISTRICT MET TODAY

Sixty teachers were in conference at an informal session this morning at the high school. The purpose of the meeting is to make tentative plans for the carrying out of the "home project" idea among the schools in the 5th. district. "The idea is new in Fulton," District Superintendent Gardner says, "and we will call several other meetings in the near future. At the present time, we are only discussing the plan in general." The teachers met again this afternoon and will continue the discussion.

The "home project" idea is to encourage the boys attending the district schools to engage in farming and other handicraft work. Domestic pursuits, such as sewing, cooking, etc., planned for the girl students. The work will take the form of a contest and the winners will be awarded ribbon prizes. Each school will have its contest, and a day will be set aside in which the work will be on evhibition in the school rooms. It is planned to get the co-operation of parents. The evening of the exhibition day will be devoted to a social session, a program being arranged and the prizes awarded at that time.

Corn, pumpkins, melons, potatoes, of all varities, in fact, practically all products of the farm will be grown by the pupils, and the blue-ribbon corn exhibit will be brought to Fulton and submitted at the Winter Corn show.

MOSCOLINIO'S ARREST. BEGINS DEPARTMENT'S CRUSADE ON VIOLATORS

Joseppi Moscolino, owner and manager of the Riverside Hotel was arraigned in City Court this morning charged with selling liquor on Sunday, a violation of the State Liquor Tax law. Moscolino was represented by Hubert L. GiGlman, and wavied examination. He was held for the Grand Jury under $1000 bail, which he will furnish.

Moscolino does a thriving business in thirst quenching at his Riverside emporium but always decided that respect for the law was the safest rule in business until a warm Sunday some few weeks ago. Some of his customers appeared on that day and it is alleged that Moscolino served them. Chief Dyer's men were on the watch, however, and unrecognized by any of the "lookouts." swooped down and gathered the evidence which resulted in the service of a warfant on Moscolino by Officer Smith Monday. The arrest of Moscolino marks the inauguration of a police crusade against Sunday selling which will continue until every hotel-keeper in the city who persists in selling liquor on Sunday is arrested.

CITY HEALTH OFFICER MAKES INSPECTION OF STATE ST. SCHOOL

Dr. G. C. Whitaker, city health officer, today completed his inspection of the pupils in the State street school Dr. Whitaker began his health survey in the school Monday and 200 pupils were examined during the week. The examination resembles that given applicants for life insurance, and consists of a thorough test of the heart and lungs an examination of the glands of the throat and of the throat proper for symptons of largngitis and tonsilitis; an inspection of the teeth, the hair, the eyes and skin. The examination takes some time, and some of the pupils object strenously to it. If any symptons of contagious or chronic diseases are found the parthemselves are also instructed in hygienic methods.

After his examination at the State Street school today, Dr. Whitaker complimented the pupils of the first grade in a short address, in which he told the little ones that they had occasioned less trouble and had maintained better order during the examination than any of the upper classes.

In conversation with a reporter for The Times this afternoon Dr. Whitaker denounced as an falsehood the statement made that several cases of contagious disease were thought to have been transmitted to healthy pupils last year because of the fact that the school physician used the same lead pencil in examining the throats of each child without taking the proper precautions against infection. Dr. Whitaker said the statement was absolutely incorrect.

"KID" CROIER AND SHANNON IN BOUT

Tonight for the first time since the Ryan A. C. conceived the idea of having only amateurs take part in their boxing shows, a ten-round bout will be staged. Rochester, Albany and other cities weekly have a ten-round final.

The principals in the final tonight will be "Kid" Crozier, the messenger boy fighter, of Syracuse, and Bobbie Shannon, the school boy. Both are without a doubt the best amateur boxers of Syracuse and will stage an interesting bout.

A six-round bout precedes the final in which "Young" Murphy, a boy coming up fast, and "Battling" Johnson will fight. Six other bouts are on the program.

CONCORD GRAPES WILL BRING GOOD PRICES

Penn Yan.—Samuel McMath & Co., one of the largest grape shippers in this section, makes the following statement: "After a careful study of the situation, we believe that the growers who have first-class Concord grapes will realize good average prices this season. Everybody knows that Concords are a light crop and a larger percentage than is generally realized were damaged by hail. While the grapes were not hit so hard in some sections as in others, many vineyards were practically ruined and will not bear fruit fit for even wine or grape juice purposes. We know of growers who have sold their hailhit grapes at 22 a ton.

MAYOR DOES NOT SEE NEGLECT OF THE TROLLEY CO.

Angered and Remains Under the Impression That Traction Officials Complied With Order—Apparently Sees No Holes.

Mayor F. E. Fox was indignant this morning at what he termed the "unfairness" of The Times in publishing last night an article concerning an order issued by the Board of Public Work demanding that the Syracuse Lakeshore and Northern Railways repair the brick paving between and adjoining its tracks through the city. In an article last night The Times was in error, according to the Mayor. He said the trolley company started to repair the paving the day after the order was issued and that the company had employed its gang at the work "practically ever since."

The Mayor further stated that Superintendent Frank Rumsey of the Board of Public Works came to him the day after the order was issued to the trolley company and told him the company's men were already at work.

"Mr. Rumsey could have given you this information had you asked for it and the City Engineer was also in a position to tell you this," said the Mayor this morning.

To go back a few months to the time when the order passed, Mr. Rumsey asked one newspaper reporter, and probably others, the day after the Board passed an order on the trolley company, to refrain from publishing the order, for the reason that the trolley company was at that time busily engaged in putting in some new iron poles on South First st., and were materially aiding the Public Works gang there, and the Board did not wish to risk the good-will of the company. Mr. Rumsey's request was compiled with, and no local paper printed the order. At that time Mr. Rumsey said the company's gang would start the paving repairs as soon as it had finished with the work at First and Oneida sts.

There is evidently a discrepancy somewhere and either the ears of Mayor Fox or the newspaper men failed of their purpose at the time, for the Mayor says Mr. Rumsey told him the work began the following day.

An inspection of South First st., near and below Broadway discloses the fact that the trolley company has repaired a portion of the paving at the junction of Broadway and First st. and several small patches south of Broadway which were in bad condition. The paving about the switch at Broadway is still badly in need of repair, and no trace of repair work between Broadway and Rochester st. can be found. Directly in front of the Library there is a hole in the paving a foot deep and all along the block the paving is in worse condition than the macadam road. Since the Board of Public Works shows no inclination to commence paving operations on First st. this year the trolley company will probably include the Broadway-Rochester st. stretch in their repair work.

On South First st. directly in front of the City Hall, the paving is in wretched condition. At Fire Headquarters there are several holes left when the trolley company force replaced the paving after track repairs.

DYER'S MEN MAKE ARREST OF GROSKI IN OSWEGO

Joseph Groski, wanted by the Ware, Mass., police, was arested by the Fulton police in Oswego Wednesday night and will be held in the City Jail to await instructions from the Ware police. Groski is wanted in Ware on a serious charge.

Groski came to this city ten months ago, and obtained employment in the American Woolen mills. He seems to be quite a favorite among the young women of the Polish colony and his marriage to a young Polish girl had already been planned. Last week, however, the police here were notified to arrest him on charges preferred by his old sweetheart in Massachusetts. When inquiries regarding his whereabouts began, some of his friends became suspicious and he prepared for a hasty departure to other parts. The police were notified that he was living in Rochester st. and last Sunday night, Captain Norton and two officers surrounded the house. Groski heard the arrival of the police and jumping from the second story window easily eluded Captain Norton, who ran into a clothesline in the lark while chasing the fugitive.

When Chief Dyer was notified of Groski's escape, he put two officers at work watching the man's friends, and his sweetheart here was closely shadowed. Wednesday afternoon she boarded a trolley car for Oswego and a detective trailed her to a rooming house where she met Groski.

The Fulton department was notified at once and Chief Dyer with several officers left for Oswego, determined that Groski should not escape again. The owner of the rooming house surrendered the keys of Groski's room to the officers and the fugitive was found in bed.

Through his attorney, James R. Somers, Groski effected a compromise with his Fulton sweetheart yesterday and she withdrew a charge which she had preferred against him, and the couple were taken to Oswego and married. Groski hopes to come to some agreement with the Ware police within the next few days.

SEEK WHEREABOUTS OF MR. ORT'S RELATIVES

Martin Ort, whose place of residence has not yet been learned, died at the Lee Memorial hospital yesterday of injuries received in an accident at theh Rock Cut Stone company's plant in Syracuse some weeks ago. Mr. Ort was confined in a Syracuse hospital until shortly before he came to this city, where he expected to find relatives and work. He was taken sick again, soon after his arrival here, as a result of the injuries he received in Syracuse and was admitted to the hospital. The Compensation Commission and officials of the stone company are trying to locate Mr. Ort's relatives.

Government Buys Silver

Demand from banks and merchants for newly minted subsidiary or fractional silver coins—no dollar pieces are now struck—has led the director of the mint to purchase 4,375,000 fine ounces of silver, almost as much as was purchased during the entire year of 1914.

Owing to world wide depression in the price of silver, chiefly because India and other countries, which usually take large quantities, have not been so extensively in the market this year, purchases have been made by the director of the mint at an average price of 48 cents an ounce. There are 385.8 grains of silver to the dollar in subsidiary coins. An ounce of silver contains 480 grains, so that the Government makes a profit of 74.2 grains on every dollar's worth of coinage, less, of course, the cost of coinage.

On August 31 there were in the United States Treasury 474,624,521 silver dollars deposited to redeem silver certificates. There are financial experts who contend that there is no necessity for such a vast accumulation, and that, instead of purchasing new silver for use in the minting of subsidiary coins, the Government should melt up some of these dollars. Such a procedure would not in their opinion endanger the redemption of the silver certificates, any more than is the redemption of United States and old demand notes outstanding endangered because the gold on deposit for that purpose is considerably less than the total value of the notes. — Utica Dispatch.

Straight and Narrow Way

The difficulty which ex-prisoners find in obtaining employment is made the subject of a report by the Prison Association of New York. It is recorded that various employers frankly state that they do not wish to employ ex-convicts, and that unimpeachable certificates of character are required from all applicants.

This works regrettable hardship, of course. It seems a perversion of justice that when a man or woman wishes sincerely to "go straight" the gates are shut in precisely the direction he or she must seek in order to make reclamation possible.

Yet in another sense this is the inexorable penalty, exacted by organized society since the beginning, and which in any state of passable morals must automatically obtain, more or less. In the case of females particularly the fruits of deviation from the paths of rectitude and virtue have for centuries been grievous. Strange as it has seemed to many commentators and reformers, too, the chief instruments of retribution upon women have been women. It is an axiom of long standing that the most inexorable critics of fallen women are not men, but women. Inveigh as they may against the so-called "double standard," some of our good friends the Suffragists find with dismay that the vials of scorn do not pour out so much in a fight of "sex against sex" as when sex is arrayed against itself.

In the case of the convicts, it might be wished that greater leeway could be shown, and by all the rules of Christian morality leniency should be shown. Unfortunately for theory, business, the professions, the trades, [illegible] intrinsically upon an individual stability relatively and theoretically permanent. And the truth is, of course, that among the thousands upon thousands of workers throughout the country only a small percentage are found to be black sheep. Indeed, considering the trusts lodged in employes, the volume of business they transact, the amount of money they are called upon to handle and the general sobriety and intelligence required, the extent of fidelity is simply incredible, considering always the weakness of human nature. The good faith, loyalty and reliability of employes generally is a matter to increase rather than diminish confidence in mankind.

And in this fact, no doubt, lies in part the explanation both of the difficulty those who have proved untrustworthy find in obtaining places of trust, and the lack of sympathy entertained by the average working citizen, with the system of pampering prisoners. The great army of workers, honest without being paid for it in compliments or money, sober and steady without having it paraded in the papers, true as steel and morally above reproach, cannot understand why special opportunities should be offered to those who have proved false. While employers on their side, recognizing the fact that for crook there are thousands of the upright, hesitate before taking any chances.—Auburn Advertiser.

KILL THE "I CAN'TS"

Rochester's Chamber of Commerce is engaged in deciding a competition that has for its object the beautifying of the business section of the city. Visitors to the Flower City may remember the Powers building, which is without ground for gardens. In this case the judging is confined to the character and care taken of window boxes. In closing the competition and making awards the judges announced that every one who made a window box put the community in his debt.

As a result of the contest it is estimated that next year will witness a wide adoption of window boxes as means of adornment of business buildings—a feature that is greatly desired by Rochester people who would have the business section of the city compare with other points for beauty. In this respect it is realized that beautifying a business section calls for a larger measure of public spirit than does the improvement of home grounds, because the same expenditure of money gives much smaller results.

In conversing with a Fulton citizen about the suggestion made in these columns for the formation of a society that will look after the beautification of the city's homes, public grounds and public buildings, the gentleman undertook to explain why the idea of making good along that line is impracticable; yes, impossible of accomplishment here. When Rochester set about to make itself famous for beauty there were persons who said, "It can't be done; the people are not interested." But Rochester has done it and Fulton can do it, and when it is done the laugh will be on the other man. There are people who tell us that without money the city cannot hope to keep free from weeds the streets of the city. "Can't" has not accomplished a thing in this world. The word was used effectively to thwart the desire of a majority of the stockholders in the Chamber of Commerce who wanted the city to secure an efficient form of government. It was said "It can't be done," and it was not done, simply because every known way of trying to do it was not tried.

If a city ever was capable of improvement it is Fulton, but in order to attain a desired point along the line of improvement, the kibosh must be put all over the "I can'ts."

COUNTY HIGH SCHOOLS

Within the past five years, Mississippi, regarded as a backward state educationally, has established a county school system that is arousing interest in every other Southern State, and causing itself to be felt in the agricultural development of the state in an unmistakable manner.

The system has the agricultural or county high school as its keynote, and its success has been almost phenomenal, not only in results attained but in the popularity of the new methods. The schools are thoroughly practical—vocational schools in the best sense. They teach boys to become scientific farmers and girls to become scientific home-makers.

Their agricultural courses are in the hands of experts, most of whom came from the great Agricultural and Mechanical College of the state, itself a credit to the commonwealth, and a tremendous power for good. Their domestic science courses are in hands of girls from the Industrial Institute and College, a college for women in the forefront of the South's educational institutions.

In every single county where these schools have been established, they have been successes, and other counties in the state are building them just as fast as they can. In five years, there will not be a county in the state without an excellent agricultural high school, or vocational school modeled along similar lines.

Graduates of these schools are ready for work on the farm if it is necessary or they are prepared for collegiate courses at any good technical school. They reach the country people vitally, and closely. They are social centers, and sources of an influence that can hardly be estimated.—Pensacola (Fla.) News.

GROWERS WORK FOR GOOD SEEDS

Association Working to Assure Vegetable Growers of Pure Seeds---Tested Houses Made Known.

Philadelphia.—A vigorous effort to solve the seed problem created by the great European war, which confronts the American farmer is planned by the Committee on Seed Standardization of the Vegetable Growers of America, which met at the association's headquarters here yesterday. According to the testimony of the foremost seed experts of this country at the recent Vegetables Growers' convention at Cleveland the present demoralization of this country's seed supply is due to the action of foreign seed growers at the outbreak of the war in dumping on the American market vast quantities of poor quality seeds. The attitude of foreign seed producers at that time was that as no more seeds could be grown in the countries at war no new orders would come in, and all orders ought to be filled regardless of the quantity of the seeds supplied and the possibility of future business. Fearing a seed shortage, American buyers at that time poured huge orders into the seed growing firms of Belgium and also France, which rapidly absorbed the supply of good seeds, after which seed orders were filled with inferior seeds which had been rejected in previous selections, or old seeds that had lain for years in the warehouses.

As a result this country has been flooded with inferior seeds and farmers and vegetables growers have suffered severely because crops which they have sown either have not germinated at all or have produced thin crops of inferior quality. As a remedy, Francis C. Stokes, President of the Stokes Seed Farm Company, one of the oldest and most reliable seed houses in the country, proposes that all seeds be put to exhaustive tests under the supervision of a committee of experts appointed by the National Committee of the Vegetable Growers of America, and that tests be made for fertility, quality and general desirability, and that seeds so tested shall be accordingly stamped and be registered and that full particulars of the tests and the names of the seed houses complying with them shall be sent to all members of the Vegetable Growers' Association. The Seed Standardization is at present hard at work, elaborating the plan and arranging for its application, and if it can be successfully carried out they declare it will go a long way toward guaranteeing members of the organization from suffering from the defective seeds at present on the market in such large quantities.

"When Dreams Come True," which comes to this city to The Quirk, Monday, September 27, night only, is by Philip Bartholomae, author of the two farcial successes, "Over Night" and "Little Miss Brown."

The author has indicated the same originality in the book of "When Dreams Come True" as he did in his farces. He recounts the story of a wealthy young New Yorker who awakens to find his allowance cut off on account of his adventures with a French dancer.

The first act is on shipboard, and shows the boy returning for the parental scolding as a steerage passenger. This setting lends itself to many singing numbers the first ensemble showing a chorus of immigrants of native songs and pastimes.

A smuggling plot is interwoven in the story, to which the "Dream Girl" is an innocent party. All sorts of trouble is heaped upon the pair until "dreams come true" in the final act.

Night prices: 25c, 50c, 75c, $1.00 and $1.50.

Matinee: 25c, 50c, 75c and $1.00.

TO CELEBRATE STANTON DAY IN THE STATE

Seneca Falls.—Mrs. Harriet Stanton Blatch, leader of the New York State Women's Political Union, will return from England soon enough to participate in the centennial celebration here of the birth of her mother, Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton. While the state wide observance of Mrs. Stanton's natal day will be held October 20, the ceremonies here will attract the leaders of the equal suffrage cause here a few days earlier.

Mrs. Blatch has sent one of her co-workers, Miss Jane Pincus of New York, here to aid the local suffrage leaders in perfecting the details of the celebration. It is probable that the principal part of the centennial observance will be held in the Johnson Opera House. That structure stands on the site and was partially rebuilt from the Wesleyan church in which the first woman's rights convention in this state was held in the summer of 1848.

In addition to Mrs. Blatch, Prof. Nathaniel Schmidt of Cornell University and Dr. John L. Elliott, head worker of the Hudson Guild of New York, will make addresses. The celebration is to be utilized by suffrage workers throughout the county to add enthusiasm to their work of securing endorsement for the woman's suffrage constitutional amendment to be voted on in November. Delegations from all parts of the county will attend the meeting.

Give The Evening Times a trial. It has all the news about all the people you know, and then some more.

MATIE BOWEN-FULTONI WINS WESTERN CITIES

The many local friends of Matie Bowen-Fultoni will be glad to know that she is still meeting with success in the Concert and Recital field. Mme. Fultoni finished a most successful tour of the middle West and South last May and has been spending the summer at Alexandria Bay preparing her programs for her Eastern tour which will occupy the months of October and November. She is booked for return engagements in several cities visited on her tour of the East two years ago.

Since her last appearance in Fulton, Mme. Fultoni has done considerable work with Signor Francesco Daddi of the Chicago-Philadelphia Grand Opera Company, and her rich, beautiful voice has gained in fullness and volume. Her personality, ripened musicianship and spontaneity have won her high place on the Concert stage. In speaking of her recent appearance in Milwaukee the Daily News said:

"Matie Bowen-Fultoni gifted Soprano, whose clear, penetrating tones and delightfully sympathetic quality of voice have made her a prime favorite here, sang with her usual charm and delighted the large audience at the Pabst Theatre last evening."

FINDS BUCKLEY IS GUILTY

Pulaski.—District Attorney Francis D. Culkin at the opening of County Court yesterday morning moved the trial of one of the indictments charging Daniel Buckley of Fulton with violations of the liquor tax law. The trial occupied the attention of Judge Henry D. Coville and a jury throughout the day. It was nearly 6 o'clock when the jury retired.

At 8 o'clock the jurors filed into the court room for instructions from the court, which were given and they again retired to further deliberate. The jury agreed at 9 o'clock and returned a verdict of guilty. Sentence will be imposed at 2 p. m. Monday at Oswego, to which city court adjourned.

A sealed verdict of $200 in favor of the plaintiff was awarded in the civil action of Floyd B. Serles against F. A. Larraway. A motion by the defendant's attorney to set the verdict aside was denied by Judge Coville and the usual stay granted, in which to prepare a new case.

The action was brought to recover money damages for alleged breach of contract. It occupied the attention of Judge Henry D. Coville and a jury receiving the case at 6 o'clock last night and reached a verdict after deliberating about an hour. The parties to the action live at Cleveland. Davies, Johnson & Wilkinson of Camden for plaintiff; J. & W. M. Gallagher of Cleveland for defendant.

Attorney F. D. Culkin of Oswego moved the trial of one of the indictments charging Daniel Buckley of Fulton with an alleged violation of the liquor tax law.

Withdrawing a former plea of not guilty to an indictment charging a violation of the liquor tax law. Hollister Bassinger of Richland Junction pleaded guilty and Judge Henry D. Coville of Central Square imposed a fine of 60 which was paid. Defendant was charged with selling intoxicants to a boy under age, whose home was on the ridge road and in the town of Sandy Creek on the night of December 24,1913. It is alleged that the minor became intoxicated at Bassinger's place at Richland Junction; that in attempting to reach his home on the night in question the minor lost his way and sank by the roadside, where he was found several hours later, both feet and hands being frozen. The poor authorities of the town of Sandy Creek, where the minor lives and who became a town charge, were reimbursed by Bassinger for the care of the boy at an Oswego hospital. The total expense was about $150.

The Truth About Diamonds

¶ WHEN a few years ago the prediction was made that Diamonds would double in value, there were many doubters. The prediction, however, has been more than justified.
¶ DIAMONDS have doubled, tripled, and in some sizes and qualities, quadrupled in value.
¶ THE appreciation in value is still going on.
¶ DIAMONDS bought today are not an extravagance, but an investment. They are one of the luxuries of life that have an intrinsic value from which cash can be realized when the winds of adversity blow our way.
¶ THE wearing of Diamonds is an evidence of our appreciation of Nature's most precious and beautiful creation, and of your financial prosperity.

SOX AND PHILS CLINCH HOLD

Was Done on Same Day and Both Clubs Now Need Breeze to Win Honors.

Boston and Philadelphia, generally regarded as respective pennant winners in the American and National Leagues, fortified themselves more strongly in their positions as leaders yesterday by winning double headers. Both teams now have arrived at the stage of the campaign where they can lose half of the games remaining on their schedules and yet outdistanme their rivals.

The Boston Red Sox increased their lead in theh American league by one-half of a game over Detroit by inflicting a second double defeat on Cleveland, while Detroit won a game from Philadelphia. The Red Sox have ten games to play.

Brooklyn regained second place in the National League by winningwhile Boston was losing, but Philadelphia won two games, thereby gaining on both. A margin of six and one-half games now separates Brooklyn and Philadelphia, and the Boston Braves are seven games behind the leaders. The Phillies have twelve games to play, but eight of these are with Brooklyn and Boston.

OCTOBER TERM CAUSES COMPRIZE MANY CASES

Oswego.—The calendar for the Trial Term of Supreme Court to be held October 4, Justice Ross presiding, is now being compiled by Court Clerk Coulter, yesterday being the last day for filling notes of issue. Up to noon today 101 cases had been noted for the calendar. This is as large a calendar as the average for October. Of this number more than half are comparatively new causes, not heretofore on the calendar.

A grand jury will sit in connection with this term and District Attorney Culkin states that there will be a great number of cases. For the first time in several years the grand jury will hove no homicide cases to consider. There will be about twenty-five cases of excise violations, the agent of the State Excise Department having been very active here.

Among the cases noted are the following.

Eunice Briggs, as executrix of the estate of G. Wales Briggs, deceased, vs. N. Y. C. & H. R. R. Co.

Thomas Parker vs. Guy B. Dickerson, negligence.

Helena Heilig vs. City of Oswego, negligence.

Apple Growers May Provide Fruit for 25,000,000 Soldiers

New York.—Every soldier in the trenches and hospitals in Europe will receive an apple in the near future, if arrangements being worked out by a committee of the apple trade throughout the United States are successful.

It is proposed to have a vessel take over a large cargo of apples to be distributed free under the auspices of the Red Cross, and efforts will be made to get President Wilson and Mr. Lansing, Secretary of State, to request the beliggerents safe passage for the consignment to the various fronts and hospitals so the fruit may be placed in the hands of the Red Cross for distribution.

Apple growers and dealers have learned that many of the fighting men are suffering because of lack of fruit juices, giving rise to scurvy and other disorders. Surgeons who have returned from European hospitals are said to approve the scheme to provide more fruit juices not only among the wounded but also for the men in the trenches.

"We are working on this undertaking purely from humanitarian motives," said one of the committee, who is a leading wholesale apple distributor.

"It's going to cost a whole lot of money for the fruit alone, and we shall call upon all the people engaged in the apple industry to contribute a part of the expense. At first the trade did not take kindly to the scheme, as it was feared ships could not be found to carry over the apples. Then the idea was conceived of chartering a ship which would take nothing but apples, and we believe that when the purpose is disclosed to foreign governments none will oppose free passage of our ship, for it will go on a mission of charity."

Another apple dealer said:

"It is a big undertaking and will require skillful handling, but it can be done. The value of the fruit alone would approximate about $300,000 aboard a ship at New York, for apples are worth considerably more than a year ago. We understand that there are about 25,000,000 men actively engaged in the fighting in the European war, and probably as many more indirectly involved. To give to all an American apple apiece would mean at least 50,000,000, and, taking 500 apples to the barrel, which would be medium size fruit, we shall have to privide 100,000 barrels or 300,000 boxes at the lowest estimate."

ANDERSON IS REAL IMPUDENT

These Are the Words of Senator Brown, In Replying to Anti's Letter.

Watertown State Senator Elon R. Brown repfies to William H. Anderson, superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League. The letters follow:

Anderson's Letter

H. Edmund Machold is running for the assembly with the backing of yourself and the liquor interests. In the last legislature the liquor interests put up only a perfunctory resistance to a 25 per cent increase in the excise tax to supply funds to afford jobs to the "faithful," while the Republican organization of the senate, of which you were absolute dictator, at the same time gave the liquor traffic immunity from having to submit to majority rule, by smothering in committee the measure now known as the Optional Prohibition Referendum bill. Of course there was no connection. Perish the thought!

This excise increase was for one year. Do you have to protect the liquor traffic in the next session also? Or was it fixed for one year on purpose so as to have something to work with each year. Just what was the understanding anyhow? Surely you would not have us believe that you so coelmptely belong to the liquor traffic as to block this sort of legislation from preference and inclination.

Are you losing your nerve and trying to get a basis ror claiming the people of your county are with you? If not, why do you refuse to let Mr. Machold declare in favor of the people's right to vote? Mr. Machold when unbossed, is considered a good sort. His neighbors seem to think well of him. He is reported to vote dry in local wet and dry elections. In the light of the record, he can convince no intelligent person that he is unbossed unless hec omes out squarely, not only in favor of the principle, but in favor of the bill that the people want, for it is a common liquor trick to object to some detail of the only thing that has ac hance to pass. Why ruin him? Why not carry your own responsibility? Is your effort to elect an assemblyman opposed to this bill due to a fear that you cannot control the senate against it next time?

Last winter we put the senate on record on this question, but this was only the opening gun. If your attitude represents the people of your district and reflects the sentiment of the Republican party whose party machine you are using in behalf of the liquor traffic, you will undoubtedly be grateful to us for the steps we shall take to advertise how faithful you are to the trust committed to you.

Yours very truly,
William H. Anderson.

Senator Brown's Letter

Wm. H. Anderson, Supt.,
Anti-Saloon League of New York,
156 Fifth Ave., New York City.
Sir:

Your impudent letter of September 20, from 156 5th avenue, received. I wish you under no circumstances to write me letters except for publication, as I will have no private personal correspondence with a man who writes as you do. I recognize the letter as one of the multitude of insulting letters you make it your business to address to public officials.

Your conception of the organization of the senate, the purposes which control it, as well as my purposes, undoubtedly reflects your own conception of public duty if you possessed the power to act. I should not dignify your letter with som uch as an acknowledgment tof asten upon Mr. Machold the charge that he acts and votes in the performance of his duty Any one who knows him in this comin the assembly under my direction. munity, or knows his course in the legislature, knows how false this charge from Fifth avenue in the city of New York is. Do you think when you have no influence in the city in which you live that you can dictate in Jefferson county?

While I opposed the bill which you advocate, because it is a bad bill and improper legislation in the form proposed from evey point of view, I had no communication with Mr. Machold in regard to it before hec ast his ballot. Your idea that the attention of Albany is focused on your bills is a mistake. The legislature has important business.

So far as I am concerned, I assure you that I have not the least concern in the world what your attitude is now or at any other time, in relation to me or any other man or matter. It will be sufficient for me to be advised by those who reside in my district and we shall see how many of them are foolish enough and weak enough to be influenced by such a person as you.

AN ADVERTISER must realize that there is a vast difference between amusing people and convincing them. It does not pay to be "smart" at the line rate of the average first-class paper. I suppose that I could draw the attention of everybody on the street by painting half of my face red and donning a suit of motley. I might have a sincere purpose in wishing to attract the crowd, but I would be deluding myself if I mistook the nature of their attention.

The new advertiser is especially prone to misjudge between amusing and convincing copy. A humorous picture may catch the eye of every reader, but it won't pay as well as an illustration of some piece of merchandise which will strike the eye of every buyer. Merchants secure varying results from the same advertising space. The publisher delivers to each the same quality of readers, but the advertiser who plants flippancy in the minds of the community won't attain the benefit that is secured by the merchant who imprints clinching arguments there.

Always remember that the advertising sections of newspapers are no different than farming lands. And it is as preposterous to hold the publisher responsible for the outcome of unintelligent copy as it would be unjust to blame the soil for bad seed and poor culture. Every advertiser gets exactly the same number of readers from a publisher and the same readers—after that it's up to him—the results fluctuate in accordance with the intelligence and the pulling power of the copy which is inserted.

A Dollar That Can't Be Spent

By HERBERT KAUFMAN

Author of "Do Something! Be Something!"

EVERY dollar spent in advertising is not only a seed dollar which produces a profit for the merchant, but is actually retained by him even after he has paid it to the publisher.

Advertising creates a good will equal to the cost of the publicity.

Advertising really costs nothing. While it uses funds it does not use them up. It helps the founder of a business to grow rich and then keeps his business alive after his death.

It eliminates the personal equation. It perpetuates confidence in the store and makes it possible for a merchant to withdraw from business without having the profits of the business withdrawn from him. It changes a name to an institution—an institution which will survive its builder.

It is really an insurance policy which costs nothing—pays a premium each year instead of calling for one and renders it possible to change the entire personnel of a business without disturbing its prosperity.

Advertising renders the business stronger than the man—independent of his presence. It permanentizes systems of merchandising, the track of which is left for others to follow.

A business which is not advertised must rely upon the personality of its proprietor, and personality in business is a decreasing factor. The public does not want to know the man who owns the store—it isn't interested in him but in his goods. When an unadvertised business is sold it is only worth as much as its stock of goods and its fixtures. There is no good will to be paid for—it does not exist—it has not been created. The name over the door means nothing except to the limited stream of people from the immediate neighborhood, any of whom could tell you more about some store ten miles away which has regularly delivered its shop news to their homes.

It is as shortsighted for a man to build a business which dies with his death or ceases with his inaction, as it is unfair for him not to provide for the continuance of its income to his family.

SYNOPSIS

Old Cyrus Martin, the head of the American soap trust, makes a bet of $30,000 with a friend, John Clark, a rival soapmaker, that his (Martin's) son Rodney would be making more money at the end of a year than Clark's son Ellery.

Martin takes his pretty secretary, Mary Grayson, into his confidence and enlists her co-operation. Rodney has been a spendthrift, and the father wants to make him reform and go to work.

Mary meets Rodney, and the son proposes marriage to her. Rodney tells his father about his proposal, and the old man pretends great anger. He tells Mary he will disinherit Rodney.

Rodney defies his father, and Mary is deeply touched at the lad's genuine affection for her. Mary makes a financial bargain with Martin to encourage the son to go to work.

Ambrose Peale, press agent, meets Rodney and agrees to go into business with the lad on a salary basis. Rodney has resolved to go into the soap industry and buck the trust.

Rodney, Peale and Mary go into the soap trade together. Rodney then endeavors to borrow $10,000 as capital for his newly formed company.

The offices of the "13 Soap company" are opened, and they advertise it as "the most expensive soap in the world." Peale talks advertising continually.

The 13 Soap company finds its expenses very heavy, and financial rocks loom ahead. Their chief business seems to have been to spend money for advertising under Peale's directions.

An alleged countess, who has appeared on the scene, desires to purchase the French rights for the sale of "13 Soap" and produces a draft for $20,000, which she desires to have cashed.

The "countess" is shown to be an impostor and despair settles over the 13 Soap company. The firm introduces her, however, to Ellery Clark. Father Martin visits the offices.

dignantly. "I had to have them arrested. I got to the office to find another bunch. It annoys me."

"I'm sorry, father," said Rodney.

"You're trying to make a fool of me," said his father. "I open a letter. It's a circular for 13 Soap. I open my newspaper; you have a page ad. I look out of the window; there's a billboard. I take a train; the porter apologizes because he's all out of 13 Soap."

"Well, of course, all that proves how wonderful our publicity is," said Rodney bravely.

"You're a grand young bluff, my son," said Martin grimly.

"Why, father, what do you mean?"

"I'll tell you exactly what I mean. I've let you ramble on to see just how far you would go, but you've been spending a lot of money advertising, hoping that by annoying me I'd buy out your business to get rid of you. Well, I'm not going to. Now what have you got to say to that?"

"Nothing—absolutely nothing," said Peale, taking heart again, and Rodney resumed quickly:

"But I have a lot to say. We may not have a big business now, but we have got a trademark—the catchiest trademark ever invented for soap. We're a growing concern. Just because our advertising annoys you you mustn't think it's valueless. Why, it's so good that capital is chasing us. Our money is practically unlimited. Is that a fair statement, Peale?"

"Very fair, very fair, indeed," agreed Peale, dazed at Rodney's daring.

"Bluff, son, bluff," Mr. Martin repeated.

"Not at all," protested Rodney, "and since you're so skeptical, father, I don't mind letting you see the plans for our new factory. These are the offices. Here is the power house, and this is my office, and here is Mr. Peale's"—

"Aren't you going to make any soap? Who's putting up the money?"

"Now, father," said Rodney reprovingly, "you cannot expect me to divulge a business secret to you, a rival manufacturer."

"Oh, why not tell him. He is your father," said Peale nobly.

"Well, Peale, if you really think it's wise," said Rodney.

"Oh, yes, I think it's quite wise," said Peale.

"It's the Andover Soap people," declared Rodney boldly.

Mr. Martin was at once impressed and annoyed.

"Yes, the Andover Soap people," echoed Peale, rubbing it in.

"You mean John Clark?" asked Mr. Martin, getting out of his chair.

"Yes," said Rodney.

"Absolutely," said Peale.

Mr. Martin turned and reflectively walked up and down. Peale very obviously picked up a push button and pushed the buzzer twice. There was a pause, and then in a moment Ellery Clark stuck his head through a door on the left. Mr. Martin did not know it, but this was all by prearrangement with Ellery. Peale, when he had come in just now, was fresh from tutoring Ellery in a little speech. The idea was to impress Mr. Martin overpoweringly on the subject of the Clark family's connection with the new factory. But Ambrose was, to tell the truth, a little nervous as to Ellery's ability to overpower the soap magnate. Ellery's first idea, too, seemed to be of bolting.

"Oh, excuse me. I didn't know your father was here," he began politely.

"That's all right, Ellery," said Rodney very genially.

"Yes, come right in," said Peale.

Ellery came in.

"How do you do, Mr. Martin?" he inquired.

"How are you, Ellery?" Mr. Martin responded gruffly.

He didn't like all this, but what was the matter with Ellery?

"Well, I really can't wait any longer," began that youth. "The party downstairs in the taxi—you follow me?"

"Yes, Ellery, you told us that," said Peale, shutting him off.

"Well, goodby, then," said Ellery.

"Was that all you came in to say?" Rodney took him up hastily, looking at Peale, and Peale added sharply:

"Yes. Have you decided about that deal?"

Ellery's mouth fell open, and a look came over his face as of one remembering a lesson.

"Oh, of course. If you'll keep it open until Monday I'll have the money for you then," he said.

"But we can't wait till Monday," said Rodney.

"But Mr. Peale told me"— Ellery answered, puzzled.

Peale came quickly to his rescue.

"We'll see what we can do, but just now, Ellery, we're very much occupied," he said, taking him by the arm and starting toward the door.

"Oh, just a minute," said Rodney. "You'd better give your father back the plans—say they're quite satisfactory."

"What plans?" queried Ellery helplessly.

"Oh, didn't he tell you about them?" Peale put in. "Perhaps after all, Rodney, I'd better give them to Mr. Clark myself. You remember I have an appointment with him today?"

"Oh, yes, it was today, wasn't it?" said Rodney.

"But father's out of town," Ellery protested.

"I know he is. Otherwise I could have kept the appointment," said Peale.

"We'll give you a definite answer tomorrow," added Rodney.

"But I don't understand," Ellery persisted. "Really, now, you say one thing, and Mr. Peale came in and"—

But already Peale was leading Ellery gently and firmly to the door.

"We'll have to see you later in the afternoon, Ellery," he said politely.

"But what did you want me to come in for?" quavered Ellery.

"Don't you see?" said Peale.

"No."

"That's too bad. Well, goodby, Ellery."

"I say, I do find business very confusing. I prefer the countess," murmured Ellery, going out.

"Ellery talks too much," said Rodney when Peale came back.

"He is very indiscreet," Peale agreed. "If it had been anybody but your father he'd have given our whole plan away."

"What's he doing here—acting for his father?" inquired Mr. Martin. His ideas of Ellery were undergoing a change.

"Absolutely," said Peale.

"You're not going to take him in," said Mr. Martin, "that pinhead? Why, he didn't even seem to know what he was trying to get at."

"No, he didn't, did he?" agreed Peale.

"But, after all, he does represent Andover soap," said Rodney.

"Great soap, Andover—ninety-nine and fifty-seven hundredths per cent pure," said Peale.

Mr. Martin grunted. There was something funny here, some kind of play acting, though he couldn't quite make out what it was. Old Clark's Ellery was a fool; you could see that with your eyes shut. Yet a fool made a good go-between sometimes, and you never could tell what John Clark would be up to. Ellery sounded for all the world as if he were trying to recite some piece that Rodney and that fellow Peale had taught him. And yet what did he happen to be doing there in the 13 Soap company's offices? That couldn't have been prearranged. John Clark was up to anything.

CHAPTER XII.

"I'll take my medicine."

AS Cyrus Martin paced up and down the office he caught an exchange of gleeful glances between Peale and Rodney. That decided him.

"Andover soap!" he grunted. Then to Rodney in a more propitiatory tone he added, "Have a cigar?"

Rodney took one of his father's Havanas and threw away his own stub.

"Thanks," he said.

There was a pause.

"Have a cigar, young fellow?" said Mr. Martin to Peale next.

"Thanks," said Peale, surprised.

"Allow me," said Mr. Martin, lighting his cigar and then walking over to Rodney.

"Well, thinking things over, why should you and I fight?" he began.

"You started it, father," said Rodney.

"Quite true," said Martin, "and therefore I should be the one to call it off. Now, son, here's the idea: I'd rather have you with me than against me. The money doesn't matter much. In your way, while I don't indorse that kind of publicity, I suppose you boys have done some good advertising."

"Thank you, sir," chimed in Peale.

"Not at all," said Martin, then added to Rodney. "And if you're going to have a backer shouldn't I be better than the Andover soap people?"

Rodney's throat gave an involuntary cluck of pleasure.

"After all, blood is thicker than business. What do you suggest?" he said.

"Suppose I buy you out," Mr. Martin said, "including your trademark and good will?"

"Oh, you have our good will now, sir," put in Peale.

Rodney reflected:

"Buying us out might be expensive for you, father."

"Oh, I guess it won't take all the money I've got. What's your proposition?"

"What's yours?"

"How is the business—what are the assets and the liabilities?"

"How fortunate! It was only this morning that Mr. Peale roughly copied off the totals from our books," said Rodney.

"I try to keep up with every detail of the business," chirped Peale.

Rodney passed out the pink statement.

"There you are, father," he said.

"H'm, liabilities $122.13, assets $22,818," read Mr. Martin.

"And 9 cents," added Peale.

"That's a remarkably good showing," admitted Mr. Martin. "Well, I'll give you $50,000 for your business as it stands."

Rodney took a good hold of himself.

"But we don't want to give up our business," he protested. "I like business. I wish you'd made me go into it years ago, father."

"We wish to continue in our chosen profession," added Peale grandly.

"Well, suppose you take 25 per cent of the profits," suggested Mr. Martin.

"It's wonderful weather, isn't it," said Rodney; "these crisp, cold, bracing mornings?"

"Well, I hardly thought you'd grab at that," said Martin. "What will you take?"

Rodney rose to the occasion quickly.

"One hundred thousand dollars cash," he said; "you assume all the contracts and obligations of this company, give us 40 per cent of the profits, a contract for me at $20,000 a year, for Miss Grayson at $10,000"—Peale coughed audibly behind him—"and another for Mr. Peale at the same figure."

Mr. Martin looked at the two men a moment, chewing his cigar.

"Done," he said finally. He could see, out of the corner of his eye, Peale and Rodney exchange looks and shake hands. Well, he had come down to buy them out.

"I congratulate you, father," Rodney said.

"You needn't," said Mr. Martin. "As a business proposition I don't think much of it, but I guess it'll show old John Clark he can't butt into my family affairs or get Ellery mixed up with my boy's business."

"Yes, father, we'd much rather have you than Ellery," asserted Rodney.

"Oh, much rather," echoed Peale.

This important deal was no sooner agreed on than Miss Burke came in inopportunely and conveyed to Rodney the information that the agent of the landlord wanted to see him at once.

"Yes," said Rodney. "You see, father, we're thinking of taking larger offices," he added. "Come, Peale. We'll be right back, father."

"Yes, father, we'll be right back," echoed Peale as they went out.

Mr. Martin stood there watching them proudly.

"Bully kid!" he said; then, changing to a contemptuous tone, "Ellery Clark!"

Well, that was a load off his mind at any rate, he reflected contentedly. Of course he had bought a pig in a poke, more or less. You couldn't tell whether their books were carefully audited or not. If Mary Grayson kept them they were probably pretty straight. He was glad to have the boy back anyway. And there would be no more sandwich men parades.

Altogether he was in a quite mellow mood when Mary Grayson opened the

VACATION TIME FUN.

Why Don't You Begin Gathering Christmas Gifts Now?

The "Do Your Christmas Shopping Early" signs, which make their appearance between four and five months from now, really ought to be tacked up in the summer, for that is the very best time to shop as far as the comfort that comes from uncrowded stores is concerned.

So why don't you do your Christmas shopping now? If you are in the city look about the shops at your leisure and choose your gifts carefully. You will find uncrowded aisles and experienced and rested salesmen and saleswomen, a far different condition from that which prevails after the 1st of December.

If you are traveling about the United States this summer buy your gifts on your travels. Make out a list of such friends as you wish to remember with gifts at Christmas, and whenever you find anything that would make a particular appeal to one of them buy it and make note of it.

If you are spending the summer at the shore or in the country or in the mountains you can still do much toward getting your Christmas gifts together. Even if there are no shops near at hand there are lovely things to be had for a little pleasure giving exertion on your part.

Suppose you have a summer home in the country. Why not make jams and jellies of the wild fruits in your neighborhood? Wild plum conserve, wild grape jelly, wild blackberry jam—all these have a delicious flavor if properly made. At the nearest country store you can probably get attractive little jam pots in which these preserves, jams and jellies can be packed. If not, you can send to the nearest city for a consignment of the right sort of glasses or jars.

Half a dozen jars of jam packed into a little basket would make a most welcome gift to a young girl at college next Christmas. Four jars of assorted jelly daintily tied with holly and ribbons would be welcomed by an invalid friend, and the fact that they were made from wild fruits would carry a suggestion of freshness and health.

If you cannot make these preserves yourself perhaps you can buy them at some farmhouse. And perhaps there will be jars of extracted honey for sale and cakes of maple sugar. Or perhaps you can make little net bags to fill with sweet lavender blossoms, first put in colored silk bags.

Pillows filled with pine needles and covered with linen covers that may be appropriately embroidered or stenciled with cones are another dainty gift from the country.

For a child in school a scrapbook filled with carefully mounted specimens of wild flowers would prove useful and interesting. And you might dig up some small ferns in the woods and start them growing in pots. Later they could be put in pretty basket holders for gifts.

From the seashore bayberry candles, hand dipped, of course, are an appropriate gift. They can be given in sets of four or six, or one can be set in a candlestick of brass or pottery.

Bundles of driftwood, too, are welcomed by the woman with a fireplace. And bags or boxes or unusual shells are liked by small children.

Honey Sandwiches.

Spread honey between slices of bread and butter, taking care that it does not run over the edges.

Chop figs fine, add a little water and cook slowly until the right consistency for spreading. Add a few chopped nut meats and a little finely shredded orange peel and spread between thin slices of brown bread.

MANGLED THE PROOFS.

Tolstoy Must Have Made His Printer's Life a Burden.

When "Anna Karenina" began to come out in the monthly Russki Vyestnik, writes Count Ilya Tolstoy in his "Reminiscences of Tolstoy," long galley proofs were posted to my father and he looked them through and corrected them.

At first he would mark the margins with the ordinary typographical signs, letters omitted, marks of punctuation and so on; then he would change individual words, and then whole sentences. That would be followed by erasures and additions until the proof sheets became a mass of patches that was perfectly black in places. It was impossible to send them back as they stood, because no one except my mother could make head or tail of the tangle of signs, transpositions and erasures. My mother would sit up all night copying the whole thing out afresh.

In the morning the pages lay on her table, neatly piled together, and covered with her fine, clear handwriting. Everything would be ready so that when Lyovotchka came down he could send the proof sheets off by post. My father would carry them to his study to have "one last look," and by evening the sheets were all written over and messed up once more.

"Sonya, my dear, I am very sorry, but I've spoilt all your work again; I promise I won't do it any more," he would say, showing her the passages he had inked over, with a guilty air. "We'll send them off tomorrow without fail." But that tomorrow was often put off for weeks, or even for months.

"There's just one bit I want to look through again," my father would say, but he would get carried away and rewrite it all afresh. There were even occasions when, after he had posted the proofs, my father corrected them by telegraph the next day.

Several times, in consequence of these corrections, the printing of the novel in the Russki Vyestnik was interrupted, and sometimes it did not come out for months together.

MONEY IN GOOD TASTE.

A Woman Who Capitalized Her Sense of the Beautiful.

A woman's good taste is a part of her stock in trade and could be made much more widely remunerative than it now is.

One would naturally suppose that the success of an auction depended mainly upon the wit and skill of the auctioneer. A prominent auction house in New York city has discovered that a woman's good taste in showing up things artistically, or in their true relations, or with a suggested use, is quite as valuable an asset as a voluble auctioneer.

For example, in a sale of oriental goods were some handsome old bird cages, wonderful creations in tortoise shell, black lacquer, ivory and jade. There were seven cages in all, and so spirited was the bidding that they brought prices ranging from $410 to $700.

The thing that did it was not anything said or done by the auctioneer, but the fact that in anticipation of the sale there had been put in each cage a pair of singing and twittering birds exactly suited in color to the cages in which they were placed. Cages and birds made a symphony of color. Without the birds in them the cages would not have brought half the price. Who but a woman would have thought of it?

The same auction house has found that a suitable and artistic arrangement of goods, all under the deft hand of its woman specialist, adds many dollars to the sales.—Leslie's.

Easy & Practical Home Dress Making Lessons

Prepared Especially For This Newspaper by Pictorial Review

FASCINATING SIMPLICITY IS SHOWN HERE.

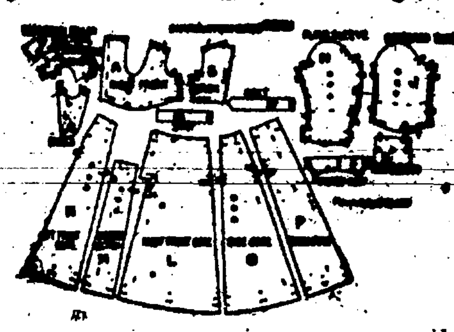
A frock that is extremely simple, yet neither time nor care has been spared in its development. It is carried out in brown gabardine trimmed with velvet buttons.

When the designing of the modern costume is in question neither time nor pains are spared; yet the result is mostly one of the most fascinating simplicity.

This dainty frock is carried out in leather brown gabardine, trimmed with velvet buttons in two different sizes and a vest of plain silk, with high, turn-down collar. In average size it requires to make, 6½ yards 36-inch material, with ½ yard silk for the vest.

As a preliminary to the development of the waist the home dressmaker underfaces the upper edge of right-front, about 1½ inches deep. Hem the front; then underface front edge of left-front, close under-arm and shoulder seams, gather lower edge of waist between double "TT" perforations and bring front edge to center-front. Stitch a tape under the gathers and lap right-front on left to double "oo" perforations when closing.

The collar is really a convertible model and is made with the vest. First, turn under front edge of vest on slot perforations for an underfacing. Adjust, bringing upper edge of front to small "o" perforations in shield, center-fronts even. Sew convertible collar to neck edge, notches even.



Now, close the sleeve seam as notched and pleat lower edge, bringing single "T" to corresponding small "o" perforation. Gather between double "TT" perforations. Sew turn-back cuff to sleeve as notched, small "o" perforation at sleeve seam. Roll cuff on large "O" perforations. Sew in armhole as notched, easing in any fulness.

The last step leads to the completion of the skirt. Turn under edges of right-front gore and inserted section on slot perforations; lap right-front gore on inserted section and lap inserted section and right-front gore on the left-front gore, to small "o" perforations, notches even; press pleats, close seams under pleats; stitch as illustrated, leaving edges free above large "O" perforation in right-front gore for placket. Center-front indicated by large "O" perforations in right-front gore. Join gores as notched; form inverted pleat, creasing on slot perforations, bring folded edges together on line of small "o" perforations; stitch as illustrated and press. Sew skirt to lower edge of waist over stay, center-fronts and center-backs even. Adjust belt over joining of waist and skirt.

Add the buttons, and, if the fancy dictates, a crushed girdle may be substituted for the plain effect.

Importance of Rest for Baby

The importance of rest for a baby is so obvious that it would seem superfluous to deal with it at all, and yet experience among the babies of well to do parents proves that in a very great number of cases progress is retarded and perfect health marred simply for want of rest.

A baby who does not sleep well is really an anomaly, and yet a remarkable number of cases come under one's notice where this is the case. It is hard very often to trace this state of things to its cause.

Many children undoubtedly inherit nervous tendencies in these days; nervous mothers have often nervous babies and as their influence is the potent one in the early days as well, it is usually in an environment calculated to further enhance nervousness in which the mite finds itself.

Apart from natural tendencies, too, present day life, in towns anyway, is distinctly exciting to a baby. The quick movement of motor traffic outdoors, the brilliancy of electric light indoors—all mark a very different state of things to the old days of leisurely movement and candles. The sudden switching on and off of a light at night is in itself disturbing or stimulating to a baby, and as it has to become accustomed to such things it is only common sense to reduce other reasons of excitement to the minimum.

For this reason, as a rule, a baby should not be played with often, should not have things rattled at it or dangled before its eyes. The more near to a vegetable existence the early days are passed in, speaking generally, the better for the child.

Then the room in which the baby sleeps must be well ventilated, but secure from drafts. And here may be mentioned the advantage of placing the baby's cot away from the nurse's or mother's bed. "Alongside" has become almost a universal rule, but the result is that the child is breathing air more or less contaminated by the grown up person, more especially as the necessity of safeguarding the child from drafts means that a free current of air is, and rightly, absent. In winter time, when the wicked microbe of the common cold is abroad in the land, the arrangement will have the further benefit of safeguarding the small person from infection to a remarkable degree. It is perilously easy to lean over to a cot alongside at every whimper or movement, to continue night feeding and otherwise disturb the long hours of rest which are so beneficial—nay, indispensable—to the progress and good condition of the child; but it is quite another thing when it necessitates getting up, and the child is more likely to have a chance of long, unbroken hours of rest without being deliberately taught to wake at intervals. Of course, if a baby is ill or anything is the matter it is another thing.

No baby should be rocked or "patted" to sleep. The baby should be laid down warm and dry, with every care to each detail of its comfort, well fed and shaded from any light, even from the first day, and so accustomed to go to sleep unheeded and unrocked. Sometimes it will be awakened suddenly—possibly by some noise or exterior influence, possibly for a cause which cannot be determined; do not immediately take the child up, even if it is crying—although it is the ordinary instinct to do so—but simply turn it over in its cot, soothing it with soft words as you do so and giving it a teaspoonful or so of cold water if it appears hungry; this simple process, carried on in the dark or in the same subdued light which obtained before, will in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred induce the little one to go straight off to sleep again.

Of course a baby should be laid to sleep on its side in alternate positions each night, and care should be taken that the little ear is laid flat and not crumpled.

During the first two months of life a healthy, well managed baby will sleep almost all the time, waking only at the regular feeding times when probably a cry will give notice of the fact. Once in the twenty-four hours it should be allowed a lusty fit of crying, so that the lungs may be well expanded, and good exercise given generally. The time when sleep should be least encouraged is in the late hours of the day, as by that means a sounder and longer sleep is induced at night.

At six months old two-thirds of the day of twenty-four hours should be spent in sleep, which means that sixteen hours is the proper time. This should be continued until the first birthday, when a couple of hours less suffices, ten hours being devoted to the waking time. This fourteen hours sleep is needed by children until they are five years old, after which about two hours may be knocked off (which means practically in many cases dropping the sleep by day and having only the long night of twelve hours), and after the seventh birthday still another hour may be stolen from night for day.

The Right Place

The ideal place to live would be
A farm with meadows stretching wide,
And right next door a grocery,
And bak'ry on the other side.

A theater across the way,
With all the latest comedies,
And next to that a grandstand, say,
Where one could watch ten inning ties.

The cowbells ringing in the lanes
While taxicabs and cars go by;
A station near with frequent trains;
Neat restaurants and open sky.

An apple tree 'neath which to sit
And view the traffic in the street,
And movies on a screen to flit
While breezes blew from off the wheat.

A brook to croon, a band to snort;
The city sights, a country view;
A rural urban home, in short,
I think a place like that would do.

GERMAN SOLDIERS BUSY MAKING WINTER WEAR.

Thousands of Shoes and Suits of Clothing Turned Out Daily.

Leipzig is busily engaged in preparing winter clothing for German soldiers. Before the war began the military outfitting business there was easily taken care of by a small plant just outside the city, employing not more than 250 men. The few wooden buildings of the plant have been added to until they now cover acres of ground, where some 4,000 men and women are employed. The output has increased to 3,000 shoes, 3,000 coats and several thousands of pairs of trousers a day.

Most of the men employees are of military age and capacity. They wear fatigue uniforms and live under military control in wooden barracks adjoining the plant. Few of them but could on a few hours' notice move out to the fighting front and exchange needles and tools for rifles. Simply they are more valuable as tailors and shoemakers than as infantrymen or artillerymen.

It has been reported that Germany is short of leather and that its supplies of cotton and woolen goods are not as large as they should be, but there is no indication of it at the Leipzig plant.

Leipzig is but one of a large number of German cities that have had to adapt themselves to army needs. Cassel, for instance, has turned over its huge, new and expensive public hall and gathering place to the making of clothing for the army, and in the rooms that once were the scenes of banquets, dances and merrymaking there today are piled thousands upon thousands of uniforms, and in its corridors hundreds of soldiers sit cross legged on tables, busily sewing.

PEACHES GIVEN AWAY FREE.

Doctor's Offer Heads Friends He Never Counted Toward Orchard.

"Come on in; the peaches are fine! Pick 'em!"

This invitation was extended by Dr. S. C. G. Watkins of Wyatebede lodge, North Caldwell, N. J., to all his friends and acquaintances. The doctor has a big orchard, and after gathering all the fruit he needed for his own use he did the neighborly thing.

The response was something marvelous. Dr. Watkins never realized how many of his friends owned automobiles, wagons, pushcarts and the like until he saw the steady line of vehicles heading through his gates.

The peaches were unusually good and unusually large. The peaches grown by Dr. Watkins are of the Morris White variety, particularly tasteful. The visitors carried away more than 200 bushels, and the orchard was practically depleted when they departed.

THREE LEGGED PULLET.

Extra Claw Aids Chicken to Make Record in Digging Worms.

A. W. Pierce is pointing with considerable pride to a three legged barred Plymouth Rock pullet which he has developed on his poultry farm near Verona, N. J. How it happened Pierce isn't sure, but he knows the father to be a great runner, having been chased out of the garden patch some hundreds of times last spring.

The pullet, now four months old, is twice as large as its brothers and sisters, being able to turn up 50 per cent more worms in a given time with its extra claw. Mr. Pierce is greatly pleased with having three drumsticks grow where only two grew before and is working over a system of matings which will now give him a three or even four legged fowl for table use.

MAPLES TO MARK GRAVES.

Emblem of Canada to Memorialize Her Gallant Soldiers.

How to mark permanently the resting places of the thousands of Canadian soldiers who have fallen in Flanders and in France is a matter to which the people of the Dominion are giving considerable thought.

From a member of the Overseas club comes the happy suggestion that, since the maple leaf is the emblem of Canada, maple trees be planted over the isolated graves and along the roads leading to the cemeteries. He has already sent millions of seeds to France and is to send more.

The species chosen is the sugar maple, and so France in time will have a beautiful memorial of the aliens who gave their lives for her.

TODAY'S FASHION NOTE

Nothing would be more effective for this dress for early Autumn wear than taupe colored voile. The collar revers and cuffs could be of natural color crepe de chine, with picot edge. The front and back are slightly gathered, but the greatest fulness of the skirt is supplied by the inverted plaits at the sides. The dress calls for 6 3-8 yards 36-inch material.

The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

MORE EGGS.

SPANISH EGGS.—Seed and chop a green pepper, stone and mince a dozen olives and put these, with a cupful of thick stewed tomatoes, a teaspoonful of onion juice, a tablespoonful of butter and half a cupful of gravy stock, in a frying pan over the fire. Simmer together five minutes, stirring constantly, until all the ingredients are well blended and hissing hot. Have ready six eggs, beaten enough to mix the white and yolks; stir them into the frying pan and cook until the eggs thicken. Should the mixture seem too stiff before the eggs go in thin with a little stock. Add a teaspoonful of salt, stir up well and serve.

Creamed Eggs.—Cook six eggs until they are hard. Make a pint of white sauce, using four tablespoonfuls of flour and the same of butter, a half teaspoonful of salt and a pint of rich milk. Put six slices of toast on a hot dish, put a layer of sauce over each after spreading them with butter; then cut the egg whites in strips and add a layer of them. Rub a part of the yolk through a sieve for a garnish. Place in the oven for a few minutes and serve hot.

The Art of Making Toast.

Now is the height of the season when individuals here and there are condemned for a day or two to eat nothing but toast, and while their poor bodies are putting up heroic fights to right themselves they are often hindered as much as helped because the toast is badly made.

Toast is but little better than untoasted bread if it is just browned on the outside. It should be well dried, or, at any rate, well heated through before it commences to brown. It is then much lighter than otherwise and more likely to be better masticated, and this cannot be too well done.

It is a bad plan to pile several slices of buttered toast on a plate and then to cut down through them. Divide each slice separately and pile pieces lightly.

HARD TO GIVE NEW CAR A GOOD NAME

A new kind of car, with a one-man crew, is proposed for use on city tracks of the Rochester, Syracuse & Eastern lines, according to stories printed in Syracuse. It would be a cross between an automobile and a street car, seating about thirty-five passengers and weighing not much more than five tons without load. The exit and entrance would be in front, the rear being entirely closed.

"Automobiles, jitneys, and motor busses are being operated in the streets by one man, and apparently no one thinks it necessary that two men should be in charge of them," Ernest Gonzenbach, general manager of the Empire United Railways, is quoted as saying. "Reasoning from this basis, I believe the time will soon come when the electric railways will be compelled to adopt a one-man car to give the frequency of service which the public demands. The idea is the logical development of the present electric railway situation."

PRROSPERITY LOOMS, SAYS F. A. DELANO

Washington.—F. A. Delano, vice-governor of the Federal Reserve Board, returned to Washington today from a trip through the Panama Canal and across the continent.

"Business," said Mr. Delano, "is picking up. This is true everywhere except in the farming country of the West. The farmer seems to think he can get $1.25 again this year for his wheat. He can't, but he's holding it just the same. The fact that money is easy makes it easier for him to hold his crop for higher pries, and I am afraid he will get fooled."

Mr. Delano said signs of increased prosperity were noticeable from the Pacific Coast all thew ay eastward, and that war orders, more buying by railroads and other factors were responsible. He visited the Federal Reserve banks in San Francisco, Minneapolis, Chicago and Cleveland, and thinks their usefulness is becoming more appreciated.

THE MUNITION PLANTS LOSE MANY MORE MEN

Providence, R. I.,—Two hundred men employed in the foundry of the Brown & Sharpe Company, manufacturers of machinery and tools, today joined the strike declared against the plant by the machinists several days ago.

The strikers are making plans for a sympathetic strike in all the other machine shops in the city.

Henry D. Sharpe, president of the company, issued a lengthy statement defining the company's attitude today. After declaring that the strike was "an incident in the prosecution of the Dumba campaign to embarras the manufacture of ammunition and ammunition machinery intended to assist the "cause of the allies," the statement said that the company would continue its regular working schedule of fifty-five hours a week, would treat with its employes individually, and not with the labor union, and would discharge employes who persisted in remaining out.

DIAMOND BUYING TIME

To be forewarned of an event is appreciated by the majority of people. With this in mind The Evening Times calls attention to the display advertising columns of this issue which tell of an auction sale of diamonds to take place at the Jules Wendell store, Oswego, Tuesday, Sept. 28. The idea of the proprietors being to give to their patrons and friends an opportunity to secure diamonds long in advance of the Christmas season. Many persons here and in Oswego propose taking advantage of the sale to avoid a crowded market later in the season. adv

LORD MAYOR APPEALS FOR BELGIAN AID

London.—The Lord Mayor of London today appeals to the British people tho come to the aid of the starving people in Belgium, ofw hom, he says, a million and a half are utterly destitute.

"We are not yet half awake to the tragedy of Belgium," says the appeal. "Even Mr. Hooxer's wonderfully efficient neutral committee cannot feed one and a half million destitute persons on less than five pence per head per day, which amounts to no less a sum than $218,570 ($1,092,850) per week.

"I am convinced that the city of London will not rest content until it has taken the place it usually occupies in every really great benevolent movement."

The Lord Mayor then announces the formation of a strong committee, including Viscount Bryce and a host of other prominent men, tom anage the fund, and appeals to persons of every class to subscribe.

"There is no doubt if food is not sent," the Lord Mayor adds, "the Germans will allow the Belgians to starve orw ill shoot them down if hunger riots occur."

POPE MAY ASSUME PROTECTION OF ARMENIANS

Genoa, (La Prensa Special).—Pope Benedict today received two hundred persons in audience in the Consistorial Hall. Before imparting the Pontifical benediction he delievered a brief address in which he expressed his special interest in those who had sons in the war and sent his blessing to those who accomplish their duty for their countries.

The Armenians presented an energetic protest to the Turkish government against the persecutions to which they are subjected. A reply was made to the protest in a note in which the government denied many of the facts alleged although they were supported by documentary evidence.

It is said that in view of this attitude the Vatican is considering the question of assuming directly the protection of Christians in the Orient, without the imtermediation of any of the civil Powers. France had been considered as the protector of Christians in the East, but as she is at present at war with Turkey her services in this regard cannot be employed for the purposes of negotiations.

KNICKERBOCKER OPENS WITH $3 MOVIES

New York.—Three dollar "movies" are a reality. Ignace Jan Paderewski occupied oneo f the $3 seats in the Knickerbocker Theatre last night at the opening exhibition of the Triangle programme and seemed to enjoy the novelty. He was accompanied by friends. The thrills of the evening were provided by D. W. Griffith, the patriotism by Mr. Furst's orchestral performance of "The Star Spangled Banner" and the laughs by Raymond Hitchcock in the farce comedy film which is half melodrama and half burlesque.

Mr. Hitchcock's sketch is called "My Valet." It should have been named "The Burning Whiskers," as Mr. ment was to extinguish the blaze which was slowly consuming the hirsuite adornment of an old man. The audience laughed itself almost into hysterics over this episode. It was epoch making. Neither Shakespeare nor Hauptman could have written "The Burning Whiskers."

WRITER OF "POISON PEN" NOTES IS ARRESTED

New York.—Miss Loretta Henderson, an attractive stenographer in the offices of Thomas A. Edison at Orange, and member of a leading family of Bloomfield, N. J., was placed under arrest in her home yesterday by Post Office Inspector Opdyke, accused of responsibility for the "poisoned pen" letters that have disturbed that community for eight months. Because she was ill in bed she was paroled in thec ustody of her parents until the matter may be presented to the Federal Grand Jury at Newark.

This turn in the noted case caused a sensation in the Watsessing section of Bloomfield, where Miss Henderson is a prominent member of the Methodist Church, particularly as many of the scurrilous letters were addressed to herself.

GREEK PARLIAMENT IS CALLED TO MEET NEXT WEEK; BULGARS HOSTILE

London.—A despatch to the Exchange Telegraph Company from Athens says:

"Decree has been promulgated convoking the Chamber of Deputies on Wednesday to pass an act of martial law and to put at the disposal of the government all the state railways. The transportation of merchandise has been forbidden."

All the newspapers this morning agree that events in the Balkans are moving with lightning rapidity. The general mobilization of Bulgarian troops, which now is admitted to be the result of German intriguing and a desire of the "Tsar of all the Bulgars," as he once grandiloquently called himself, to avenge the loss of territory in Macedonia when his army was beaten by those of Serbia, Greece and Roumania—losses which were largely due to his rapacity—has been followed by a general defensive mobilization of twenty classes of the Greek army.

There is no doubt that if Bulgaria moves to join the forces of the Central Empires Roumania and Greece will cast their lot with the Entente Powers, and the net result of German diplomacy will be that while the Kaiser and his allies will receive reinforcements of an army of about 400,000, which, despite reports from Sofia, is not equipped to meet modern conditions of warfare, nearly a million Roumanians and Greeks, backed by the latter's [illegible] navy, will be ranged on the side of the Allies.

I know and perhaps I may be permitted to tell you that Roumania is ready, and if Bulgaria moves Roumania will strike at once, and strike hard.

All the Greeks in London of military age have been ordered to rejoin the colors, and the first gunshot from the Bulgarians will be the signal for the plucky little island kingdom to enter the great war o nthe side of the forces of freedom.

The web of diplomacy woven over the peninsula by the Quadruple Entente in an effort to confine the rival states under an allied partnership by reconstituting the Balkan League apparently has given way under the pressure of Teutonic intrigue.

It is generally accepted now that Bulgaria has definitely cast her lot with the Central Empires and her hereditary enemy the Turk, and thus has given to Wilhelmstrasse the first diplomatic victory achieved there during the war.

Greece, filled with a patriotic fire and an ardent desire to aid her old ally Serbia against what is regarded there as Bulgarian agression, has definitely answered the pleas of the Entente, representatives by calling out 230,000 men, thus bringing the peace army up to a war strength of 290,000. Described in the semi-official announcements of the order as a "measure of ordinary prudence," Europe knows what it means.

In brief, Greece says to Bulgaria: "Any overt act directed against Serbia must be regarded as an overt act against Greece.

Dictated by Berlin and Vienna

The complexity of the situation is defying the efforts of the most skilled politicians in England and the Continent to untangle it. While every one assumes Bulgaria's mobilization to be a move dictated by Berlin and Vienna—and it seems to be generally supported by public sentiment—yet the Sofia Foreign Office continues in negotiation with the Quadruple Entente regarding the demands she has made on Serbia and Greece and insists in public statements that no agreement binds the country to the Teutonic allies.

The opinion expressed here is that the Sofia government has gone too far in its bargaining with the Central Powers to do else than enter the struggle, actively or passively, and that the friendly relations maintained with the Entente capitals is a cloak to cover troop concentrations, which will be thrown aside when hostile preparations are complete.

The reception by Athens of the order calling the Greek reservists to the colors is taken to indicate the enthusiasm with which the country again would take up arms against her northwestern neighbor. Crowds filled the street cheering for the King, Mr. Venizelos, the army and the navy. The first response to the call was generous,

ENDORSEMENT GIVEN TO PROJECT BY WELL KNOWN NEW YORK ATTORNEY

When Mr. George Coffing Warner was asked the other day about the advisability of establishing here a mutual loan and building association, quick as a flash came the reply: "Great, it would be one of the best things, next to the formation of a trust company, that could be started here."

It has been the observation of The Evening Times that, in a growing town no organization can be more conducive to promote the private ownership of homes than a successfully conducted mutual building and loan association, such as one finds in every village, town and city in the states of New Jersey and Pennsylvania. In those states the associations are under the eyes of the official bank examiners and the officers and stockholders of the societies are all neighbors, hence their success from a mutual standpoint.

Fulton has many homes owned by those who work in store and factory, yet there are hundreds of renters of houses who should become owners, but who are unable with the facilities at present afforded to come into possession of a house and lot. Here is where the building and loan association becomes valuable to a community. It is valuable as well as a savings institution.

Mr. Warner's letter follows:

Referring to yesterday's inquiry asking me if I would favor a Building and Loan Association for Fulton. I answered very promptly and emphatically that I would favor it.

I had assumed, as a matter of course, that Fulton had a Building and Loan Association. Since it hasn't, I will be glad to help get one started at once and would be glad to subscribe to it, and to help in any other way.

The Building and Loan Associations of this country have assets of about fifteen hundred million dollars. They have a record that is remarkably free from losses since they have been operated by local people, that is, since the money has been loaned by committees of people who save it. The Building and Loan Association is valuable not only because it is a means of borrowing money for those who wish to build homes, but even more, because it compels its members to practice systematic saving. Every member contracts with himself and with his association that he will pay a certain stipulated sum periodically, by making a contract of this kind is the only way that many people can save money.

I think we are entering upon a period of great prosperity in this country. This is going to give us an opportunity to save more money, and we should do it, not only for our present benefit, but because of the great and increasing demands for capital chiefly caused by the European war. A person who saves money will have an opportunity to benefit himself by investing it to exceptional advantage, and will at the same time be benefiting his fellowmen, because without money the necessary reconstruction work of the world could not be done; labor would be without employment, etc. In Europe, particularly there are to be rebuilt many cities, railroads, bridges, waterworks, sewers, and other works of public necessity, without which civilized men cannot get along, and it will be impossible to do much of this necessary reconstruction work unless we in this country save our money, and loan it to those who have this reconstruction work to do. These loans will be upon security, so that we should have a safe and profitable investment, and at the same time, feel that we are helping in a work of social necessity.

Of course, you realize that a Building and Loan Association is usually organized so that it can lend money only for the building of homes.

In view of the fact that there are many business men in Fulton who need to borrow money for their business undertakings, and that there are many farmers in the vicinity of Fulton, who need to borrow money for working capital, that is, for more and better live-stock, implements, machinery, etc. I suggest that we consider organizing a Fulton Savings and Loan Association, so that all of these people could become members with a knowledge that their savings would be available for loans of a character that would be a help in their line of business, provided always that they had security to offer satisfactory to the loaning committee of the association. This security might take the form of real estate or personal property, or it might be the endorsement of two or three neighbors in good standing.

Yours very truly,

G. WARNER.

FRANK WADSWORTH GETS CONTRACT FOR BUILDING ZION'S PARISH HOUSE

The first step in the church campaign of the members of the Zion Episcopal church was taken this morning, when the church vestry awarded the contract for the construction of a new parish house to Frank Wadsworth of this city. Although the exact figures were not made public, the cost of the parish house will be in the neighborhood of $10,000. Mr. Wadsworth will begin work immediately and the parish house will be completed about January 1.

The vestry decided upon the immediate construction of the parish house in order that the members of the church might have the use of the new building during the winter as a temporary chapel. The construction of the present church is such that adequate heating is almost impossible and the parish house auditorium will be amply large enough to admit of religious services.

The parish house plans call for a building about 40x60 feet, one story with a basement. The first floor will include a large auditorium and a guild room which can be made part of the auditorium by the opening of the large doors. Folding doors in the auditorium will permit the conversion of the main floor into several rooms. The basement includes a kitchen, serving rooms and diningroom. The auditorium will [illegible] a large stage and dressing rooms and will be [illegible] as the [illegible] place and social center of general parish [illegible] this winter Rev. M. J. Peters, the rector of the church, will hold service in the parish house.

Rev. Mr. Peters announced this morning that the building of the church proper will begin next spring. The church building plans and plans for the parish house are the work of Clarence W. Brazer, a New York architect. The brick of the parish house will match the Plymouth-seamface granite of the church which will vary in color from a dark brown to a light tan.

Rev. Mr. Peters has worked untiringly for the construction of the new church and has been very successful in his parish work during his term as rector.

Justice De Angelis Decides Case Against Moon; In Favor of City and Power Co.

In Syracuse yesterday Justice De Angelis of the Supreme Court handed down a decision in favor of the defendants in the case of William Moon and the Oswego River Power and Transmission Company vs. The Fulton Common Council and the Fulton Light, Heat & Power Company, in an action for a permanent injunction restraining the Fulton company and the city from carrying out the terms of a ten-year contract for street lighting and power.

The case was first tried in Oswego several months ago, and at that time, counsel for the plaintiff attempted to prove that the Fulton company received a different set of specifications on the city contract from those received by the Oswego River company, and that the action of the council in awarding the contract to the Fulton company was illegal. Several city officials and officers of both companies testified at the hearing in Oswego and after court had allowed the attorneys for the plaintiff ten days in which to present a brief, the consensus of opinion was that the verdict would be unfavorable to the plaintiff, inasmuch as the testimony of the witnesses clearly showed that the same specifications had been tendered both bidders.

J. J. Jordan, manager of the Fulton company, said this morning that the Fulton company would now file judgment against the Oswego River company for costs.

An Astonishing Discovery in Engineering.

Engineering societies will greet the discovery by Mr. Ford of a gasoline motor which will operate under water as the most wonderful invention of the age—if it works. Heretofore the operation of a gasoline engine or a heavy oil machine has depended for its success upon the use of air to furnish the oxygen necessary for the combustion. Any layman who has seen a gasoline motor operate is aware that each stroke requires for the explosion a volume of air hundreds of times greater than the volume of the liquid gasoline consumed in the cylinder.

To assume that a submarine could carry a sufficient quantity of air to operate a gasoline motor for more than a few minutes is too farcical to deserve even a moment's consideration, and if we assume the gasoline motor to run in a vacuum it would be difficult to persuade the submarine crew to do the same.

There is the story of a Ford car having run for several miles without gasoline, traveling that distance merely on its reputation, and from an engineering point of view there is little hope for any other solution in the projected runabout submarine.—N. Y. Herald.

Graft in British Army.

Graft, incompetence, and leakage was expected in the Russian war management, but when London newspapers at times, especially prior to the formation of the coalition hinted at graft and scandal in the British management there was doubt among some readers.

Now an American business man, anonymous, brings back the information that over 100,000,000 has been lost to the British Army through dishonesty, incompetence and blundering methods of administration.

The shortage is found, he reports, in the paymasters' department, and began with having the clerical work done by soldiers who were themselves insufficient in number to fulfill their labors as amateur accountants. With this groundwork it became very easy for corrupt subordinate officers to pocket considerable money, the leakage in time reaching what he declares to be a grand total of over 10,000,000.

The losses occurred in this manner: "There are no regular pay days, and soldiers are paid according to circumstances. A pay officer may receive cash for 2,000 men, and paying them at his convenience may find that some were killed, some had gone back to hospitals, other were missing, and still others were home on leave. He may pay out to 1,500 men. His "graft" then is merely to return his pay sheet as "cleared" and to pocket the change."

Now they have a staff of expert accountants on the line in France to straighten out the angle and to devise a better system. The lesson has been learned.—Auburn Citizen.

SAID BY THE JOKER.

"I wonder how these ponderous poles got here," said the scientist. "It took heavy timbers to make these totem poles."

"In wonder, too," said the joker of the party. "Totem poles, eh?" Must have been a good deal of trouble to tote 'em."—Kansas City Journal.

WHAT ARE YOU THINKING ABOUT?

Three days left for the voter to think about the men who are candidates for the various city offices. Primary day will be upon you, Mr. Voter, before you know it. Have you thought it out? Have you decided whether you are going to be a man, not a goat (or rabbit?)

Do your own thinking. Find out by searching records what sort of a man you want as mayor, alderman, supervisor and committeeman. The candidates are your neighbors. You ought to know whether they are able to give a fair return for your trust in them.

Speaking locally, is the man you intend voting for as mayor, capable of helping to make this city the kind of a city you want to invest your money in? Is he capable of helping to make this city a better place for your wife, your children—in sanitation, in milk and food inspection, in schools, in amusements, in morals?

Mr. Voter, this is your city. You are going to have another opportunity of testing the value of the old, or present, form of municipal government. In electing officials to succeed the present lot, you will have at least one more opportunity to watch them, to see whether they are capable of looking after your interests in every way, of building for your future and the future of your family.

If the men you nominate and elect to office are not alert as they should be, think out who is to blame. Yourself, first of all, for letting your brain lie idle. Then the men you vote for for taking advantage of your thoughtlessness. Get busy.

Don't let a man, or men, think for you. Ten chances to one he will not think your way. Some men's bread is buttered by your passiveness, and they know it. They will never do anything to wake you up.

Only a few days have passed since you heard that commission-manager form of government is the advance agent of autocracy. That is a very thin statement. It gets the lie every day, but the point is, if you don't think between now and Tuesday, and if you don't vote on that day, and again on Nov. 7 in accordance with the dictates of your conscience, and not as you are told to vote, what about the democracy of the present form of government? The present form of government is a failure, a bigger failure than any autocracy that ever existed, unless the voter thinks his way to vote for the men who know how to give an attractive city.

WITH THE SUFFRAGISTS

In New Jersey, Helen Ring Robinson, state senator of Colorado, has sued the Summit Herald for libel. In its issue of August 6, it publishes a letter which stated that she had introduced into the legislature of her state a race track gambling bill.

Samuel Gompers, as official head of organized labor, issued on September 14 a stirring appeal to labor men to fight for the passage of the woman suffrage amendments now pending in the four eastern states. "Men workers," wrote Mr. Gompers, "will find women workers exploited against them just as long as women are denied responsibility as members of the political society."

* * *

In New Jersey Sheriff Kincaid has lined up with the suffragists. "During my service as sheriff of Hudson county," he explains, "I have found fifty men in jail to one woman and my conclusion is that if women know how to obey the laws better than men, they should know how to aid in framing them intelligently."

The lack of provision for public comfort is the greatest failure in American sanitation, this is the criticism made by a prominent speaker at the American Public Health Association.

The provision for public comfort is one of the great gains resulting from woman suffrage, this is the opinion of Mayor Young of Phoenix expressed in a recent speech on the benefits of woman suffrage in his state.

An epoch marking convention of women voters closed in San Francisco on the 16th of this month. Three thousand delegates were reported as in attendance. It endorsed the policy of the Congressional Union which stands for women suffrage by means of a national amendment giving women the vote in the entire country at once, as the negro was given the vote after the civil war.

One-fourth of the Senate; one-sixth of the House of Representatives; and one-fifth of the vote for President comes from equal suffrage states. With this leverage, declared Alice Paul, chairman of the Union, there is every reason to believe that the suffrage amendment will be passed by the 64th congress, and that the assembled convention of women voters has marked the beginning of the end of the long suffrage struggle.

The "Simple Truth is," said Bishop Hughes at the last labor conference, "it takes a twenty-mile wind of public opinion to drive a legislative ship ten miles."

Half of public opinion is registered at the polls by men; half is wafted over the land in the shape of indirect influence by woman. The legislative ship responds to half. Which half? Ask any fair-minded candidate for any elective office.

LITTLE TALKS ON THRIFT

By S. W. STRAUS

President American Society for Thrift

When we consider thrift we are apt to overlook the fact that economy in the matter of time, is often the same thing as economy in the matter of money. Here is an illustration:

A man once advertised for an office boy with the intention of advancing him in the business as he showed himself capable. From the large number that answered he selected the two most likely looking lads. He called one into his private office and pointing to a bundle asked him to untie it. The boy found the string tied in knots. "Ah," he thought, "this is where I show how careful and saving I am and get the job." So he worked and worked and manipulated a pin until the string was all untied. Then he wound it into a neat little ball and handed it proudly to the man, who ushered him out and called in the other boy.

This boy was shown a similar bundle and asked to untie it. He whipped out his knife, cut the string and threw it in the waste basket. He got the job, "for," said the man, "string is cheap and time is money." This story is not related with the intention of teaching wastefulness. Far from it. The saving of string usually means the saving of money. But sometimes the most important thing to save is time.

"Saving is the first great principle of all successes," says Sir Thomas Lipton, the gallant Irishman.

Saving became the entire success of one Mrs. Monmouth of Canterbury, N. H., in the late Seventies and early Eighties. Her ingenuity in living on forty dollars a year was thought so wonderful that James Parton, the historian, called her a "daughter of genius" and evidently considered that she was entitled to as much fame as Jeanne D'Arc and Queen Elizabeth, since she occupies an equal place with them in one of his biographs.

Those men who started on infinitesimal wages and now earn large salaries economized their time in such a way that they had enough to develop themselves in and to learn all about the business. No time was wasted. Samuel M. Felton, president of the Chicago Great Western Railroad and of the Pere Marquette Lines is reported to have refused a salary of $25,000 a year from the Baldwin Locomotive Works a few weeks ago. When he was fifteen years old he entered the railway service as rodman for surveying engineers.

Charles H. Markham, who receives $50,000 every year for being president of the Illinois Central Railroad, started as a section laborer in 1881 with pick and shovel at $1.25 a day.

These men knew what it meant to be thrifty of time, and they used their time to fit themselves to become the "best man on the job."

EDUCATOR SAYS STUDY BY MOVIES COMING

The Auburn Citizen quotes an educator thus:

With the introduction of moving pictures in the public schools of various cities of the country as a means of visualizing education, the local Board of Education is at present anticipating the visitations of movie salesmen and according to Superintendent H. D. Hervey the moving picture man as a means of teaching is bound to come.

Elmira is the latest city in New York State to tackle the matter of moving pictures in the schools and there the school board is seriously considering the possibility of the new project.

"When the movie machine is made absolutely safe so that it will not jeopardize the lives of the children by its operation and when the pictures shown are correlated to go with the regular class work, the new method of teaching by pictures will without doubt be one of the finest yet devised," said Superintendent Hervey today in commenting on the matter.

According to the superintendent, geography, history, science, biology and similar subjects could be taught with the aid of the moving picture to good advantage. "And in time the thing is sure to come," declared Mr. Hervey, "but not when school boards are almost universally poverty-stricken."

Give The Evening Times a trial. It has all the news about all the people you know, and then some more.

INTO THE WASTE BASKET

The Massachusetts Minimum Wage Commission has adopted a minimum wage law, fixing $8.50 a week as the smallest legal pay for the service of a girl over eighteen years of age in the Boston department stores. Other equally specific rates are imposed in other employments.

The savage competition of unskilled labor, and the willingness of unscrupulous employers to take advantage of it, has forced the question of fixing a minimum wage by law upon the attention of thinking people everywhere.

Most employers prefer to pay decent wages. But the presence in any line of industry or trade of employers ready to hire girls at starvation wages introduces a form of competition that compels the more high-minded merchant or manufacturer to do violence to his better instincts, and to meet conditions as they are thus created. The result is a steadily descending wage scale in the industries affected.

The interposition of the state at this point is justified by every social and economic consideration. It protects the just employer and safeguards all employers. It shields self-supporting women from conditions which need not be described.

The late Constitutional Convention had before it an amendment that would have made minimum wage legislation in New York constitutional. But the convention which had ample time to debate and adopt everything which Elihu Root desired, had no time to consider this effort for the protection of womanhood. It was tossed into the waste basket without a vote.—N. Y. American.

The Kewanee postoffice row has been settled. T man named Mulligan was an aspirant and the federal authorities made a Mulligan stew out of the affair by appointing his brother. There is nothing like keeping it in the family.—Quincy (Ill.) Whig.

HOME TOWN HELPS

HARD TO MAKE OVER CITY

Experiences of Centuries Old Towns Should Be Lesson to the Builders of Today.

The most hurried traveler along the tourist routes of Europe allows himself time to note with a smile that the "gates" which were once the veritable entrance through the walls into the city are now in the very heart of the city's bustling life.

Who does not know "Lud Gate" in London, now Ludgate Hill? Lud is the name of a mythical king of Britain.

The legend has it that this Lud laid the foundation of London. Shakespeare preserves his memory in "Cymbeline:" "And on the gates of Lud's town set your heads." This strong gate in the western part of the city is far enough removed from the west and is one of the busiest streets in the world.

Bishopsgate—the bishop gate; Aldgate—the old gate; Newgate—the new gate, all tell the same story. The "gates" are found in the innermost recesses of the city. The real entrances to the city are many miles away.

And what a higgledy-piggledy business it is! Boxes of brick and stone, in bewildering squares and parallelograms and shapeless shapes of every fashion, stretch away into dim distance, to straggle, to jostle, or to decay, as fate or fortune wills. There is not a city of any age in all Europe, now touched by the progressive spirit, which has not been for the last 30 years or will not be for the next 30 engaged in the titanic task of widening its old streets and constructing new ones.

But at what cost must the men and women of an unwalled and ungated city today make the place of their habitation habitable!

ADVANCE IN CITY LIGHTING

Hanging Arc Lamps so Installed That They Add to Instead of Detracting From Appearance.

Many of the old installations of hanging arc lamps are even uglier than the incandescents. The old arcs are usually suspended above the street on a tangle of wires and cables where they glare and sputter the long night through. But modern engineering and modern love of the beautiful, as well as the utility of a lighting system, have changed all this. The new systems of arc lighting are nothing like the old. The lamps are not hung above the street but crown the tops of ornamental standards placed alternately up and down the street. There are no hanging wires in sight, no sharp points of light to dazzle the eyes, no flicker and sputter. Instead of sharp, penetrating rays of bluish light the new luminous arc lamps give a flood of soft, white light which is many times more efficient and more economical than the light from the old lamps. The wire and cables are all underground, where they are safe and do not mar the natural beauty of the street. Shade trees do not have to be cut down or trimmed until they die.

Hints on Concrete Road Building.

Sprinkling the wearing surface of concrete roads during the construction period must be practically continuous on hot days unless there is some moisture-retaining medium present. Recent observations of a number of pieces of road construction, on which contractors new to the work were engaged, indicate that the inspector is having his hands full in getting the "wetting-down" specifications properly adhered to. Where earth is available a generous layer thrown on makes an excellent cover and holds water well. Some careful road builders in the West, recognizing the value of curing concrete under water, have made earth dams along the edges of concrete roads and divided the road longitudinally into a series of pools.—Engineering Record.

Boy Scouts Guarding Trees.

Philadelphia boy scouts are doing yeoman service in guarding the trees of the city from the caterpillar pest and other harm for which laws can be enforced to prevent mischief to forests and trees. The same plan is also being carried on in Burlington, Vt. It is an excellent idea to enlist the services of the boys in these preservative methods and teach them by this means to love and care for the trees, which the average city boy only enjoys for shade or as a convenient object from which to obtain a stick.

No Cause for Interference.

However brave the policemen are, they are careful about not breaking the laws and ordinances. A patrolman was kicking his feet down on the lake front in Chicago, so a story runs, when an excited citizen ran up to him and cried: "Say, hurry up! A man has just jumped off the pier!"

"With his clothes on?" asked the officer.

"Yes—fully dressed. Hurry!"

"What do you want me to do? There ain't no ordinance against a man swimmin' as long as he's properly dressed."

Obliging.

The Prisoner—Judge, everybody's tryin' ter keep me down. The Judge—All right; I'll send you up.—Exchange.

RICH OCTOGENARIAN AGAIN PROSPECTING

Goes Back to Scenes of Early Success in "Fifties."

Forest, Cal.—The spectacle of an old man, eighty-five years of age, fitting himself out as a prospector and taking his blankets into the hills after sixty years' vacation from the same sort of work proved interesting to the residents of this old mining camp. What made the incident more interesting was the fact that the prospector is a wealthy man and has no need for any more of this world's goods.

The stranger is James C. Chase, who mined in the headwaters of Jim Crow canyon in the early fifties and who took out enough to enable him to live in comfort among his relatives ever since.

He took his "pile" and later invested in the rich apple district in Washington and recently came to California to visit the fair. The call of his early life rang in his ears, and he could not resist the temptation to cover the ground where he made his fortune in his younger years.

Chase was not so succesful in his first day's panning as he was in the fifties, but was delighted when he found color in his pan. "I think I could show some of you old miners a trick in this business yet," said Chase to some of the men who have been mining here with indifferent success for years.

The old man does not look more than sixty and says he can stand camping as well as any man of any age. There are few in this old mining town who really remember the old man as a youngster of twenty-five who made a good "cleanup" and left here in 1855.

BLIND BASEBALL FAN.

John Moore of Decatur, Ill., Has That Distinction.

Decatur, Ill.—John Moore of this city has entered the competition for the distinction of being the most confirmed baseball fan of the country. Moore is blind, but is not depending upon that infirmity to bring him any advantage over his rivals.

The prize to go with the distinction is a ticket admitting the holder to any ball game between professional teams in this country or Canada.

Moore has a strong claim to the title and is prepared to submit evidence, as conclusive as practicable, that he has not missed a game at Decatur, which is a member of the Three-I league, in eight years.

Say Dan Cupid Is Loafing.

Columbus, O.—Cupid's business in Ohio was all shot full of holes last year. Little Dan trapped only 47,000 Ohio pairs in the year ending April 1, 1915, according to figures given out by Secretary of State Hildebrand. And that's 2,561 pairs fewer than were wedded in Ohio in the previous year and 100 fewer than 1912, when the population was much smaller.

ACCIDENTS KILL 25,000 WORKERS

Labor Bureau Publishes Statistics by Dr. Hoffman.

PROBLEM MUST BE MET.

Declared That Compensation For Industrial Accidents Will Become Universal—Railroad and Agricultural Pursuits Responsible For More Than 4,000 Fatalities Annually.

Washington.—An important bulletin on the statistics of industrial accidents by Frederick L. Hoffman has just been issued by the United States department of labor. The New York Medical Record says in part:

"The abolition of the principle of workmen's compensation by more than half of the states within the last few years emphasizes the importance of the industrial accident problem and foreshadows the time when such compensation for industrial accidents will become universal throughout the United states.

"As one method of measuring this importance the bulletin presents an estimate of the number of fatal and nonfatal accidents occurring among American wage earners in a single year.

"The conclusion reached is that the number of fatal industrial accidents among American wage earners, including both sexes, may be conservatively estimated at 25,000 and the number of injuries involving a disability of more than four weeks, using the ratio of Austrian experience, at approximately 700,000.

"These numbers, impressive as they are, fail to indicate fully the number of industrial accidents, for such studies as have already been made show that of the accidents involving disabilities of one day and over at least three-fourths terminate during the first four weeks.

"The injuries which contribute the greatest number of fatal accidents, according to Science for Aug. 30, 1915, are railroad employments and agricultural pursuits, each group being responsible for approximately 4,200 fatalities each year. Coal mining contributes more than 2,600 and building and construction work nearly 1,900. General manufacturing, while employing large numbers, produces only about 1,800 fatal accidents.

"When the fatality rates are considered, metal mining ranks as most hazardous, with a rate of four per thousand; coal mining comes next with a rate of 3.5, and fisheries and navigation following with a rate of three per thousand.

"Manufacturing industries as a whole rank lowest, with a rate of 0.25 per thousand, but the fact should not be overlooked that this low average rate covers manufacturing groups varying widely in hazard, including on the one hand boilermaking and the various departments of the iron and steel industry, in some of which fatality rates as high as those in metal and coal mining have prevailed, and on the other hand the textile and clothing industries, in some of which the risk of fatal accident is practically negligible.

"These estimates are derived from the best sources available. At the present time there are no entirely complete and trustworthy industrial accident statistics for even a single important industry in the United States. This lack of trustworthy industrial accident statistics is due to the absence of any uniform requirements in the various states as to the reports of industrial accidents."

TWO BOYS CAUGHT WOLF.

Bagged Him With Gunny Sack Near Small Town.

Kansas City.—Cecil Lattimer, twelve years old, and his brother, James Edgar, ten years old, sons of J. J. Lattimer of Independence, took a wolf scalp to the county clerk's office in that city recently and claimed the bounty of $6. The boys said they captured the wolf on the Frazier farm, southeast of Independence. When they saw it it ran into a hollow log. They procured a gunny sack and tied it over the opening of the log and then scared the wolf out into the sack.

RIGHT OR EXPEDIENT, OR BOTH?

By ROSE YOUNG.

TO the shortsighted it never seems expedient to apply great principles to life broadly and fairly and truly. There were colonists who deemed George Washington an irresponsible firebrand for doing anything so inexpedient as to lead a weak young colony to war with its powerful mother country. But he marched in the face of expediency to the victory of the principle for which he was willing to sacrifice everything. It was not at all expedient for the early Christians to believe in the principles that Christ taught them. If they had listened to the shortsighted the fires of their faith must have been soon chilled by those who were always on hand to point out how poorly such "doctrines of irresponsibility" would apply to life and how menacing they were to the "welfare of the state." But the early Christians didn't listen. They believed and died for the privilege of believing.

You might think we had come a little way since the days when expediency nailed principle to the cross—defamed and burned and tortured those who held principle supreme. But we haven't come so very far. To this day it is dangerous to believe with a belief that surpasses the hue and cry of expediency. To this day to voice such belief is to invite the raucous cry of criticism. Witness the case of Dr. Anna Howard Shaw, testifying in the Evening Post special suffrage number to her faith in the righteousness of suffrage, whatever suppositious scares the anti-democratic may drum up. Questions, she says, are constantly being raised in connection with the working of equal suffrage which seem to her to have nothing to do with it. "Mere suppositions, not based on fact, intended to befog the unthinking person," she calls them.

"If women had the ballot they wouldn't use it!" cries an anti. Even so, Dr. Shaw believes in suffrage.

"If women vote they will vote wrong!" cries another anti. But the cry leaves Dr. Shaw's suffrage faith unshaken.

"Women won't love their husbands, they will forsake their homes, they will refuse to be mothers of children!" comes the final challenge, growing vicious with desperation. The challenge ricochets futilely from Dr. Shaw's armor of belief. She wonders that any one should expect to damage principle ever so slightly by these mere suppositions, NOT BASED ON FACT.

Belief that is at the mercy of the winds of expediency is not belief; it is mere sham and self deception. Dr. Shaw's belief in suffrage is real. Her consecration to principle is unswerving. The antis cannot understand it.

What the Antis Think of Men.

In a pamphlet issued by the Guidon Club a "college woman opposed to woman suffrage" pays the following compliment to congressmen:

"Yesterday it was my privilege to listen to the arguments presented by members of the house of representatives for and against woman suffrage, and as I listened I for one woman thanked God that I had no vote and therefore was not responsible for the specimens of statesmanship that I beheld. Shades of our forefathers! What has happened to the mantle of Jefferson?"

LIBERTY FOR SAILORS.

Under American Law the Seaman Is No Longer a Slave.

Yes, it is true the Sixty-third congress passed acts of legislation which will be remembered when nearly all others enacted by it have been forgotten or have been superseded. When in the Clayton act it laid down as a definite principle of policy on the part of the United States that "the labor of a human being is not a commodity or an article of commerce" it distinguished between persons and things in such a way as no congress or other lawmaking body did at any earlier period. The labor power of a human being is the most personal of all things on earth. It grows with the human growth; it decays in sickness and old age and ceases at death; it cannot be divided from the possessor thereof; it cannot be separated from the person, and if the judiciary had recognised this distinction between persons and things, between the labor power and the products thereof, there would have been little necessity for any amendment to the Sherman anti-trust law.

This same principle runs through the so called "seamen's act." It makes the seaman for the first time in seven centuries the owner of his own body it makes it possible within the jurisdiction of the United States for these seamen, not only on vessels of the United States, but on all foreign vessels, to assert their rights as human beings, as persons created in the image of God, endowed with certain inalienable rights, among which are the rights of liberty, equality and the pursuit of happiness.—Andrew Furuseth, President International Seamen's Union.

PINE ENRICHES INDIANS.

Chippewas Get Property Valued at $820,500.

Ashland, Wis.—Pine timber valued at $820,500 on the Bad River reservation, near Ashland, will be distributed among 547 Indians, many of whom are children, according to official notice received by the Indian office from the secretary of the Interior.

In addition to the timber each Indian will have title to the land on which the timber stands, averaging about eighty acres for each person.

It is claimed by government experts that the Chippewa Indians of the Bad River reservation are the richest tribe in America, with one exception. They have more than $1,500,000 to their credit in the vaults of Ashland and Duluth from the sale of pine from former allotments.

Anchovies.

The delicious little fish called the anchovy is found in large quantities in the Mediterranean sea and also on the coasts of Spain, Portugal and France, where extensive fishing operations are carried on during the months of May, June and July.

THE BATTLE OF LIFE.

In its best estate and in its highest condition life is a fight, not a truce; a struggle, not an achievement; a growth, not a pleasure; a discipline, not a relaxation. The man who wins its real successes is not he who has the most perfect health, but he who bears disease and misfortune with silent courage and gains from them a more daring spirit.

DOLLARS COME HOME TO ROOST

EVERY farmer who makes our town his market place has an interest in this community. The fact that he is a member of the community makes much difference to him when he considers that the prosperity of our town is his own prosperity.

But when he sends his money to the mail order houses HE DOES NOT STOP TO THINK THAT HE IS NOT HELPING TO PAY THE REQUIRED TAXES IN HIS OWN COMMUNITY; not that he does not pay his own legally assessed taxes, but that he is not helping our local merchants to pay the taxes necessary to support the community.

The mail order man has absolutely no interest in the community. He plays the part of a fisherman—strolling about, casting a line here and there, where he thinks the best fishing is to be found, and after pulling out the fish he departs. The mail order man does not contribute to the upkeep of the community. He merely takes away from it.

When a farmer sends his dollars to the mail order house he prevents a certain amount of improvements, say, for instance, in road building, here in our county. The mail order man does not help to build our roads, but the local storekeeper does.

If we keep the dollars at home they will keep on helping us all. Dollars, spent at home, come home to roost. They come back in the upkeep of our town and county institutions. We have none too many dollars at the most in our community and it seems a shame to send any of them away to the mail order houses, where we will never see them again.

The dollars we send away help the mail order man to take a vacation in Europe or at the seashore. THEY HELP HIM TO MAINTAIN HIS AUTOMOBILE AND TO RIDE ON PAVED ROADS.

If we keep these same dollars at home they will help us to have better roads in our own county. Of course, the mail order man pays his taxes in the city, which helps to pave the streets of the city, but we here in our town don't benefit by that. Therefore, the best thing for us to do is keep our money at home, where it will do us some good.

OUR LOCAL MERCHANTS WILL USE THE DOLLARS TO GOOD ADVANTAGE BY HELPING TO PAY THE TAXES HERE—THE TAXES REQUIRED TO BUILD GOOD ROADS. EVERY DOLLAR SPENT IN OUR HOME TOWN MEANS IMPROVEMENTS AT HOME.

The merchants of our town deserve the patronage of the people in our community. They are a part, a very large part, of the community and they pay a major portion of the taxes. The more business they do the more taxes they must pay and the more taxes paid into the county treasury, the more improvements we can have.

Unless we are careful and watch our own interests we will find out to our cost that the ultimate result of the mail order scheme will be the centralization of all of the country business in the large cities and the absolute destruction of the financial interests in the small cities and towns. The only way to prevent this is to stop sending our orders to the mail order houses.

Let the dollars come home to roost. That is the only way, and they will come home to roost if we do not send them too far away. The dollars spent locally will circle around and keep things lively, but if sent away we must get more dollars from outside to take their place. It is not always an easy matter to do this. THE SAFEST THING TO DO IS TO TAKE NO CHANCES, BUT TO SPEND THEM AT HOME WITH THE LOCAL STOREKEEPERS.

If we had any expectation that the mail order man would ever do anything to help our community, things might be different. But there is no chance. He comes to us in the garb of an artful deceiver, with gross misrepresentations, false promises and a record of disappointments. But we welcome the opportunity to again place ourselves on record as being his dupes. There isn't a grain of kindness in his whole makeup. He demands his cash in advance and gives you that which he wishes to send. You have no redress. You have no rights that he is bound to respect.

The mere fact that we are silly enough to send our money away, out of our own community, to a stranger, thereby injuring our own business prospects and jeopardizing our own prosperity, justifies him in believing that he can take the most outrageous liberties with us.

Bread cast on the waters will return, not so with dollars sent to the mail order house. Turkeys will come home to roost, if somebody does not catch them.

BUT DOLLARS WILL COME HOME TO ROOST IF WE KEEP THEM IN CIRCULATION IN OUR HOME TOWN. TRY IT.

The Truth About Diamonds

¶ WHEN a few years ago the prediction was made that Diamonds would double in value, there were many doubters. The prediction, however, has been more than justified.

¶ DIAMONDS have doubled, tripled, and in some sizes and qualities, quadrupled in value.

¶ THE appreciation in value is still going on.

¶ DIAMONDS bought today are not an extravagance, but an investment. They are one of the luxuries of life that have an intrinsic value from which cash can be realized when the winds of adversity blow our way.

¶ THE wearing of Diamonds is an evidence of our appreciation of Nature's most precious and beautiful creation, and of your financial prosperity.

"ALBURTUS" DRIFTED INTO TOWN TODAY

Readers of The Times (weekly) must remember the first word of the above caption, for it is the non de plume of one who at one time in the old days of the weekly paper furnished an interesting and highly amusing humorous column. "Alburtus" was then employed by the Fort Stanwix Company and his literary work was a side issue with him—one that gave the writer much joy.

Since leaving Fulton "Alburtus" has bucked the line of resistance, from receiving the appointment as assistant editor of the Employers' Magazine, a publication issued and paid for by the Rochester, Pittsburgh & Buffalo Railway Company, to a later position as manager of the publicity department of the company. This latest situation involves a lot of newspaper writing, interviewing and work of a diplomatic nature, known and appreciated best by those persons who are versed in newspaper work.

"Alburtus" dropped into The Times office this morning to renew friendships and to say that he is known to everybody by the name of O. W. Taylor.

Mr. Taylor, you have the felicitations of The Times' force.

For those taking advantage of our three months' electricity for cooking Free Offer, we will sell electric cooking apparatus at $8 and up, payable in weekly installments of 25 cents and up. Adv.

BROWN MAKES NO REPLY

Anderson Comes Back, But Senator Thinks It Useless to Further Correspond.

Yesterday's Evening Times contained a letter written by W. H. Anderson of the Anti-Saloon League to Senator Brown, as well as the latter's reply. Anderson comes back at the Senator, who prefers to maintain a dignified silence. Anderson's letter follows:

Hon. Elon R. Brown,
Watertown, N. Y.

Dear Sir:

Your statement that you will have no private correspondence with me I construe as permission to publish your letter. I assume that the people of your county and district will be interested to observe your frank suggestion that the matter of enabling the people to protect themselves against the liquor traffic is not important.

The suggestion about my hoving no influence in New York city is very refreshing coming from a man who, if I am correctly informed, failed to carry his own county in the last primary.

You make the same mistake that is made generally by the old linel iquor machine politicians, of assuming that this is a personal matter. If I personally should oppose you, I would properly be laughed at. The question, so far as you are concerned, is not whether William H. Anderson has any personal influence or is wise or whether you like him, but whether the decent, self-supporting citizenship is to have its right of self government on the liquor issue. The last paragraph of your letter indicates that you would regard the result of the primary as more or less conclusive. I do not know how the primary in your county is going to turn out, as I have no late reports, but if you cherish the delusion that a victory for Mr. Machold in this primary settles anything in your favor and against the right of the people, or the determination of the people to have a vote on the liquor question, you are in for am ost unpleasant awakening. I have seen stronger and brighter men than you, and men who apparently were far better intrenched go down to ultimate and permanent defeat after they had won the first scrimmage or two.

Turns on Light.

I personally haven't any intention of doing anything to you beyond focusing the spotlight on you so that people will see clearly just where you stand and what you are doing. It is the people who will do the work. You evidently are not up on recent political history of the state, or else you have gotten your information from prejudiced or partially informed circles, for if you had comprehended what had happened to Mr. Charles H. Betts, a cog in the Raines machine out in the old standpat Payne district, you would realize that new things are happening and happening rapidly.

I am writing to you again in this way a letter which you are perfectly at liberty top ublish in case you see fit to do so because I have nothing against you personally and it will afford me no pleasure whatever to see you defeated. I would very much rather see you become responsive to the public will and be a useful public servant, in harmony with the higher ideals of the forward-moving civilization. We would much rather be able to hold you up as a friend of the people than the contrary.

You speak of this letter as "one of the multitude of insulting letters you make it your business to address to public officials." It happens, however, that I have on my desk at this very moment a number of letters from public officials who not only stand higher than you, but who are evidently very much more in public favor than you, who do not agree with you as to the character of my letters. Possibly the fact that these officials have not been implicated in any proposition involving the withholding of the people's rights of self government, makes a difference.

It is our experience that men in public life who continually stand for the protection of the liquor traffic inevitably belie ther reputation as "shrewd" politicians. The fatal element of unsoundness in their position is that whenever a man is wrong, anything that he does is a mistake. If he keeps silent, the people take it as a confession when definite, specific charges are made repeatedly and allowed to go by default. If he talks, as Mr. Betts did, he gives us a handle just exactly as you have done in the letter in which you express your contempt for the effort of the Christian people through a duly accredited representative to secure the substance as well as the fiction of self government and majority rule on the liquor question. We carry on our work strong in the assurance born of an experience which has been succeeding generations of liquor politicians go down all over the country, that unless men like yourself reverse themselves quickly and get right with the people, their retirement is a matter of a comparatively short time, and they will make sentiment and prove real assets to the movement even during the remainder of their political days. Once in a great while, a man sees light. For example, Senator Orville F. Berry, who occupied in the Illinois senate a position that practically corresponded to yours, and who, seeing the light, helped put through the measure which is the basis of the proposed New York bill, and stayed in public life, whereas Senator "Hank" Evans, another member of the clique that controlled the senate, stood out to the last, and went down to political oblivion, unwept and unsung.

The Humble Secretary.

In due time you will have an opportunity to make good on your proposition that our proposed legislation is a "bad bill and improper legislation in the form proposed from every point of view." You are undertaking a large task in assuming that you know more about this matter than the great body of intelligent people who are demanding this legislation—for example the 1,500 to 2,000 ministers who preached on it on one Sunday last winter. You seem to have overlooked the fact that the old refuge of the liquor politicians, namely a division in the temperance forces, has been eliminated. The only dissenters from this proposition, if any, will be a little handful of the irreconcilable representatives of the third party, and any attempt on the part of the Republican politicians to take their side would be greeted with guffaws of derision.

In order that you may understand how humble a part I play in this kind of work, and that it is a great forward movement of the people and not any individual, I just wish to call attention to the fact that after I left Illinois, the work grew steadily until its revenue is more than twice as great, and has gone steadfastly forward until more than 1,200 townships are dry. The map on the back of the enclosed leaflet may be illuminating. Likewise in Maryland; I did not have the satisfaction of seeing the defeat before I left the state to come to New York, of the man who did us out of our hard earned victory, as a member of the senate, but that state is now headed for state prohibition as the immediate issue and I had the satisfaction the past week, although I have been away from that state nearly two years, of seeing the job completed and the humiliating defeat of this man for the position that he aspired to, and which had been promised to him in return for his betrayal of the temperance people who had trusted him; likewise the speaker of the assembly who was especially obnoxious and whom we could not defeat in the election two years ago, was overwhelmingly defeated this time in his aspirations for the state's attorneyship, which had been promised him in return for his services to thel iquor ring, he being the second man defeated for that particular office under substantially the same circumstances. Likewise the assemblyman who stayed in public life because he happened to come from a wet district, longer than would have been normally possible, because of his action as chairman of the committee to which the bill was referred years ago, went down to defeat in the primaries when he attempted to get his promotion to the senate. In other words, when I have stepped out of the work in the other states where I have been engaged, the work has not stopped or been hurt, but the people whom I serve to the best of my ability, have gone on steadily toward victory, and even if I should leave the work in New York State—something which I have not in contemplation, however—things have gotten far enough in this state to insure the certainty of victory unless national prohibition comes first.

If you believe that I am any considerable portion of the league, instead of merely being the executive officer of a movement representative of an awakening public sentiment, and if you think that my course is not defensible and that I do not represent the Christian citizenship of the state, especially the ministers as the leaders of their respective churches you are at liberty to undertake to try to get me out of my job, but I would advise that you inform yourself respecting the outcome of the attempt on the part of the late lamented (politically) Mr. Betts to do this thing.

Yours very truly,
State Superintendent Anti-Saloon League of New York.

W. C. T. U. NOTES.

(Compiled by Local Union)

The Atlanta Methodist District Steward's Association has unanimously requested pastors of the denomination not to appoint to official positions men who are in any responsible for the existence of locker clubs and near beer saloons, pronouncing them "the greatest possible menace to moral well-being and commercial prosperity."

Hon. Thos. B. Felder, one of the state's leading lawyers and orators, erstwhile liquor champion and long-time high-salaried attorney retained for the brewers and distillers of several states, has been convicted and converted in regard to the liquor traffic. Three years ago severing his connection with the liquor traffic because of his disgust at its atrocities, he is lending his trained mind, varied knowledge and superior ability toward its complete overthrow. Announcement is made that he is soon to fill a number of dates in Georgia in the interest of temperance and prohibition.

The Illinois State Board of Administration has ordered that all women employes of state institutions shall receive pay equal to the men for the same work.

The governors of all the suffrage states have been asked to assist in the New York suffrage campaign.

"All the influence of the Pennsylvania Federation of Liquor Dealers will be thrown against the constitutional amendment which gives women the ballot," says the Philadelphia Public Ledger. "Opinions expressed today by dealers from widely scattered sections disclosed that they oppose 'votes for women' and they will aid in financing the anti-suffrage campaign. With women voting, the dealers say, the vote against the saloon would be so big that the death knell would soon be sounded for the business."

What use is made of the saloon buildings left empty by prohibition is a question often asked. The Des Moines (Ia.) Capital answers the query as to its own city in the following satisfactory fashion:

"In place of nose paint to energetic occupants of the once famous haunts of the thirsty are now handing over the counters such articles as automobile tires, shoes, clothing, groceries and meats. Soft drinks and luncheonettes are now served to those who feel impelled to tear loose of a few jits. No less than seventeen of the new occupants are giving their customers the sort of refreshments that produce no 'morning after.'

"Some of the saloonists themselves, when the edict went forth that put Des Moines in the 'dry,' stuck their guns and simply changed the nature of their stock. Where they sold the booze before they now sell fruits and other necessary commodities."

When Mason, Mo., voted to outlaw the liquor traffic the "personal liberty" crowd condemned it to death and decay. Today it is a living refutation of the false prophecies, says the Kansas City Star. According to that paper, "In the saloon days there never was a time when a bond issue for public improvements could be liquidated without raising it by taxation. Now business has increased so at the municipal plants—which reflect the business of the town generally—that extensive improvements can be made without costing the people a nickel." These municipal plants, by the way, are now making an annual profit for the city of more than $6,000.

ST. LAWRENCE COUNTY FARMERS WANT LIME

Watertown.—Plans are being made by the St. Lawrence county farm bureau for using the entire week of Sept. 27 to Oct. 2 for a series of meetings throughout the county to arouse more interest in the use of lime.

Tests made on several farms, when seeding to clover and timothy with the oat crop last year, have shown a marked increase in the clover crop this year. Sandy loam soils especially have shown a marked need of lime and in some cases clay soils in the granite rock regions of the county. Clover is the one crop in this county for which lime is needed. The lime can as wel be used after the fall plowing as in the spring and thus save time when spring work is crowding.

Difference Between Amusing and Convincing

By HERBERT KAUFMAN

Author of "Do Something! Be Something!"

AN ADVERTISER must realize that there is a vast difference between amusing people and convincing them. It does not pay to be "smart" at the line rate of the average first-class paper. I suppose that I could draw the attention of everybody on the street by painting half of my face red and donning a suit of motley. I might have a sincere purpose in wishing to attract the crowd, but I would be deluding myself if I mistook the nature of their attention.

The new advertiser is especially prone to misjudge between amusing and convincing copy. A humorous picture may catch the eye of every reader, but it won't pay as well as an illustration of some piece of merchandise which will strike the eye of every buyer. Merchants secure varying results from the same advertising space. The publisher delivers to each the same quality of readers, but the advertiser who plants flippancy in the minds of the community won't attain the benefit that is secured by the merchant who imprints clinching arguments there.

Always remember that the advertising sections of newspapers are no different than farming lands. And it is as preposterous to hold the publisher responsible for the outcome of unintelligent copy as it would be unjust to blame the soil for bad seed and poor culture. Every advertiser gets exactly the same number of readers from a publisher and the same readers—after that it's up to him—the results fluctuate in accordance with the intelligence and the pulling power of the copy which is inserted.

A Dollar That Can't Be Spent

By HERBERT KAUFMAN

Author of "Do Something! Be Something!"

EVERY dollar spent in advertising is not only a seed dollar which produces a profit for the merchant, but is actually retained by him even after he has paid it to the publisher.

Advertising creates a good will equal to the cost of the publicity.

Advertising really costs nothing. While it uses funds it does not use them up. It helps the founder of a business to grow rich and then keeps his business alive after his death.

It eliminates the personal equation. It perpetuates confidence in the store and makes it possible for a merchant to withdraw from business without having the profits of the business withdrawn from him. It changes a name to an institution—an institution which will survive its builder.

It is really an insurance policy which costs nothing—pays a premium each year instead of calling for one and renders it possible to change the entire personnel of a business without disturbing its prosperity.

Advertising renders the business stronger than the man—independent of his presence. It permanentizes systems of merchandising, the track of which is left for others to follow.

A business which is not advertised must rely upon the personality of its proprietor, and personality in business is a decreasing factor. The public does not want to know the man who owns the store—it isn't interested in him but in his goods. When an unadvertised business is sold it is only worth as much as its stock of goods and its fixtures. There is no good will to be paid for—it does not exist—it has not been created. The name over the door means nothing except to the limited stream of people from the immediate neighborhood, any of whom could tell you more about some store ten miles away which has regularly delivered its shop news to their homes.

It is as shortsighted for a man to build a business which dies with his death or ceases with his inaction, as it is unfair for him not to provide for the continuance of its income to his family.

SYNOPSIS

Old Cyrus Martin, the head of the American soap trust, makes a bet of $30,000 with a friend, John Clark, a rival soapmaker, that his (Martin's) son Rodney would be making more money at the end of a year than Clark's son Ellery.

Martin takes his pretty secretary, Mary Grayson, into his confidence and enlists her co-operation. Rodney has been a spendthrift, and the father wants to make him reform and go to work.

Mary meets Rodney, and the son proposes marriage to her. Rodney tells his father about his proposal, and the old man pretends great anger. He tells Mary he will disinherit Rodney.

Rodney defies his father, and Mary is deeply touched at the lad's genuine affection for her. Mary makes a financial bargain with Martin to encourage the son to go to work.

Ambrose Peale, press agent, meets Rodney and agrees to go into business with the lad on a salary basis. Rodney has resolved to go into the soap industry and buck the trust.

Rodney, Peale and Mary go into the soap trade together. Rodney then endeavors to borrow $10,000 as capital for his newly formed company.

The offices of the "13 Soap company" are opened, and they advertise it as "the most expensive soap in the world." Peale talks advertising continually.

The 13 Soap company finds its expenses very heavy, and financial rocks loom ahead. Their chief business seems to have been to spend money for advertising under Peale's directions.

An alleged countess, who has appeared on the scene, desires to purchase the French rights for the sale of "13 Soap" and produces a draft for $20,000, which she desires to have cashed.

The "countess" is shown to be an impostor and despair settles over the 13 Soap company. The firm introduces her, however, to Ellery Clark. Father Martin visits the offices.

Martin, fearing rumors that the new company would injure his business and might break the trust, offers to buy out the firm for $100,000 and give Rodney, Peale and Mary good positions. Then he learns that the company is "dead broke."

Suddenly out of a clear sky comes an order for 50,000 cakes of 13 Soap from the great firm of Brown & James of Chicago. "The tide has turned," the trio now declare.

door and came in. From the look on her face she was glad to see him and extraordinarily relieved too. Alas for the soap king! He did not realize how short his satisfaction was to be.

"Why, Mr. Martin!" cried Mary happily.

"Hello, Miss Grayson!" he said. "It's mighty good to see you again."

"Oh, Mr. Martin," responded Mary, "I'm so glad Rodney finally sent for you!"

"Sent for me?" repeated Mr. Martin in surprise. "Have you talked to him?"

"Oh, yes. He's just gone out for a minute to see the agent of the landlord."

"Oh, then he told you about that too?"

"Yes, he told me. Why not?" asked Mr. Martin, puzzled.

"Oh, I'm so glad you've settled with him. You have settled, haven't you?"

"Yes; sure."

"Oh, good! Isn't it wonderful for him?"

The relief in Mary's voice was genuine, absolutely, as Ambrose Peale would have said. Poor Mary had had a trying day. There had been that dreadful man Jones to begin with. Rodney's $2,500 check must have gone through the clearing house in double quick time, Mary had thought, as the advertising dun appeared again. The fact was, it seemed that he had gone to the bank to get it certified and was furious to find that there were no funds there of the 13 Soap company to meet it with. He roared loudly about the sheriff. Unless the check was made good at his office in an hour he would have the sheriff round and sell them out, cover up their billboards and send them all to jail.

Mary didn't know much about sheriffs, and they sounded terrifying. She had heard about the law's delay, but the law sounded swift and terrible as interpreted by the irate Jones. She couldn't laugh about it and chaff about a cell with a sunny exposure, as Ambrose Peale did. That awful countess too! A woman swindler who had tried to get into them for $5,000. And the electric agent threatening to turn off the light from all their beautiful signs if he wasn't paid at once. How unreasonable people were! How could you pay them when you hadn't any money? And now, last of all, the rent agent making a fuss. No wonder Mary had begged Rodney to send for his father and give in. She was sure old Mr. Martin would help Rodney if he was sent for. Very naturally Mary thought on seeing Cyrus Martin smoking his cigar there contentedly that he had come in answer to Rodney's summons. She went on, sighing:

"Just think, without you he couldn't have lasted out the day."

"Couldn't what?" ejaculated the astonished soap king; then, recovering himself swiftly, he added: "Quite so. Quite so. Oh, by the way, in our negotiations the one thing Rodney didn't go into fully was the nature of the assets."

"The assets!" laughed Mary gayly. "They must have amused you. Why, we haven't any."

"Ha, ha! Haven't any?" echoed Mr. Martin, trying to laugh with her.

"But everything's all right now," went on Mary sweetly.

"Oh, yes! Great, great!" said Mr. Martin. "By the way, there was a report on the street today that the Andover Soap people were going to make a deal with Rodney—build him a factory"—

"Oh, there's nothing in that," said Mary innocently.

"Are you sure? As I got here I thought I saw Ellery Clark."

"Oh, that wasn't business. He just

"Oh, what have I done?"

came to try to borrow some money from Rodney. Wasn't that funny?"

"Oh, yes, very funny," said Martin; then, changing his whole manner, he added angrily:

"The young scoundrel!"

"What!" said Mary.

"Thank you, Miss Grayson, for telling me," said Mr. Martin. "Do you know what he tried to do to me? Hold me up for $100,000, and but for you he'd have succeeded."

"Oh, what have I done?" cried Mary in distress.

"You've saved me a lot of money and kept me from being a fool. That's what you've done. Thank you. Good morning."

"You mean at last he had succeeded in getting you to back him?" cried Mary.

"At last! So that was his scheme all the time, was it? He didn't go into business on the level, but just for my benefit? And you were helping him. Well, he can thank you again for having failed."

"It's all my fault," cried Mary, breaking down.

"Yes, it was from the start. You got up the plan of my pretending to put him out of the house—a mighty silly idea."

"Oh, but I tell you you must help him," pleaded Mary.

"Help him yourself. You've got $5,000."

"But I gave it to him," cried Mary.

"My son took money from you!"

"He didn't know. I pretended it was from a friend. It made him awfully jealous, too," blubbered Mary.

"Well, you got him in, now you can get him out," declared the soap king.

"But your bet," asked Mary—"you bet $30,000 with John Clark. You don't want to lose that, do you?"

"Well, if Ellery's trying to borrow money from Rodney it looks like an even break. And anyhow I'd lose the bet twice over rather than have my own son think he could make a fool of his father."

"But he is a good business man," pleaded Mary bravely. "He'd make you proud of him. If he could keep on a little longer I know he'd succeed. If you'll just help him he'll make money, you'll see he will."

"Of course, you want him to make money," said Mr. Martin brutally. "You're thinking of that percentage contract with me."

"I'm not—oh I'm not!" cried Mary. "I can't see him fail. I don't want you to pay me. I'll try to give you back what you've given me."

"By George, I believe you really are in love with him, Mary."

"Yes, I am—now," admitted Mary proudly. "But that doesn't matter. We've got to save him—save his business."

"I won't give him a nickel. Goodby!"

"But you can't go like this," Mary cried. "He'll be disgraced. He's in debt—in danger."

"Let him get out of it himself, then," said this Roman father. "It'll do him good. I've been a sentimental fool. I've made it all too easy for him."

"But that's your fault, too," persisted Mary.

"Yes, it is, and I don't propose to repeat the error. He's lied to me all the way through. We'll let him face the truth now. We'll see what he's made of."

Mary just sat and looked at him quite limply, letting her hands fall idle in her lap. What could she do? To make matters worse she could hear the rumble of men's voices outside as Rodney and Peale tried to soothe the rent agent's righteous indignation. Rodney and Peale came back, trying to look cheerful, but really quite crestfallen, as Mary could see very well.

"Well, we're going to move," said Rodney.

"Yes, nice chap, that fellow," said Peale.

"Well, Mary, have you heard about our deal?" asked Rodney next.

"The deal's off," Mr. Martin interrupted brusquely.

"Yes, off," repeated Mr. Martin brusquely. "Because you took me for a bigger fool than I am. My own son can't do that to me. I've found out now that you're broke."

"Oh, Mr. Martin!" protested Mary, crying.

But Mr. Martin stopped her.

"And all the time you were lying to me about the Andover Soap people and the factory they were going to put up. You thought you could make a fool of me—get the best of me, did you? Well, you can't. I'm finished with you and your 13 Soap. You're a smart Alec. You're a complete fake."

"I guess you're right," said Rodney.

"Ah!" said Mr. Martin.

"I did try to be smart," Rodney said. "I was stuck on myself. I thought business was a cinch. But you're right. I have been a fake. This whole thing never seemed real. It was just fun—like a game. But I've waked up, and now it's serious. I tried to get the best of you, but I'll take my licking. I don't want any charity. I know what's coming to me, and I'll take my medicine."

"It's up to me, and nobody else, to get out of this. Please go."

His father looked him over curiously.

"Well, maybe I've said a little too much," he said, relenting a little.

"No; it's all true," said Rodney.

"But, see here. I don't want you disgraced," said his father. "I"—

"You told me never to come back to you for a nickel," said Rodney bravely, "and I won't."

"Now, see here," began Martin.

"Please, father," Rodney went on. "It's up to me, and nobody else, to get out of this. Please go."

He held out his hand.

"Goodby, son," he said gently and went out.

"Oh, Rodney, Rodney!" cried Mary when the office door had closed on the old man's back.

A SMART FROCK.

Navy Serge For the High School Girl.

[illegible]

This attractive variation from the middy suit is developed in navy serge. The unusual yoke effect buttons on either side, and from the waist the fullness hangs in straight lines down the skirt's length. The neck is finished with a white pique collar and a velvet ribbon tie. Large pearl buttons and a double white kid belt add smart finishes.

DRESS YOUR CHARACTER.

How to Look Becoming Rather Than Ultra.

Dress your character, not your figure, is the advice of a famous actress, and rather surprising this advice seems at first hearing. But think it over well and the excellence of the idea will appeal to you. Every woman has a certain individuality of her own—a temperament, if you will—that makes her a little or perhaps a good deal different from all other women. It is the individuality, this temperament, that women should dress up to, according to the actress, in order to make the personality more marked and convincing.

But an instinctive carrying out of this advice with no heed to the promptings of reason may result in disaster. For example, there is always the woman who weighs 200 pounds or thereabouts, but whose personality is distinctly kittenish. Is she to dress her character or her figure? There is also the very little woman who ought to belong to the cuddly, appealing class, who yearns to be impressive and stately. If she insists upon wearing the garments of the grenadier woman she may spoil her chances of being fascinatingly charming.

But between these two extremes there is a very happy medium, and in this idea of dressing up to one's type there is also a very valuable suggestion. The importance of reflecting personal individuality in costume is appreciated by many women who design their own clothes and hand the designs to tailor, dressmaker and milliner to reproduce in practical guise. The actress in her part is always dressed in conformity with the character she is portraying, but her costumes—and there is an important point—are made to suit her figure lines while expressing a special sort of personality. Therefore if the delightful flounces of the 1830 period suit your type exactly, but are a bit trying to your too solid figure, adopt the flounces, but see to it that they are so cut and so arranged that the lines of the silhouette are right.

Children's Dresses.

The peasant influence is very strong in children's dresses. The various lacings, the many kinds of guimpes and the bolero jackets verify this statement. Braid trimmings, novelty buttons, pockets and collars are used to give a military effect.

Waist lines of children's dresses are just as fickle as are the waist lines of grownups' frocks. High waisted effects are used mostly in party frocks. Normal waist lines and low belted effects are reserved for more practical dresses.

Skirts of children's dresses are given fulness by means of plaits, shirring or a circular cut.

The reliable blue serge dress will of course be popular for school dresses. Plaid silk promises to be a favorite trimming for dresses of this material. Combinations of navy blue and army blue are very popular and blue and red are also looked upon with favor.

Black and white checks and plaids are made up in a variety of styles for practical dresses. Sometimes the entire dress is of the plaid, but more often it is used in combination with plain color.

THE RIGHT TO STRIKE.

Report of Employers' Representatives on Industrial Commission.

The report to congress made by the employers' representatives of the federal commission on industrial relations was signed by Harris Weinstock, Richard H. Aishton and S. Thurston Ballard.

The three men who signed the report are rated as millionaires, all employers of labor. Weinstock is a retired department store manager from the Pacific coast. Ballard is the biggest flour miller in the south and lives at Louisville. Aishton is vice president of the Chicago Northwestern railroad. The charges against employers made by these employers' representatives on the commission follow:

"That they have resorted to questionable methods to prevent their workers from organizing.

"That they have attempted to defeat democracy by more or less successfully controlling courts and legislatures.

"That they have exploited women and children and unorganised workers.

"That they have resorted to all sorts of methods to prevent the enactment of remedial legislation.

"That they have employed gun men in strikes who were disreputable characters and who assaulted innocent people and committed other crimes most reprehensible in character.

"That they have paid lower wages than competitive conditions warranted.

"That they have worked their people long hours and under insanitary and dangerous conditions.

"That they have exploited prison labor at the expense of free labor.

"That they have been contract breakers with labor.

"That they have attempted through the authorities to suppress free speech and the right of peaceful assembly.

"That they have deliberately and for selfish ends bribed representatives of labor.

"And that all of these things tend to produce industrial unrest, with all its consequent and farreaching ills.

"We feel, with organized labor, that there should be no restriction put upon the right to strike, realizing, as we do, that the strike is the only weapon which in the interest of labor can be effectively and legally used to aid in bettering its conditions."

To these confessions of the methods that have been employed against labor these representatives of the employing class add the following remarkable admissions:

"When labor is effectively organized it has two most powerful weapons at its command that the employer, as a rule, dreads and fears because of the great damage these weapons can inflict on him—namely, the strike and the primary boycott, both of which are within the moral and legal rights of the worker to use.

"We say frankly that if we were wage earners we would be [illegible] unionists we would [illegible] responsibility of giving [illegible] attention to our [illegible] as to our civic duties."

RAINCOAT MAKERS WIN.

Union Gets More Pay and Shorter Hours From Manufacturers.

The officers of the Waterproof Garment Makers' assocation of New York city, which controls a large percentage of the manufacture of raincoats, have signed an agreement with the Waterproof Garment Workers' union conceding the wage increases demanded. The new wage scale calls for 70 cents an hour for operators and cementers, $27.50 a week for cutters, $24 a week for pressers, $20.25 for underpressers, $15 for part pressers and $18 for machine button sewers.

In addition to these increases, which mean from 15 to 30 per cent addition to the wages of the workers, the employers have granted a forty-eight hour week, review of discharges by an impartial tribunal, double pay for overtime and inspection of shops by a union representative to adjust grievances. Under the peace contract all contractors and submanufacturers must be governed by the same conditions as those existing in the main shops. There will be no cessation of work in the shops of the members of the association.

Big Bonus For Workers.

Twenty-five hundred of the employees of the Alexander Smith & Son carpet works of Yonkers, N. Y., opened their pay envelopes on Sept. 1 and found bonus checks therein, the ninth experience of the kind in four and a half years. These employees received $65,000, making $613,000 in all that has been distributed to them since the bonus plan has been in vogue at the works.

Each employee who has been in the employ of the company for ten years or more received a bonus check for 10 per cent of his last six months' salary, and each employee who has been in the employ of the company for more than five years, but less than ten years, received a bonus check for 5 per cent of his last six months' salary.

Garment Workers May Strike.

A general strike of clothing workers, involving 200,000 in Baltimore, Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, Rochester, St. Louis, Cincinnati and Milwaukee, is contemplated, it was stated at a recent meeting of the executive council of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America at Baltimore. The council authorized the Chicago workers to make their demands for a forty-eight hour week and higher wages. In the event the manufacturers refuse, a general strike, involving 50,000 workers in Chicago, will be called within six weeks, at the beginning of the busy season.

Easy & Practical Home Dress Making Lessons

Prepared Especially For This Newspaper by Pictorial Review

FOR SCHOOL DAY OR SUNDAY.

This model is practical as well as pretty, for it can be worn with or without the blouse. When the blouse is omitted a pleasing version of the suspender skirt is obtained.

Children's frocks assume greater importance with the nearing of Autumn because school heads include as many servicable and pretty frocks as it is possible to have. This model in cotton ratine has a blouse of plain linen, which may be laundered easily. For the blouse there is a convertible collar and long one-piece sleeves. Without the blouse the dress makes a very pretty suspender model. In average size the design takes 2⅛ yards 36-inch linen for the blouse and 2¼ yards 44-inch ratine for the skirt and suspenders.

An underfacing of blue lawn may be used for the facing, to give a touch of color. To do this turn under the front edge of the front on slot perforations, using the large "O" perforations to indicate the center-front. Gather shoulder edge of front between double "TT" perforations and close under-arm and shoulder seams as notched. Stitch a casing to position underneath front and back and between crosslines of small "o" perforations; then insert a draw-string. Face the collar with the blue lawn or make it entirely of this trimming. Pockets may be added if desired.

The blouse is now ready for the sleeves, which are made by first gathering the lower edge between double "oo" perforations, then sewing cuff to lower edge of long sleeve. Sew in armhole, notches and small "o" perforations even, easing in any fulness.

Next, slash the skirt to left of center-back on line of double "oo" perforations for opening. Join gores as notched. Turn hem at lower edge on double "oo" perforations. Form box-pleats, creasing on lines of small "o" perforations, bring folded edges to corresponding lines of small "o" perforations and press. Sew belt to upper edge, notches and center-fronts even and close at center-back, meeting back edges.

Take up dart of suspender strap at shoulder as perforated. Sew to upper edge of belt, notches and corresponding perforations even.

The Beloved Art of Soothing

There are many types of femininity, but perhaps the rarest and most appreciated is the girl who soothes. There are so many vivacious girls, types which excite one to mirth or to lively interest, but there is only one girl in a hundred who soothes. She is like the oasis in the desert, restful, refreshing, welcome to one and all. The woman with the keen wit, she of the bubbling mirth, the girl with the languorous manner, all are of interest at times and under certain conditions, but the girl who soothes never fails to attract wherever she may be.

It is she who smoothes down your ruffled feelings when circumstances seem to have conspired against your peace of mind. If your dressmaker has failed to deliver your new frock at the promised time or if your maid has just broken your favorite bit of china, you take your troubles to the girl who soothes and come away feeling much better for her cheering words.

To learn this most difficult branch of social diplomacy—namely, the gentle art of soothing—you must have, first of all, a goodly share of intuition. There are times when your ruffled friend may want you to ignore her very apparent perturbation. At other times she may be just waiting for you to speak a word of sympathy or perhaps to touch upon the upsetting subject in order to burst out with her whole tale of woe. Your intuition will have to tell you.

One of the first things for you to learn in the gentle art of soothing is never to disturb your friend's poses. There is nothing quite so ruffling as to have one's pose detected. If a friend is a chronic invalid (with nothing really the matter) sympathize with her imagined aches and pains just as if they were real.

If a friend has her mind all made up to be a martyr let her be one and don't suggest possible ways out of her martyrdom. She will rant on for hours on the subject of all she has to undergo, and it would be fatally tactless to disturb her in this pose. If she imagines her husband untrue to her just because he has had to consult a woman client on a matter of business, condole with her by all means, whether you think her foolish or not.

You must never suggest by any chance that your confidant was in the wrong in a quarrel. If she tells you at length how Bobby and she no longer speak to each other because he is so ridiculously jealous, smooth her down in your most tactful way. Suggest that Bobby would not be so jealous if he did not care for her; never intimate in the faintest way that she would give anyone ample cause for jealousy.

If you want to be one of those rare creatures, a girl who soothes, never tell a tired woman shopper that she could have obtained much better bargains at another store. If a friend wears an overelaborate gown, make no comment on it, but tell her that you have never seen her hair look so well. It is strange how far an adroit compliment will go at times toward smoothing a ruffled mind.

There are women, however, who cannot be helped by such methods at all. You must study your friends and their characters in order to learn the art of soothing thoroughly. There is no single way, but rather myriad of ways of calming down a ruffled mind. In fact, each woman seems to need a different treatment.

It is well worth studying the art, however, for the girl who soothes is beloved by all who know her.

ATTRACTIVE FOR GUESTS.

Very few young housekeepers have been spared the acute misery of trying to equip the guest room for the unexpected guest at the last minute.

The best sheets were probably at the laundry, the supply of Turkish towels had suddenly reduced itself to rock bottom, and most tragic of all there was not a single presentable nightgown to offer the guest, who had left her own at home.

Only a very few of these humiliating experiences are needed to make the hostess appreciate the advantage of a guest chest.

The chest may be a shirt waist box, a carved oak or cedar chest or whatever fits into the general scheme of the guest room.

In it should be stowed a nightgown, kimono or bathrobe, a dressing jacket, an extra pair of blankets, an extra coverlet, a hot water bag, several large and small sized towels, washcloths, individual cakes of soap, absorbent cotton, court plaster and medical helps.

It is a gracious touch to add other things for the comfort of the guest, articles she might hesitate to ask for, such as a workbasket equipped with black and white thread, a darning ball, needles and pins, scissors, card of hooks and eyes, a roll of linen tape, buttons and numerous other things that suggest themselves.

A list should be kept of all articles in the chest, and as soon as any part of the supply is exhausted it should be replaced immediately.

MYSTIC NUMBERS.

Romance That Is Woven Around the Seven, Three and Nine.

There are seven days in the week because of the oriental tradition that the world was created in seven days. The Romans had no week, but reckoned by months, counting forward and backward from the ides and nones, until the fourth century, when they adopted the Jewish-Christian week.

Because of its relation to the creation the number seven has always been invested with an occult and mystic significance. There were seven wise men in antiquity and seven wonders of the world. The seventh son of a seventh son, or seventh daughter of a seventh daughter was supposed to possess powers of prophecy or divination. For seven days seven priests with seven trumpets invested Jericho, and on the seventh day they encompassed it seven times. The ancients knew of seven planets and seven metals. There were seven heavens and seven hierarchies of angels.

Seven had a mystical significance among peoples who had no tradition of a seven day creation, and this was due to its being indivisible by any number but itself and to its being a combination of 3 (called by Pythagoras the perfect number, representing beginning, middle and end) and 4, the square number.

The Pythagorean idea about 3 received confirmation when the doctrine of trinity in unity was promulgated by the early Christians. For 3 is itself at once trinity and unity.

The number 9 was endowed with mysterious properties because it is the product of three times three—perfection multiplied by perfection. To see nine magpies was remarkably lucky. Nine grains of wheat laid on a four leafed clover enabled one to see the fairies.—New York World.

A CHANGELESS METAL.

Science Wants It For Standard Measures, But Cannot Find It.

The use of melted quartz for the manufacture of standard measures of length has been a great disappointment, since even this material is subject to very marked fluctuations in length.

The search for a suitable material is, however, being continued, because platinum-iridium, which has been used up to the present, is out of the question for practical purposes on account of its great cost, says the Scientific American.

Dr. Guillaume discovered the alloy, which has become known under the name of "invar," an abbreviation for "invariable."

The nickel-steel alloy would make an ideal material for standards of length on account of its great resistance to changes in temperature, but unfortunately it is not proof against chemical action. For this reason it is suitable only for standards of the second grade, in which accuracy within a millionth part is sufficient.

The ideal material, possessing the advantages of platinum-iridium but less expensive than the latter, is therefore still to be found. Similarly good materials for standard weights have been sought extensively and various nonmagnetic nickel alloys have been tested.

A review of the progress in the use of the metric system shows that during recent years Denmark, Siam, Belgian Congo and some of the Central American states have adopted this decimal system.

The most important success still to be gained by the metric system, the conquest of England and of the United States, seems still, however, far removed.

The First Aeroplane.

The earliest effort to construct a machine which, according to modern ideas, is entitled to be called an aeroplane was undoubtedly that of William Henson in 1842. Henson, who was a practicing engineer, with offices in New City chambers, Bishopsgate, London, devised a machine which resembled very closely the type which has since been termed the monoplane—that is, having its supporting planes practically forming a single deck, as distinguished from the box form of the biplane and multiplane devices of later inventors.

Day of Reckoning.

"John, you owe me 17 cents."

"Yes, but I paid the gas bill and you owe me $1.22."

"But I paid the groceries and that made you owe me 51 cents."

"True, but I paid 45 cents for telephones."

"I know, but you borrowed 86 cents"—

"Caesar! Here's $2; let's begin all over again."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Too Suggestive.

"Yes," said the young physician of aristocratic lineage, "our family has a motto, but I prefer not to use it. It is a little too suggestive in my profession."

"What is the motto?"

"Faithful unto death."—Boston Transcript.

Pointing the Course.

He—Can't you find a way to make our living expenses a little less extravagant? She—Easily. Cut out smoking cigars, walk home from your office and resign from your club. Then I will take $10 or $15 off the price of my next hat.—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

BEING A CORYPHEE IS NOT A JOKE

"I tell you being a chorus girl isn't what the ticket-buying public thinks," said a member of the "When a Dream Comes True" company, which will be seen here at The Quirk on Monday, September 27, matinee and night. "I guess I know something about being a chorus girl after six years in stuffy dressing rooms with all kinds of girls, dissatisfaction and queer languages. But we never mix with girls unless we want to and like them especially well. One can take dreadful chances chumming with the chorus neighbors.

"Like most girls, I was stage struck and my one desire was to become an actress. My father declared he would never hear of my going on the stage in any capacity. After his death, I coaxed mother into letting me join Sam Bernard's company. One of the girls was taken sick or was discharged and I applied for the position and got it. I had just two days to rehearse before I went on, and oh, what a couple of days.

You know when a new girl goes into a chorus, all the other girls declare they will show her a thing or two and hate her before she ever knows her seared face in the unwelcome atmosphere, at least, that is what happened to me.

"The steps that seem trivial from the front and look so easy, are so full of aches and pains that the audience can't half appreciate the persistency and endurance they call for. Every time I learn a new step, or start dancing and rehearsing I get so stiff, I have to swallow tears. Keeping eternally at it, is the only thing that drives the aches away. They pay chorus girls better than they used to, but no matter what they get they spend it all. Some of them complain of being spoken to, and stared at, and all that sort of thing, but as a matter of fact it's their clothes that cause it. If a girl dresses quietly she can pass practically unnoticed, no matter where she is.

"The reason chorus girls live up to the last cent, is usually because their lives make them like the bright things and the happy places in life and they would rather spend all they have for a good room in a good hotel, than live in a dingy boarding house and have more to eat."

EXTRADITION PAPERS TO BE SERVED ON POLES

Chief of Police Dyer was notified by wire this morning that the officials of the Ware, Mass., police force will arrive in this city Monday night with extradition papers for Joseph Groski, the Pole, who was arrested by Chief Dyer and his aides in Oswego Wednesday night. Groski escaped the vigilance of Captain Norton and two officers last Sunday night when an attempt was made to capture him in this city, but clever detective work by Chief Dyer ersulted in his arrest on Wednesday.

Groski is wanted in Ware. Since his arrival in this city ten months ago he courted another Polish girl here, and married her Thursday evening in Oswego, where he was taken from the Citya Jail here. His counsel, James R. Somers, hopes to fight extradition on the Ware charge on the ground that the man has a wife to support here.

EXCURSIONS TO BE RUN TO SUNDAY TABERNACLE

Plans made for the big religious revival when "Billy" Sunday, the baseball evangelist, comes to Syracuse this fall, include a special rate from this city to the Syracuse tabernacle and special seats one afternoon each week for Fulton people only. Rev. M. G. Buck, pastor of the First Baptist church, has completed arrangements with Sunday's campaign committee thta will insure an opportunity for all Fultonians to hear Sunday himself in the tabernacle, and arrangements have also been made for revival meetings in this city to be addressed by members of the Sunday party.

Rev. Mr. Buck said today that the pastors of the local evangelical churches will complete arrangements for the Fulton revival meetings in the near future. The Fulton clergymen hope to have special music during the meetings here when members of the Sunday party come to this city.

FIGHTERS NEED NO LONGER HAVE TIN EARS

The cauliflower, or "tin" ear, used as "cards of admission" to fight clubs by third and fourth rate boxers, is about to be no more. Reports received from Seattle, Wash., state that a physician has discovered a method of treating damaged ears without leaving the member swollen. The idea is to drain the tissues and then attach a plaster cast until they knit together again, obliterating all trace of injury.

Few boxers who have appeared in ring hostilities have escaped disfigurement in this way. In fact, a number of fighters have been actually made deaf.

Prominent Attorney, Candidate for County Office, Under Indictment

Bath.—A sensation was sprung in Supreme Court here yesterday when Attorney Charles McManus, of Corning, a well known member of the Steuben county bar, appeared voluntarily in court to plead to one of the sealed indictments returned, charging him with having received stolen goods. Mr. McManus was represented by Attorney James O. Seabring, and entered a plea of not guilty, and gave bail of $500 for his appearance at the October term of county court. Mr. McManus is charged with having purchased a pair of shoes that were taken from a car with other freight by a resident of Corning.

Friends of Mr. McManus are general in their denouncement of his indictment and think that some mistake must have been made, and state positively that Mr. McManus will experience no difficulty in establishing his complete vindication.

Mr. McManus is a partner of Thomas F. Rogers, who said: "I know Mr. McManus so well that I cannot doubt his integrity; the crime of which he stands charged is so utterly preposterous as to be amusing." James O. Seabring, counsel for Mr. McManus, said: "I had knowledge that such an indictment would be considered against Mr. McManus, therefore carefully investigated the case, and I can truthfully say, I believe the charge is without foundation, and I consider a case of this nature against him as unjust."

District Attorney Stowell does not discuss the indictment against Mr. McManus, further than to state that the facts will be known upon the trial of the case.

Greek Parliament Called to Meet Next Wednesday

but the reservists are so scattered the complete mobilization may be expected to require some weeks.

When King Constantine attached his signature to the order the last of the Balkan states was brought under arms.

The successes which the Russian General Ivanoff has been having in Galicia and Volhynit, it is considered in military circles here, may still have an influence in more than one way in the Balkans. General Ivanoff has been so successful that Field Marshal von Mackensen, who is fighting north of the Pripet marshes, eastward of Brest-Litovsk, has, according to the German official report, been compelled to withdraw his line somewhat, as it was in danger of being encircled, while the Austrians have been driven back across the Styr, and, according to the account, have evacuated the Fortress of Lutsk, in the Volhynian triangle of fortresses, which they captured during the great drive.

MAY EXERT INFLUENCE ON BALKANS

These successes, which extend to the Roumanian frontier, would, in the opinion of military observers, serve to ease the situation on the Roumanian flank, should Roumania join Russia, and in addition, might well interfere with the Austro-German concentration of an army, which, it is estimated, must consist of at least a half million men, to make an attack on Serbia. Some keen observers, however, regard the reverses that are being suffered by the Austro-German forces in Galicia as due to a weakening of the line, brought about by the removal of units for service on the Danube, and advise against a too optimistic attitude.

Roumania has been on the point of joining the Allies several times since last November. When the Russian invasion of Galicia and Bukowina was at its flood and the Tsar's forces were at the gateway to Transylvania reports actually reached London that Roumanian troops had been ordered across the frontier in an effort to pre-empt the Austrian province before the Russians could obtain a foothold. A series of reverses drove the Russians away from the territory, however, and Roumania began negotiations with Vienna for the peaceful cession of Transylvania as the price of her continued neutrality. Vienna flatly declined to consider the proposal, and Roumania since has joined in earnest conversations with the Entente Allies.

Bulgaria, already fearing Russia's strength, is working day and night to strengthen the defenses to her Black Sea ports. Large bodies of troops have been sent to Valna to man the fortifications at that port—only thirty-six hours steaming for the Russian fleet from Odessa—and the Bulgarian gunboats have sought the protection of what cover is afforded to them by the bays along the coast.

THE GOAT IN THE PASTURE

The first point in improving the pasture is to get rid of all weeds, brush and trees which are not to be used for shade trees or some other purpose, such as a protection, windbreak, etc.

This can be done by grubbing, firing and pasturing by goats and sheep. Excellent grazing lands can be made to produce which otherwise are only a burden to the farmer. The practice of pasturing with goats to clean up the weeds, brush and to kill the stripling trees can be profitably managed. They not only save the cost of labor, but are an increasing source of income themselves. I have seen hundreds of acres of pasture land reclaimed in this way and with a profit to the farmer.

Another method of improvement which could be practiced much more than it is is, would be to mow the pasture—first to cut down the weeds before they go to seed, and secondly to get rid of the overripe and undesirable pasture grass.

Often the weeds can be controlled in this way, except those that reproduce by means of underground stems. In this case continuous grubbing is the only sure method of complete eradication.

Mowing down the ripe or dry grass not only rids the pasture field of food that the cattle will not eat in most cases, but invigorates a new growth of green leaves at a time when otherwise there would be but little good grass obtainable. More general mowing of our pasture lands when mowing needed would result in more available pasture during harvest time or shortly after when there is often lack of green grazing.—Farm Life.

NONS AND GOOSEBONES TO CHASE THE SPHERE TOMORROW AFTERNOON

The Nondescript football team of this city will open its 1915 football season on the fair grounds tomorrow afternoon with the Goosebone A. C. eleven of Oswego. The local pigskin chasers have been practicing hard every night this week, and all the men are in fine physical condition and ready to put up a hard battle against the Oswego team, which will outweigh the local eleven and has had the benefit of three weeks' coaching.

Last night the Nondescripts went through a long signal drill and several trick plays and open formations were perfected. The following candidates for the eleven will play in tomorrow's game: Battles, Brennan, Leroy brothers, Miller, Lagrue, Frawley, John Ward, Johnson, Parks, Hill, Dale, Reavey, Taylor, Roy and George Ward, who has been coaching the team.

The game tomorrow is the first of an elimination series which will decide the championship of Central New York. The local team has been able to put out a strong eleven every season and the abundance of material this year has convinced the coaches that the Fulton lads have a good chance for the title.

Braves Regain Runner-up Berth in National League

Boston Braves second place in the National League yesterday by winning from Pittsburgh while Brooklyn lost to Cincinnati. Philadelphia, by splitting in a double header with Chicago, retained its apparently safe margin of leadership. The Phillies now are six and one-half games ahead of Boston and seven games ahead of the Superbas.

While the Boston Red Sox lost to St. Louis, Detroit failed to take advantage of the opportunity to gain, losing to Washington. Thus the Tigers remain four and one-half games behind the leaders.

GROVER ALEXANDER GETS BIG CHECK AS BONUS

Grover Alexander, the Great, whose pitching has been a big factor in elevating the Phillies to their present lofty position in the National League pennant race and made them the prospective opponents of the Boston Red Sox in the approaching World's Series, received two checks calling for $1,000 in September as bonuses. The first piece of paper valued at $1,000 came to him from the Philadelphia club, per a clause in his contract, after he had recorded his twenty-fifth victory. When on Thursday Alexander pitched his thirtieth win he was handed another $1,000 check, per agreement. And now he is due for a good slice of the World's Series money. Lucky? Ah, somewhat, but nevertheless a great pitcher.

Big Guns Literally Blow Away Trenches In Violent Bombardment of 50 Hours

London.—The congregations in every church in England last night, Established, Roman Catholic and non-conformist, rejoicved over the glorious news from the western front that in terrific and continuous battles along the great fighting line from the North Sea to Vosges ,the Franco-British forces are dislodging the Germans from their strongly fortified positions and have advanced along more than twenty-five miles of front, penetrating to a depth of from two to five miles and capturing more than twenty thousand ablebodied prisoners.

The British advance north and south of La Bassee completely overshadows the fighting at Neuve Chapelle in March. In fact, it is the most glorious achievement of the allied arms since the German rout in the battle of the Marne.

But while the British advance is a great achievement, it pales when contrasted with the French victory in the Champagne, where the German iron wall has been shattered into fragments by the gallant French, who have penetrated the German lines to a depth of three miles and taken more than twenty thousand prisoners.

North of thte Aras the French, fighting shoulder to shoulded with the British, have inflicted terrific losses on the Germans, forcing them out of what were considered impregnable positions.

Fifth ward—first and second districts, Jenning's garage, So. 7th st.

Quiet Day Expected.

There are no contests among candidates for the Mayoralty as Victor C. Lewis, Myron F. Foster and James Brooks are alone in the field in their respective parties. There are several contests for other nominations, however, which will attract the attention and interest of almost every voter.

The contests in the Fifth ward between W. Lawson Woodbury, candidate for re-election as county committeeman, and J. A. Bort, and in the Fourth ward between Harry Webb, candidate for re-election to the county committee, and Dr. H. L. Lake are monopolizing the attention of the voters in those districts. and a close fight for the nomination in both instances is predicted. Since Mr. Bort's entrance in political circles he has won many supporters, and, although Mr. Woodbury has the endorsement of influential men of his party, the decision is expected to be a matter of a few votes. The same is true of the Webb-Lake fight in the Fourth ward.

In the Sixth ward Rex Carvey and Benjamin Ingersoll are opponents for thhe nomination for supervisor. By an agreement reached some days ago Mr. Carvey and Mr. Ingersoll and their friends have promised to support whichever man is chosen at the primary against the Democratic candidate and will not knife the party ticket because of the contest for the nomination. The supporters of both men are working hard for their candidates, but good feeling prevails among the partisans, and whichever wins the Republican ticket is assured of united support.

There are no contests among the Democrats for nominations and the Democraaic polling places are slated for a quiet day. The general opinion seems to be that a very light vote will be polled tomorrow all over the city, with the possible exception of the Republican polling places in the Fourth, Fifth and Sixth wards.

BUSINESS MEN FAVOR SOCIETIES

Manager Jordan Leaves for New York to Confer With His Chief Relative to Saving Associations.

On his trip to New York city for a conference with the officials of the Fulton Light, Heat & Power Co., Manager J. J. Jordan of the Fulton plant, will take with him statements from several Fulton business men expressing their sentiments in regard to the institution of a building and loan association here as suggested by Mr. George Coffing Warner while here last week.

Mr. Jordan has interviewed several of the representative business men of the city on the building and loan project and it is understood that the majority agree that such an organization is most desirable.

When Mr. Warner made his suggestion as to one of the city's immediate needs he had in mind the organization of an association similar to those already in operation in almost every city and town in the States of Pennsylvania and New Jersey. In those places several local business men organize a company under a charter granted by the state laws, and shares are sold to any one who wishes to buy. Payments are made at regular intervals at fifty cents or one dollar. If continuous payments are made and the stockholder allows the interest to accumulate at the end of ten years interest on the total is paid, oftentimes at the rate of 7 per cent. or more. On the other hand, if the stockholder wishes to build or buy a home the association loans him money on a first mortgage at rates which are decided by the association by-laws.

Another suggestion by Mr. Warner regarding the foundation of a trust company here, in order that merchants and farmers and business men may borrow money for expansion to the limit of their credit, has also been freely discussed in business circles, and Mr. Jordan has the opinion of several local business men and bankers on the subject.

In the work of establishing both the loan association and the trust company here, Mr. Warner, who is vitally interested in Fulton and its progress, has signified his willingness to assist materially. Through his efforts the advantages of this city as a site for manufacturing have been brought to the attention of many eastern capitalists during the past few months.

A Business Man Opposes Proposed Site for Public Market; It is Unsuitable

The efforts of Mayor F. E. Fox to arouse public interest in the institution of a public market here and the purchase of the abandoned canal lands at First and Oneida streets for the purpose, have not been without avail, if the sentiments expressed about the city are evidence of public feeling.

The canal lands in question have been cleared following the filling work by Samuel Rosoff & Co., contractors, and last week F. A. Gage and the Masarro Macaroni Co. abutting property owners, filed an application for purchase with the state. Through the efforts of the Chamber of Commerce a protest against sale of the land to private interests was filed last spring with the state, but as the matter stands now the lands can be sold to the manufacturers without further dispute.

A director of the Chamber of Commerce today said the statements which appeared in another local paper as coming from Mayor Fox, intimating that the Chamber had decided to desist in its efforts to have the city acquire the land for a market site, because of the fact that the manufacturers wanted it, are absolutely without foundation. This gentleman went on to explain that the lands are not available at present forp urchase, but that efforts would be made next year to pass a law which would give the cities of the state first option on all abandoned canal lands. This law was passed by the legislature this year, he said, but was not signed by Governor Whitman.

On the other hand, one of the interested manufacturers said today that the state could dispose of the lands at once, if they were declared abandoned, but added that the Canal Superintendent, General Witherspoon, was making every effort to have the declaration withheld until all the canal work was completed. The manufacturer defended the efforts of himself and his colleagues to acquire the land by saying that the city depended upon the extent of its manufacturing, and that a permanent and well constructed factory was what was needed at the point in question, not only for industrial reasons but also for the aspect of the business section. This man believes that a market, with the noise and odors which he says attend such an establishment, should be out of the line of traffic, and cites the position of the markets in other cities, many of which have recently been changed, as proof of his assertion.

Truant Officer Warns Parents of Children

The parents of three children, aged 8, 12 and 14 years, respectively, were summoned Friday to Police Court on complaint of Timothy Sullivan, Truant Officer, and after a severe warning by Judge Wilson were dismissed on their promise to see that the children were sent to school at once. The truant officer swore out a warrant last week after investigating the children's absence from school. The delinquents reside in the extreme southeast section of the city and attend the State street school. The Judge gave the parents to understand that excuses could not be recognized. The parents said the mother was ill and said the children lacked sufficient wearing apparel.

Truant Officer Sullivan says there are still a number of children who have not reported at school this term and he issues a warning to their parents that unless the delinquents report to their class rooms at once, prosecutions will follow.

J. A. BORT RETURNING FROM TRIP TO OHIO

Syracuse.—J. A. Bort, baker, of Fulton, N. Y., arrived here this morning from a trip to several towns in Ohio. Mr. Bort announced to a group of newspaper men that the political fight in his home city promises to be a lively one; that at tomorrow's primary election he predicts a walkover for himself. He is opposing W. L. Woodbury as county committeeman in the Fifth ward, and Mr. Bort believes that his friends are going to provide a surprise for the Woodbury men.

WASHINGTON WELCOMES THE GRAND ARMY MEN

Washington.—The Capital City is today welcoming thousands of the Grand Army of the Republic whose 49th annual reunion began today. The climax will be reached tomorrow when the survivors of the conquering Union army march from the Capitol to the White House in commemoration of the grand review after the close of the civil war.

Tomorrow twelve vessels of the United States Navy, submarines and destroyers, ordered here by Secretary Daniels for the occasion, will arrive. These vessels, of a type unknown to Civil War today, will be open for inspection by the veterans.

Unusual preparations have been made to care for the visitors particuuarly on the day of the grand parade. President Wilson will review the procession from a grandstand erected in front of the White House where President Johnson stood in 1865 to review the conquefing army of the North.

Fans Must Choose Between Red Sox or the Phillies

With less than two weeks of the season remaining, the pennant races in the Major Leagues have assumed such shape that baseball enthusiasts who wish to witness all the games of the coming World's Series are consulting time tables that show the train schedules between Philadelphia and Boston. Alexander, of the Philadelphia Nationals, and Shore, of the Boston Americans, already have been tentatively assigned by the prophetic writers of sporting columns to pitch the opening game for their respective teams.

The Detroits cannot win the American League pennant unless they win all their remaining games while the Red Sox are dropping seven out of the ten they have to play. The mere citation of these figures show how slim is the probability of any upset. The Phillies have only to capture three of the nine games left on their schedule in order to place themselves in the premier position at the season's end. Their series with Boston and Brooklyn still remain to be played, but Pat Moran's men have little reason now to be worried about the outcome of these games, which might have decided the race had the Quakers made a poorer showing in the West. Boston and Brooklyn are the competitors for the second place in the National League, with the chances favoring the Braves.

Alexander, admittedly the king of the present-day pitchers, looms up as the big factor in the world's series if the participants are the clubs which now seem well nigh inevitable contenders. Upon his ability to win the games in which he is started depends, in the opinion of the great majority of baseball observers, the chances of the Phillies for capturing the world's title.

Red Men to Hold Clam Bake Oct. 10

The annual clam bake and corn roast of the Red Men will be held Sunday, October 10, at Reynold's Grove, stop 32. The affair is for members of the lodge and their families.

Athletic events, consisting of a series of running races, broad and high jumps, contests, such as peanut race, pie eating, etc., will be on the program. In the pie eating contest Hans Kelly and Effie Brown will be featured. In the tug-of-war tribes captained by Otto Malone and Effie Brown and Earl Sant and Hans Kelly will participate.

Secretary Sant announces that the benefit performance to be given at The Quirk this Wednesday night will be well attended. The treasury of the Red Men will be considerably swelled by the proceeds of this performance as well as from the money received on the piano contest which has been running for the past few weeks. At the performance Wednesday night a person will be picked from the audience at random who will select the winning ticket to decide the winner of the piano.

FIREMAN JOHN YOUNGS SUSTAINS FRACTURED SHOULDER; PINNED DOWN

One man was severely injured and thousands of dollars damage was suffered by crops in Fulton and vicinity yesterday as the result of the storm. The injured man is John Youngs, the driver in the fire department. While walking in front of 311 Erie street a heavy limb from a maple tree crashed down on Youngs and pinned him to the sidewalk. In addition to a fractured shoulder, he received a number of body bruises. The injuries were treated by Dr. Fox. Youngs will not be able to resume his place in the fire department for several weeks.

A number of other pedestrians had narrow escapes. A large sign in front of E. J. Bishop's blacksmith shop in East Broadway fell to the ground. Large limbs of trees were hurled to the ground in all sections of the city. Orchards were entirely stripped of fruit, people on the west side being the worst sufferers, although the fury of the storm was not so apparent on that side of the river as it was in the neighborhood of Fourth, Cayuga, Highland and Academy streets.

William Storms and F. B. Quance, superintendents of the electric and telephone companies, were busy late into the night and this morning repairing lines torn down by falling trees. A falling tree in Utica street brought down all the wires in that thoroughfare, several pedestrians narrowly escaping being struck by the falling mass. For a while Utica street was impassible.

In the country acres of corn were laid flat. It is feared operations at the canning company will be injured on account of the extra time it will take to gather the corn that has been blown over. F. S. Thompson, manager of the Morton & Fox orchards, near Ingall's Crossing, reports considerable damage to the orchards in that vicinity.

The storm was felt throughout Central New York and caused considerable damage in Auburn, Ithaca, Oneida, Oswego and other places. There were heavy seas on Lake Ontario, but no casualties have so far been reported.

WALTER ANDREWS HAD A NARROW ESCAPE

Walter Andrews, the ten-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Andrews, of 501 West 1st st., was severely injured and frightened Saturday afternoon when the rear wheel of a heavy coal wagon ran over his leg. The accident occurred on the upper bridge. The wagon, containing a load of wood, belonged to the firm of T. H. Marvin.

The boy, in attempting to jump on the side of the wagon, fell and the heavy wheel passed over his ankle. M. E. Reynolds took the frightened lad home in his automobile and today he is greatly improved.

No blame is attached to the driver of the wagon.

"WHEN DREAMS COME TRUE"

The attraction at The Quirk tonight will be "When Dreams Come True," a musical comedy that had a great vogue in Chicago and New York in which cities it wasp layed for more than one year to crowded houses. "When Dreams Come True" is described as a musical comedy of youth, and was written by Philip Bartholomae, the author of "Little Miss Brown" and "Over Night," two of the most successful farces ever produced. The excellence of his previous efforts at playmaking has been duplicated by Mr. Bartholomae in the book of "When Dreams Come True," with the result that he has produced one of the most amusing and diverting librettos ever seen on the stage. The musical numbers are from the prolific pen of Silvio Hein, one of the younger composers, who gained much acclaim as the composer of some of Marie Cahill's and De Wolf Hopper's most notable successes.

The story of "When Dreams Come True" concerns the adventures of a young American, who is stranded in Paris, and his efforts to return to his native land. The complications that ensue furnish much scope for farcial situations and the author has taken full advantage of the opportunities offered. The locale of the different scenes affords opportunity for elaborate scenic display, and some of the most novel examples of the scene painter's art are shown during the action of the play. The first act shows the steerage deck of an ocean liner, and this scene has been pronounced by critics to be one of the most realistic ship scenes ever shown on the stage. The last act reveals a view of a ballroom in a New York mansion; this is probably one of the most novel scenes ever shown on the stage, as, in order to get a certain lighting effect, it was found necessary to paint the scene on silk, instead of the canvas generally used. As the trimmings of this scene are of Circassion walnut, the resultant effect is one of extreme beauty.

The dancing numbers of which there are nearly a score, show the latest variations of the modern dances, in addition to a number of dances conceived by the producer, which are unique in their novelty and originality.

The song features are many and of the popular lilting sort that will not only please the multitude, but will also appeal to the ear of the trained musician. Especially is this true of the title song. "When Dreams Come True" and "Dear World."

The company employed to present "When Dreams Come True" numbers fifty people, twenty principals, all well known as musical comedy artists of high ability, and twenty-four chorus girls and boys, all yet in their teens.

"When Dreams Come True" will be seen at The Quirk tonight and the promise is made that this will be one of the most enjoyable performances seen in our city this season.

LOOKING AT THE WRONG ROAD

It is one of the hopes of The Evening Times that very soon there shall be held in this city a mass meeting, to be addressed by speakers of National prominence, their subject to bear upon the necessity of vocational education in the public schools. Since taking preliminary steps to bring about the mass meeting, the persons who are interested in the development of Fulton have learned from the International Harvester Company a few things which may affect the course of coming events, and instead of securing speakers to tell us how we should secure a course of training of the hand as well as the brain, we may have men here to tell us that our work to secure factories is not the only work cut out for a Chamber of Commerce.

The International Harvester Company is sending out competent speakers to assist in organizing and conducting agricultural campaigns; to do for other states what has been done for some of the southern states, the theme being that the opportunity of the town lies in the country. There is a town in Missouri that has made a demonstration of the idea. This town, Trenton, by name, has encouraged the idea of getting acquainted with the neighbors—with the farmers, and Trenton has waxed fat and prosperous.

One indisputable fact remains, that the country can get along without the town, but no town has or ever will be permanently prosperous where the land is poor. Towns are built on farm profits; on what farmers produce in excess of their home needs. Says the Harvester Company, "In fact, towns are liabilities, not assets—consumers, not legitimate producers. There is but one road to permanent city building—that road leads to the farm. When the harvest fields smile, towns wax fat, AND FACTORIES INCREASE THE PAYROLL."

The Trenton, Mo., idea is to change its Chamber of Commerce from all that its name implies to a Chamber of Agriculture—to get away from the commercial club idea, that wealth for the town may be created from the opportunities at home, and not subtract it from other communities. Trenton gets away from the old-fashioned idea that a Chamber of Commerce, with its cash bonuses and free factory sites, is the desirable thing. Trenton is not trying to grab business from other communities, but is looking to the country, out in the fields of growing corn and wheat and hay. There is where Trenton has an opportunity. Its people realize that a successful haying campaign will bring factories to the town; in brief, that every farm is a factory.

Is Fulton doing its share to help the farmers produce in excess of their home needs? No, it is not. Fulton needs a Chamber of Agriculture, and a school of agriculture, and a long look to that road which means permanent city building—the road to the farm.

LET US SMILE

By Margaret Ghostlaw.)

The thing that goes the farthest
Toward making life worth while,
That costs the least and does the most,
Is just a pleasant smile;
The smile that bubbles from a heart
That loves its fellowmen,
Will drive away the cloud of gloom,
And coax the sun again;
It's full of worth and goodness too,
With many kindness blent—
It's worth a million dollars,
And doesn't cost a cent.

There is no room for sadness
When we see a cheery smile,
It always has the same good look,
It's never out of style;
It nerves us on to try again
When failure makes us blue,
The dimples of encouragement
Are good for me,—for you,—
It pays a higher interest,
For it is merely lent.
It's worth a million dollars,
And it doesn't cost a cent.

A smile comes very easy,
You can wrinkle up with cheer,
A hundred times before you can
Squeeze out a soggy tear;
It ripples out moreover,
To the heart-strings that will tug,
And always leaves an echo
That is very like a hug;
So, smile away, folks, understand,
What by a smile is meant;
It's worth a million dollars,
But doesn't cost a cent.

PATRONAGE; THE AVERAGE VOTER

From Republican State Committee.

In Governor Whitman's first annual message to the Legislature occurs a statement which is of interest at the present time when the Democratic party is making its appeal to the voters to elect a Democratic majority to the Assembly of 1916.

"The increase, on an unprecedented scale, in the number of state officials and employes, and the reckless increase in salaries in nearly all departments during the last four years are explainable only by the existence of a deliberate plan to fasten the control of a party upon the state by the use of a vast amount of official patronage."

Throughout the campaign last fall, the condition referred to by the Governor in his message was so evident to everyone at all familiar with the situation at the capital that fear was expressed in many quarters that the state administration would be able to re-elect itself through the medium of the vast amount of public patronage that it controlled. In four years a tremendous patronage-supported political machine had been built up by the party in power. The transaction of state business was subordinated to the election of the Democratic state ticket. Tons of literature were sent out from state departments extolling the Democratic administration and public officials were making earnest appeals to this, that and the other group of citizens to return to power the Democratic administration on the ground that the administration had conferred some particular benefit upon their particular group. Letters signed by state officials were sent out by the thousands containing similar arguments making a direct personal appeal to individual citizens on specially prepared lists.

The complete failure of the Democratic campaign last fall demonstrated clearly and conclusively that political patronage could not carry an election in the State of New York. Of the 1,486,875 votes cast for Governor, the Democratic candidate received only 412,253 votes as such. The average voter is far more interested in honest government than in political patronage and the vote indicated that a large plurality of average voters felt that the state was not getting honest government and therefore voted for a change. They made the change thorough; they changed the political complexion of every part of the state government that came within range of the ballot; governor, state officials, both branches of the legislature and the constitutional convention.

Of the niceties of politics the average citizen knows comparatively little. His interest in government is in having necessary public business transacted as simply, honestly and economically as possible. A year ago it was common knowledge that the state government was not being administered simply, honestly or economically and no amount of campaign literature or any number of personal appeals for votes from beneficiaries of the state administration sufficed to outweigh the effect of that knowledge.

The Assembly campaign this fall is a continuation of last fall's campaign. In one year the Republican state administration has paid off the accumulation of indebtedness left by its Democratic predecessors; cut out a number of unnecessary departments and consolidated and reorganized a number of others. It has put the public business of the state on a business basis and saved money wherever possible. In order that it may continue along this line a Republican majority in the Assembly of 1916 is essential.

Opinions

Light on Canal Matters.

In an address at Buffalo on Wednesday, Governor Whitman strongly urged his hearers to support the amendment appropriating $27,000,000 additional for the completion of the Barge canal, and declared that it would be a public calamity if the proposed appropriation should fail of success at the polls. He is also quoted as saying in the course of his address:

More than half of the $27,000,000 provided for in the referendum is already obligated on the part of the state for damages to property already appropriated and they will become debts of the state as soon as the courts have determined the various amounts. The legislature will be called upon to make the necessary appropriations to meet this debt.

Governor Whitman, in his frank statement of the facts, has clarified the atmosphere to a degree, and has clearly defined the issue presented to the voters of the state in the matter of the Barge canal appropriation. It now appears that more than $13,500,000 of the amount sought for the completion of the waterway will be expended, not in expediting the work, but in paying obligations already incurred by the state for damages to property. In the event of the amendment not being adopted the announced alternative will be appropritions by the legislature to meet this debt. Thus it is made plain that less than $13,500,000 of the appropriation would be available for actually and finally completing the work.

Nevertheless, inasmuch as an enormous sum has been expended, by the approval of the people, in this improvement, it would be folly to abandon the canal, leaving it in its present uncompleted and useless condition. The people will do well to follow Governor Whitman's advice and vote for the 27,000,000 appropriation.—Rochester Chronicle-Democrat.

FORD AS A PACIFIST.

Uncle Henry Ford has gone over to the rainbow chasers.

We regret it; we had hoped that Uncle Henry would remain permanently sensible.

True, he has an unusual number of odd little fancies but, be it remembered, Uncle Henry is an unusual member of the brotherhood. When he searched the prisons for a time expired men to give them a fresh start and new encouragement, he classified himself as a humanist; when he set about deliberately to chase away the farm horse with a traction, he became as great a benefactor as Eli Whitney or McCormick.

Now he has turned pacifist.

Mr. Ford having had so much success with money and as yet having found nothing it will buy, proposes to purchase the world's peace. Collier's puts it better by saying he has made the inevitable alliance "with the rainbow chasers." He has contributed we believe $1,000,000 to the cause of peace, and probably invited his first great disappointment.

Mr. Ford, who deprecates a college education, who says he would not give a nickel for all the art in the world, is doubtless in the habit of thinking in dollar terms. He probably accepts as a matter of course that war is a business proposition, which it very probably is so far as the leaders—meaning the contractors who keep the war machine lubricated—are concerned. It is possible, of course, to influence them with money. What Mr. Ford seems not to understand though—and surprising in one so well acquainted with the habits and foibles of men—is that men who fight wars are almost invariably dominated by a principle—a desire or a longing that dollars, and what they do, cannot appease.—Buffalo News.

KIPLING TELLS OF MOUNTAIN TOP STRIPPED BY GERMAN ARTILLERY

Villagers, Not Warned of Bombardment, Calmly Take Their Tea as Shells Burst.

We present below the fifth of six articles from the pen of Rudyard Kipling, under the general title of "France at War on the Frontier of Civilization," describing the impressions of a visit to the fighting line in France.

By RUDYARD KIPLING.

[Copyright, 1915, by the Sun Printing and Publishing association.]

VERY early in the morning I met Alan Breck with a half healed bullet scrape across the bridge of his nose and an Alpine cap over one ear. His people a few hundred years ago had been Scotch. He bore a Scotch name and still recognized the head of his clan, but his French occasionally ran into German words, for he was Alsatian on one side.

"This," he explained, "is the very best country in the world to fight in. It is picturesque and full of cover. I'm a gunner. I've been here for months. It's lovely."

It might have been the hills under Mussoorie, and what our ears expected to do in it I could not understand, but our demon driver, who had been a road racer, took the seventy horsepower Mercedes and threaded the narrow valleys as well as occasional half Swiss villages full of Alpine troops at a restrained thirty miles an hour. He shot up a new made road more like Mussoorie than ever and did not fall down the hillside even once. An ammunition mule of a mountain battery met him at a tight corner and began to climb a tree.

"There isn't another place in France where that could happen," said Alan. "I tell you this is a magnificent country."

The mule was hauled down by his tail after he had reached the lower branches and went on through the woods, his ammunition boxes jinking on his back for all the world as if he were rejoining his battery at Jutogh. One expected to meet the little hill people bent under their loads under the forest gloom. The light, the color, the smell of wood smoke, pine needles, wet earth and warm mule were all Himalayas. Only the Mercedes was violently and loudly a stranger.

Near the German Positions.

"Halt!" said Alan at last, when she had done everything except imitate the mule.

"The road continues," said the demon driver seductively.

"Yes, but they will hear you if you go on. Stop and wait. We've a mountain battery to look at."

They were not at work for a moment, and the commander, a grim, forceful man, showed me some details of their construction. When we left them in their bower it looked like a hill priest's wayside shrine. We heard them singing through the steep, descending pines. They, too, like the "75" men, seem to have no pet name in service.

It was a poisonously blind country. The woods blocked all sense of direction. Above and around the ground was at any angle you please, and all sounds were split up and muddled by the tree trunks, which acted as silencers. High above us the respectable, all concealing forest had turned into sparse, ghastly blue sticks of timber—an assembly of leper trees around a bald mountain top.

"That's where we're going," said Alan. "Isn't it an adorable country?"

Shots Are Exchanged.

A machine gun loosed a few shots in the fumbling style of her kind when they feel for an opening. A couple of rifle shots answered. They might have been half a mile away or a hundred yards below.

An adorable country! We climbed up till we found once again a complete tea garden; little sunk houses almost invisible in the brown pink recesses of the thick forest. Here the trenches began, and with them for the next few hours life in two dimensions—length and breadth.

You could have eaten your dinner almost anywhere off the swept dry ground, for steep slopes favored draining. There was no lack of timber, and there was unlimited labor. It had made neat, double length dugouts, where the wounded could be laid during their passage down the mountainside; well tended occasional latrines, properly lined dugouts for sleeping and eating, overhead protections and tool sheds where needed and, as one came nearer the working face, very clever cellars to protect against trench sweepers.

Men passed on their business—a squad with a captured machine gun, which they tested in a sheltered dip; armorers at their benches busy with sick rifles, fatigue parties for straw rations and ammunition, long processions of single blue figures turned sideways between brown, sunless walls. One understood after awhile the nightmare that lays hold of trench stale men until the dreamer, watching seemingly forever in those blind mazes, finds himself after agonizing centuries out again in the white blaze and horror of the mined front.

There were no trees above us now. Their trunks lay along the edge of the trench, built in with stones where necessary, or sometimes overhanging it in ragged splinters or bushy tops. Bits of cloth not French showed too in the uneven line of debris at the trench tip, and some thoughtful soul had marked an unexpected boche trench sweeper as not to be touched. It was a young lawyer from Paris who pointed that out to me.

Devastation Everywhere.

We met the colonel at the head of an indescribable pit of ruin, full of sunshine, whose steps ran down a very steep hillside under the lee of an almost vertically plunging parapet. To the left of that parapet the whole hillside was one gruel of smashed trees, split stones and powdered soil. It might have been a ragpicker's dump heap on a colossal scale. Alan looked at it critically. I think he had helped make it not long before.

"We are on the top of the hill now, and the boches are below," said he. "We gave them a very fair sickener lately."

"This," said the colonel, "is the front line."

There were overhead guards against hand bombs, which disposed me to believe him, but what convinced me most was a corporal urging us in whispers not to talk so loud. The men were at dinner, and a good smell of food filled the trench. This was the first smell I had encountered in my long travels up hill—a mixed, entirely wholesome flavor of stew, leather, earth and rifle oil. A proportion of men were standing to arms while others ate, but dinner time is slack time even among animals, and it was close to noon.

Boches Get Their Soup.

I thought of pulverized hillside and hoped it had been hot enough.

We edged along the still trench where the soldiers stared with justified contempt, I thought, upon the civilian who scuttled through their life for a few emotional minutes in order to make words out of their blood. It reminded me of coming in late to a play and incommoding the long line of packed stalls. The whispered dialogue was much the same.

"Pardon; I beg your pardon, monsieur. To the right, monsieur. If monsieur will lower his head; one sees best from here, monsieur."

It was their day and night long business, carried through without display or heat or doubt or indecision.

Those off duty not five feet behind in the dugout were deep in their papers or their meals or their letters, while death stood ready every minute to drop down into the narrow cut from out of the narrow strip of unconcerned sky.

The Germans In Sight.

And for the better part of a week one had skirted miles of such a frieze. The loopholes not in use were plugged rather like old fashioned hives. Said the colonel, removing a plug:

"Here are the boches. Look and you'll see their sandbags."

Through the jumble of riven trees and stones one saw what might have been a bit of green sacking.

"They're about seven meters distant here," the colonel went on. That was true too.

We entered a little fortalice with a cannon in it in an embrasure, which at that moment struck me as unnecessarily vast, even though it was partly closed by a frail packing case lid. The colonel sat him down in front of it and explained the theory of this sort of redoubt.

"By the way," he said to a gunner at last, "can't you find something better than that? I think it's too light." He twitched the lid aside. "Get a log of wood or something."

I loved that colonel. He knew his men, and he knew the boches had them marked down like birds. When he said they were beside dead trees or behind boulders sure enough, there they were; but, as I have said, dinner hour is always slack, and even when we came to a place where a section of trench had been bashed open by trench sweepers and it was recommended to duck and hurry nothing much happened.

Stillness Really Uncanny.

The uncanny thing was the absence of movement in the boche trenches. Sometimes one imagined that one smelt strange tobacco or heard a rifle bolt working after a shot; otherwise they were as still as a pig at noonday.

We held on through the maze, past trench sweepers of handy, light pattern, with their screw tailed charge all ready and a grave or so, and when I came on men who merely stood within easy reach of their rifles I knew I was in the second line. When they lay frankly at ease in their dugouts I knew it was the third. A shotgun would have sprinkled all three.

"No flat plains," said Alan; "no hunting for gun positions. The hills are full of them and trenches close together and commanding each other. You see what a beautiful country it is."

The colonel confirmed this, but from another point of view war was his business, as the still woods could testify. But his hobby was his trenches. He had tapped mountain streams and dug out a laundry where a man could wash his shirt and go up and be killed in it all in a morning, had drained trenches so muddy that to stretch in them was an offense, and at the bottom of the hill it looked like a hydropathic establishment on the stage. He had created baths where a half battalion at a time could wash.

Didn't Tell of Past Battles.

He never told me how all that country had been fought over as fiercely as Ypres in the west nor what blood had gone down the valleys before his trenches were pushed over the scalped mountain top. No, he stretched out new endeavors in earth and stones and trees for the comfort of his men on that populous mountain, and there came a priest who was a sublieutenant out of a wood of snuff brown shadows and half veiled trunks.

Would it please me to look at a chapel? It was all open to the hillside, most tenderly and devoutly done in rustic work with reedings of peeled branches and panels of moss and thatch—St. Hubert's own shrine. I saw the hunters who passed before it going to the chase on the far side of the mountain where their game lay.

Alan carried me off to tea the same evening in a town where he seemed to know everybody. He had spent the afternoon on another mountain top inspecting gun positions whereby he had been shelled—"a little marmite," in slang for it—and he had spotted a boche position which was marmitable.

"And we may get shelled now," he added hopefully. "They shell this town whenever they think of it. Perhaps they'll shell us at tea."

It was a quaintly beautiful little place with its mixture of French and German ideas, its old bridge and gentle minded river between cultivated hills. The sandbagged cellar doors, the ruined houses and the holes in the pavement looked as unreal as violence of a cinema against that soft and simple setting.

Bursting Shells Are Warnings.

The people were abroad in the streets, and the little children were playing. A big shell gives notice enough for one to get shelter if shelter is near enough. That appears to be as much as any one expects in a world where one is shelled, and that world had settled down to it. The people's lips are a little firmer, the modeling of the brows is a little more pronounced, and maybe there is a change in the expression of the eyes, but nothing that the casual afternoon caller need particularly notice.

The house where we took tea was the big house of the place, old and massive, a treasure house of ancient furniture. It had everything that the heart of moderate man could desire—gardens, garages, outbuildings and the air of peace that goes with beauty in age. It stood over a high cellarage, and opposite the cellar door was a brand new blindage of earth packed between timbers.

Tea During Bombardment.

The cellar was a hospital with its beds and stores, and under the electric light the orderly waited, ready for cases to be carried down out of the streets.

"Yes, they are all civil cases," said he. "They come without much warning—a woman gashed by falling timber, a child with its temple crushed by a flying stone, an urgent amputation case, and so on. One never knows."

Bombardment, the boche textbooks say, is designed to terrify the civil population so that they may put pressure on their politicians to conclude a peace. In real life men are very rarely soothed by the sight of their women being tortured.

We took tea in the house upstairs with a propriety and an interchange of compliments that suited the little occasion. There was no attempt to disguise the existence of the bombardment, but it was not allowed to overweigh talk of lighter matters. I know one guest who sat through it as near as might be inarticulate with wonder, but he was English, and when Alan asked him whether he had enjoyed himself he said, "Oh, yes, thank you, very much."

"Nice people, aren't they?" Alan went on.

"Oh, very nice—and such good tea." He managed to convey a few of his sentiments to Alan after dinner.

"But what else could the people have done?" said he. "They are French."

INVISIBLE FISHING LINES.

Japanese Have New Process Which Has Proved Successful.

The department of commerce at Washington has received a collection of fishing lines illustrating the ingenuity of the Japanese sporting goods manufacturers. They are of the "invisible" sort, and the makers assert that they have proved very successful. They are made of a very fine silk, boiled in a preparation of oil and glue and calendered under heavy pressure. They are called the tegusu lines, and the silk of which they are made is from wild cocoons found in the mountains.

These lines are believed by the Japanese makers to be the strongest and most successful ever devised to use for large, gamy fish. Secretary Redfield examined the collection with great interest and expressed regret that he had not seen them a month ago, when they might have appealed to him more effectively.

Nearly One-Third of Christian Armenians Reported Massacred

New York.—Dr. M. Simbad Gabriel, president of the Amenian General Progressive Association in the United States, has received from Nubar Pacha, diplomatic representative in Parts of the Katholikos, or head of the Armenian church, advices in regard to the massacres of Armenians in Turkey, in which it is stated that "Christian martydom has at no time assumed such colossal proportions."

The letters containing the advices were received by Nubar Pacha from "authoritative sources" in Constantinople and Athens and contain an appeal to the United States "to intercede and stop the persecutions."

Dr. Gabriel, in making public the letters today, said that from information contained in them and from other reports he had received directly he estimated that 450,000 Armenians has been put to death, and 600,000 rendered homeless or exiled.

"What has occurred in a few months in Cilicia and Armenia," wrote Nubar Pacha, in transmitting the correspondence, "is unbelievable. The great massacres of Abdul Hamid seem insignificant compared to the recent atrocities, which are without precedent in the history of our nation's martyrology. It is nothing more or less than the annihilation of the whole people. But Armenia is so far away that scarcely anything has been yet heard in Europe and America about this frightful tragedy."

A letter from the Constantinople source says that Armenians in all the cities and villages of the province of Cilica have been deported in a body to the desert regions south of Aleppo.

"We have also been informed of conversions to Mohammedanism, the wretched populations having no other alternative for saving their lives," thel etter says.

MISS KLEIN BRIDE TODAY

Miss Edna Klein and Mr. Clinton Hoystradt Married at Home of Mr. and Mrs. Horace Baggs.

This afternoon at 5 o'clock at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Horace W. Baggs, 235 Cayuga st., in this city, a pretty wedding took place, when their sister, Miss Edna L. Klein, was united in marriage to Mr. Clinton J. Hogsradt of Red Hook. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. H. D. Holmes, pastor of the State Street M. E. church, under a canopy of evergreens and flowers.

Miss Leah R. Klein, a niece of the bride, acted as bridesmaid, while Mr. Raymond Wheeler, a nephew of the groom, acted as best man. The bride wore a gown of white pussy willow taffeta with pearl trimmings and tulle veil. She carried a shower bouquet of roses. The bridesmaid wore a gown of pale green chiffon taffeta and carried a hand bouquet of pink carnations.

The house was beautifully decorated with evergreens and pink asters, arches of evergreens were placed in the doorways connecting the rooms.

The bride is a former Fulton young lady who left here about four years ago to attend the Spencer Commercial School of Kingston and immediately after her graduation from that institution accepted a position as stenographer and confidential clerk with W. H. Baker Chocolate Company at Red Hook, which position she has since held. The groom is a well known young man of Red Hook, where he holds a responsible position with the Central New England Railroad Company.

Immediately after the ceremony a wedding dinner was served and the happy couple left for a wedding trip, after which they will return to Red Hook, where a newly furnished home awaits them.

The out of town guests were: Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Klein, of Kingston; Mr. and Mrs. M. J. Wheeler and Raymond Wheeler of Silvernails, N. Y.

FORTY HOURS DEVOTION CELEBRATED AT ST. MARY'S

The Forty Hours Devotion, an annual event, began at the 10:30 mass at the Church of the Immaculate Conception yesterday. Rev. Father J. L. Lindsman was the celebrant of the mass, and the choir furnished a special program of music, under the direction of the organist, Frederic Kenyon. Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament was given immediately after the mass.

Last night a vesper service was sung at 7:30 by the choir, and Father Lindsman preached to a large congregation. The masses today were said at 5 and 7 o'clock, and church will remain open all day for meditation. The Devotion will conclude tomorrow.

BISHOP'S SECRETARY GIVES UP AS THIEF

New York.—His love for wine, travel, silk socks and other fine raiment, proved the undoing of George C. Stowers, of Atlanta, for ten years secretary to the Rt. Rev. Dr. Cleland Kinlock Nelson, Episcopal Bishop of Georgia.

Conscious-stricken, Stowers walked into police headquarters last evening at 6:30 o'clock and asked to be locked up. He declared he has swindled Bishop Nelson out of at least $15,000 in the last few years, by raising his salary checks. He also declared he owes $165 to the Hotel Biltmore where he has been stopping which he is unable to pay, because he is broke.

Messrs, J. Rude and Ray Blanchard of this city left this morning for Baltimore, Philadelphia and Washington.

SYNOPSIS

Old Cyrus Martin, the head of the American soap trust, makes a bet of $30,000 with a friend, John Clark, a rival soapmaker, that his (Martin's) son Rodney would be making more money at the end of a year than Clark's son Ellery.

Martin takes his pretty secretary, Mary Grayson, into his confidence and enlists her co-operation. Rodney has been a spendthrift, and the father wants to make him reform and go to work.

Mary meets Rodney, and the son proposes marriage to her. Rodney tells his father about his proposal, and the old man pretends great anger. He tells Mary he will disinherit Rodney.

Rodney defies his father, and Mary is deeply touched at the lad's genuine affection for her. Mary makes a financial bargain with Martin to encourage the son tc go to work.

Ambrose Peale, press agent, meets Rodney and agrees to go into business with the lad on a salary basis. Rodney has resolved to go into the soap industry and buck the trust.

Rodney, Peale and Mary go into the soap trade together. Rodney then endeavors to borrow $10,000 as capital for his newly formed company.

The offices of the "13 Soap company" are opened, and they advertise it as "the most expensive soap in the world." Peale talks advertising continually.

The 13 Soap company finds its expenses very heavy, and financial rocks loom ahead. Their chief business seems to have been to spend money for advertising under Peale's directions.

An alleged countess, who has appeared on the scene, desires to purchase the French rights for the sale of "13 Soap" and produces a draft for [illegible], which she desires to have cashed.

The "countess" is shown to be an impostor and despair settles over the 13 Soap company. The firm introduces her, however, to Ellery Clark. Father Martin visits the offices.

Martin, fearing rumors that the new company would injure his business and might break the trust, offers to buy out the firm for [illegible] and give Rodney, Peale and Mary good positions. Then he learns that the company is "dead broke."

Suddenly out of a clear sky comes an order for [illegible] cakes of 13 Soap from the great firm of Brown & James of Chicago. "The tide has turned," the trio now declare.

CHAPTER XIII.

The Turning of the Tide.

IT was a sad and chastened little company that met in the office next morning. Peale was cast down for once in his life. Mary was pensive, and only Rodney knew that inner glow that gives the silver lining to the cloud of ill luck and poverty. Mary had kissed him. He must put that in his book of days.

Mary looked at him anxiously and seemed relieved to find him not entirely cast down. She had been wretched herself, she said, worrying over the betrayal of her lover to the old soap king and began again to bemoan her bad break.

"Oh, Rodney, Rodney," she said to him, "it was all my fault! Your father had no idea of the truth. I didn't understand. I told him about our company—I did it all—betrayed you."

"But you didn't mean to. It's all right, Mary," said Rodney, reassuring her.

"You forgive me?" asked Mary, looking him in the eyes.

"Why, of course—I love you," he said simply.

"Oh, Rodney, I'm so sorry!" Mary began again.

"But if father thinks just because he laced into me I'm licked he's all wrong," he declared stoutly. "Maybe I have been a fake, but, by George, I won't be any longer!"

"You're really going on?" Mary asked.

"When I've got you you bet I am," declared Rodney. "Do you really think a long speech from father and no money to work with are enough to stop me? No, sir. What father said got me for a minute, but I'm not a quitter, and I'll prove it. I'll get out of this mess the best way I can, and then I'll shine shoes or sell peanuts. I'll start at the bottom instead of finishing there. I'll make money—I'll"—

"Oh, Rodney, Rodney, now I am proud of you!" Mary interrupted.

Good old Ambrose Peale had been most sympathetic that morning too.

"Peale, I'm sorry," said Rodney, "but you're fired."

"Oh, no, little boss," said Peale, "you can't fire me! I'm just going to stick around, whatever happens."

Ambrose stuck. In fact, they all stuck. They decided to pay the balance of the month's rent out of their assets and gave a note to Jones to stave him off, as Peale said. Mary protested that a note was money; that it had to be paid some time, but Peale declared that time was money too, and something was sure to happen in the next thirty or sixty days. He felt it in his bones. He pegged away at his advertising meanwhile. It was his dissipation, the liquor in which he drowned his woes, and it is even of record that one specially clever stunt was instrumental in getting the redoubtable Jones to accept the 13 Soap Company's note.

"You're really going on?"

He had books on the science of advertising, too, spread on his desk and may or may not have read them all. Mary's private opinion was that he had not, but that he only drew moral comfort from the outsides of them. At any rate it was astonishing to see how many there were. It was positively pathetic, Mary thought, sometimes to see him poring over this "literature", or sitting there scribbling his ads when the business of shining shoes, which Rodney had threatened to adopt, would have produced more real money for him.

It was the irony of fate that Old Cyrus Martin's $5,000, meant to keep carking care from Mary's shoulders, should have been spent in two days in advertising by Ambrose Peale. The explanation of this $5,000 must be made to Rodney some day too. Every once in awhile he grew curious about it. But Ambrose didn't measure it in dollars and cents, only in terms of space, and still less did he care where it came from. Truly he was a fiend on copy. He would study and expound the signs which they could see from the office windows, while Mary, Rodney and Miss Burke would all listen spellbound when there were no callers, as often happened. Not enough white space, he would cry of one emblazonment. Not big enough, he would say. Doesn't bring out the right point, was another criticism. Ain't clear—not true—no punch, et cetera, et cetera.

If only they had just made soap, Mary couldn't help thinking sometimes, as all this talk rang in her ears. If only they had just made soap and made it good. Good wine needs no bush, was an ancient proverb she came to believe in. By the same token, good soap would need no ads.

Now, the funniest part of the whole thing, speaking of advertising, was that the 13 Soap, the old family cook-book soap, was really good. Mary had always been loyal to it from the first time she had used it. She had given it to some friends for Christmas, and they had liked it, too, and said they would "talk it up." She had gone to a store and bought a holly covered box and laid three cakes in it neatly done up in tissue paper and red ribbon, with a stamp showing Santa Claus and a legend, "Not to be opened till Christmas," on the outside.

"We must spell Christmas with an X this year," said Rodney chaffingly. "Let X equal the unknown quantity."

"We'll see," said Mary, smiling.

She simply must go on hoping and smiling or she should die. It was counting your chickens before they were hatched no doubt, but, then, you might never get a chance to count them later, she told herself pathetically. She had superintended the first experiments at soapmaking and figured out the manufacturing costs. They must be ready, she had always maintained. She even bought a book on elementary chemistry and had dreams of a large soap works, like old Mr. Martin's, where an army of self supporting girls should be put to work under the best hygienic and sanitary conditions, and the minimum wage should be a generous one. She did succeed in getting a few gross of 13 Soap made after the old book formula. In the loft there were a few piles of it, the genuine 13, ranged alongside the pink castile in old rose wrappers.

As a matter of fact she had had to give up manufacturing on any large scale, because their advertising took all their money, but Mary cherished the idea of taking up the work in earnest some day again. She didn't really believe much in the idea of making old Mr. Martin buy them out. Already she had more ambitious designs than that for her man Rodney.

The darkest hour comes just before the dawn, and dawn came with a sudden burst of glory one morning when Ambrose Peale flew into the office in great excitement, interrupting Mary and Rodney in a long embrace. Always discreet and tactful, he coughed and scraped his feet as a signal to them to break away.

"Say, I didn't mean to interrupt," he apologized.

Rodney kept his arms around Mary.

"Nothing in the world can interrupt us," he said. "What is it?"

"A telegram," said Peale. "It's the first we've ever had. I was afraid to open it."

Mary came over to him and looked at it nervously.

"What awful thing can it be?" she queried.

"Gee, I wonder what it says!" came from Rodney.

"Read it, read it!" said Peale, afraid to do so himself.

So then Mary opened it and read:

Rodney Martin, President 13 Soap Company, 239 Broadway—

"Go on, we know the address," Peale broke in impatiently.

Mary went on:

Ship at once, collect, 50,000 cakes 13 Soap.
Signed, BROWN & JAMES,
Chicago.

A profound silence fell upon the trio. The colossal number of 50,000 and the magic name of Brown & James had overpowered them. It was far too good to be true.

"Somebody really wants to buy some of our soap," echoed Rodney stupidly.

"I don't believe it," said Peale.

"But here it is," said Mary, handing the telegram to Rodney, so that he might view it with his own eyes at close range.

"Fifty thousand cakes," said Rodney; "it's true."

Then Peale burst out joyfully; the tide had turned.

"We've started—we've begun!" he yelled; "we're actually going to sell some soap."

"The tide's turned," said Rodney; "didn't I tell you advertising pays? We'll sweep the country—Europe—Asia—Africa. Go in with father? Not for a million dollars!"

"I'll wire Brown & James right away," said Beale briskly.

"Go ahead, do," said Rodney.

But an exclamation from Mary made them both turn.

"What is it?" asked Peale nervously.

"What's happened?" asked Rodney.

"That order is no good. We can't fill it—we've never made any soap," said Mary with a sinking heart.

"What shall we do?" quavered Rodney.

"Let's think," said Peale hopefully.

They sat staring straight ahead dolefully, till finally Rodney remarked slowly:

"We must get some soap."

"Yes, I thought of that," said Peale.

"Where can we get it?" Mary asked them deliberately.

"From a soap factory!" Peale suggested.

"But they all belong to your father," Mary reminded him.

Meanwhile Rodney had a ray of dawning hope.

"But he can't know about this Brown & James order—maybe we could buy some soap before he'd have a chance to stop them selling to us"—

"Great idea—let's get busy," said Peale, taking him up promptly.

"How?" asked Mary.

"Where's the phone book?" Rodney asked, and grabbed the red classified directory from his desk.

"We'll call up two or three of his branch offices."

CHAPTER XIV.

Soap Bubbles.

"SKINS, skates, shirts. Where's soap?" Rodney recited to Mary and Peale.

"Smelters, smokestacks, snuff," went on Peale.

"I've got one too—374 Schuyler," said Peale.

"So have I—490 Audubon," Mary chimed in.

With one accord they dropped the book and darted to the telephones, shouting all together:

"Two-seven-six Broad."

"Four-eight-o Audubon."

New York city is the proud possessor of two zoological gardens, one in Central park and the other in Bronx park. The latter is the larger and is said to be one of the finest institutions of its kind in the world. Central park zoo is much smaller, but still it contains a number of specimens of rare animals. In one respect Central park zoo leads. It now has a baby zebra, said to be the first of its species born in captivity in this country. The picture shows the little fellow being fondled by his mother. The youngster is a finely marked specimen of his race and is as frisky as a young colt. William Snyder, head keeper of the zoo, will soon have the little fellow christened with appropriate ceremonies.

The Queer Penguins.

Sir Ernest Shackleton, who led the British antarctic expedition which so nearly reached the south pole, tells amusing anecdotes of the penguins, that, when standing upright, look from a distance like a lot of dignified gentlemen in black coats and white waistcoats, and many a time shipwrecked castaways in the southern hemisphere, approaching some desolate coast, have imagined the distant penguins sitting upright upon a rocky shore to be human beings. Sir Ernest tells that one day a big penguin strolled into camp and saw one of the shaggy dogs. Mr. Penguin stared and stared and came closer to see what manner of beast this might be, until the dog snapped playfully at the bird's funny short legs. Next day the penguin came again to camp with a personally conducted party of penguins, apparently to show them the dog. They came often after this, and the explorers amused themselves by occasionally giving them a concert with the phonograph, to whose music the birds bobbed around in a circle with much apparent pleasure. About fifteen species are known. The king penguins are the largest. They exist in colonies of many thousands.—Farm Journal.

A Paste Pot Party.

Did you ever give a paste pot party? You'll need some old magazines and a pair of shears, as well as a blank book in which to paste pictures. You can make the blank book yourself from pieces of plain, smooth paper, and, in fact, each little guest might enjoy making such a book for herself or himself. Sick children always like to look at scrap books, and so you might send the ones you make at the party to a hospital after you have finished with them.

A set of cut out paper dolls should be given each child to carry home as a souvenir of the occasion.

Origin of a Word.

The origin of "windfall" in the sense of good luck dates back to the time of William the Conqueror. It was then a criminal offense to cut timber in the forests. Only such could be gathered as the wind had blown down; hence a heavy windstorm was hailed by the peasants as so much good luck, and from this we get the term.

Scarecrow and Snow Man.

The scarecrow was chasing the snow man,
No, it wasn't a dream at all,
For I saw them as plain as daylight
From the top of our garden wall.

There were miles and miles between them,
Or months, perhaps I should say,
For the snow man passed in December
And the scarecrow passed in May.

The chase was very exciting,
As on and on they whirled,
But they came no nearer together,
For I followed them round the world.

But the winds blew hard on the scarecrow,
And he found no place to hide;
They tore him to rags and tatters
And scattered him far and wide.

And the sun beat down on the snow man,
In his garments of dingy white;
I saw him grow smaller and smaller
Till he vanished quite out of sight.

But each year the chase is repeated;
You can see it as well as I
If you live near my father's garden
And watch while they're passing by.
—St. Nicholas.

YOUNG FOLKS' CORNER

An Apple "Stunt."

When you wish to mystify and amuse one of your friends try the trick of cutting an apple into quarters without apparently breaking the skin. It is so old a trick that it will probably be quite new to many of the people you know.

Select a large red apple. Thread a long, slender darning needle with about a yard of strong white linen thread and, beginning near the stem of the apple, take a shallow stitch an inch or so in length toward the blow end.

Draw about two-thirds of the thread through, and be careful to make the break in the skin as small as possible, and when you take the second stitch set the needle exactly in the place out of which it came. Sew entirely round the apple to the opposite side of the stem from where you started.

Now, hold the apple firmly between your knees and, crossing the ends of the thread, take one in each hand and give a strong, steady pull. The thread will cut its way through the fruit and come free in your hand. Repeat the process, beginning again at the stem, but going at right angles to the first cut.

When your friend peels the fruit she will find it neatly quartered. The small punctures that your needle makes in the skin will pass unnoticed, unless the apple is very closely examined.—Youth's Companion.

Jumbled Animals.

To make the game of animals interesting about four persons should play. Of course, the more persons the better the game.

Say, if six persons play, write on six slips of paper the name of an animal—that is, a different animal on each slip, but change the letters all around. For instance, if one animal was to be monkey it should be changed like this: komeyn (2), or if it were hyena it should be changed like this: eynah (3).

Give each one a slip and a pencil, and also a larger piece of paper. The slips should be numbered—that is, from 1 to 6, when six play. Then on the larger slip have numbers from 1 to 6. Then tell the players to pin their slips to their waists or coats. Then each one must go around to each player and try to guess the name of the animal on his or her slip. Each player must guess his own too. When they have guessed the animal they must write the name of it alongside of the corresponding number on the large sheet. For instance, if 3 was donkey they would write donkey alongside of No. 3. Time the players, giving about twenty minutes if six play and more time for more people. At the end of the allotted time the one having the most names correct should receive a prize.

The Useful Owl.

A family of barn owls will number from three to seven birds. It is hard to believe what an amount of vermin a family of owls will consume. An old owl will capture as much food as a dozen cats in a night, or more. The owlets are always hungry. They will eat their own weight in food every night, and more, if they can get it. A case is on record where a half grown owl was given all the mice it could eat. It swallowed eight, one after the other. The rapid digestion of birds of prey is shown by the fact that in three hours the little glutton was ready for a second meal and swallowed four more mice. If this can be done by a single bird, what effect must a whole family of owls have on the vermin of a community?

It would be difficult to point out a more useful bird than the barn owl in any farming country. Like many other birds, it deserves the fullest protection, but man is often its worst enemy.—American Birds.

Game of Pictures.

A large paper curtain is hung up near the end of the room. There are square holes in it, gilded around the edges like picture frames. Half of the players go in back of the curtain and each puts his or her head in a frame.

The rest are seated in front of the curtain, and each takes it in turn to criticise the pictures. As soon as a picture laughs he or she must immediately withdraw his or her head from the frame. When all the pictures are gone it is the other side's turn. The two that keep up longest on either side receive a prize.

Old Joe.

Jolly old Joe is a fiddler man,
Who whistles and fiddles as fast as he can.
He waggles his head and he taps all his toes,
And always makes music wherever he goes.

He lives in a little red house by the brook,
A snug little, tight little, bright little nook,
Where all the small children run when they can
To visit with joy the fiddler man.

For Joey will whistle and fiddle and sing,
And happily show them each wonderful thing;
The ducks and the geese and his little red hen,
The pug that will dance when he fiddles again.

But, oh, best of all, when he whistles so clear
The birds from the woodland come fluttering near;
They twitter and chirp from each laden fruit tree
And answer old Joey as true as can be.

But when he sits down on the bench by his door
And takes up his sweetly tuned fiddle once more,
The children are quiet and stand in a row
And silently worship good gentle old Joe.

EVENING FROCKS ARE CONSERVATIVE AND CHIC.

Evening dress in cream white chiffon cloth with beaded bodice worn over a lace underblouse.

The best models in evening frocks do not run to extremes. There is a quiet elegance about them that is a convincing argument in their favor. Dainty white chiffon cloth mounted on delicate blue satin is used for this frock, and the waist is worn over a blouse of all-over lace. The front and back yoke are cut in one, and the applied front is handsomely embroidered in blue and silver beads.

The design, in medium size, requires 6½ yards material 36 inches wide if made entirely of chiffon cloth. With a blue satin foundation 3½ yards satin and 3 yards of chiffon cloth will be needed. The underblouse requires 1¼ yards 27-inch lace.

The skirt is a model that will be exceedingly popular for afternoon and evening wear, because of its adaptability to development in soft materials. It may be made with two flounces if desired. With one flounce, however, it is necessary to use the whole upper flounce pattern, while 8 inches have to be cut from two or more flounces.

The actual making is begun by joining the gores as notched, after which the back seam is closed from large "O" perforation to lower edge, finishing the edges above for placket. Next, gather the upper edge between double "TT" perforations. Adjust stay to position underneath upper edge of skirt, center-fronts even, small "o" perforation at side seam, and bring back edge to center-back.

Close center-back seams of flounces, leaving the seam of upper flounce free above large "O" perforation and finish for an opening. Adjust flounce to position, center-front and back seams even; stitch upper edge of flounce along crosslines of small "o" perforations in gores. A fancy heading or piping of satin may be added to the top of the flounce and the hem put in with hem-stitching.

The beaded butterfly makes a strikingly dainty ornament for the front of the waist.

OLD MOTHER HUBBARD.

This pretty frock may be developed in embroidered crepe de chine, challis, or figured voile. It is trimmed with narrow silk ruffles quaintly arranged. With white socks, a butterfly bow and buttoned pumps your small daughter will be attractively outfitted for her first fall party or dancing class.

For Thin Arms.

For thin arms gentle massage with cocoa butter will be found helpful. Anoint the palm of the hand with cocoa butter and gently but thoroughly knead the flesh from wrist to elbow, working in the cocoa butter at the same time. A good exercise for the forearm is to lie on your back on the floor and extend your arms to the right and left on a line with your shoulders and open and close the fists fifteen or twenty times, spreading the fingers wide apart every time the hands are opened.

Woman's World

A Suffragist Refugee Tells of Woman's Position In Poland.

MME. ISABEL STRUSINSKA.

Mme. Strusinska is a Pole, a native of Warsaw, who lived in Lemberg, Galicia, until her home was destroyed and many of her relatives killed in the capture of the city by the Austro-German army. Then she escaped to England. But although she is really a Russian citizen by reason of her residence in Lemberg, she is a subject of Austria and had to travel under an Austrian passport.

Under the circumstances she was, of course, persona non grata in London. She was put under police surveillance and was obliged to live within what is known as the five mile limit. Unable to endure these restrictions, she succeeded a few weeks ago in coming to America, and she is now traveling in this country, assisting in the work of collecting money for the relief of those of her countrymen who have lost their all in this cruel war.

The Polish women, she said, have more real freedom than the women of Russia. Their opinions are of weight in the affairs of the family, and their advice is always sought by their husbands, not only in business enterprises, but in larger, patriotic questions as well. Though the men have but a restricted franchise, the women are seeking the suffrage for themselves. Both in Lemberg and in Warsaw there were, before the outbreak of the war, large and active suffrage societies affiliated with the International Suffrage association.

HELPFUL HINTS FOR HOUSEWIVES

Tack Puller That Protects Hands From Injury.

There are all kinds of tack pullers, and some pull tacks in a very satisfactory manner and others do not, but most of them, good and bad, have unfortunate quality of slipping occasionally when the end is being pushed under the tack head, and the result is often a badly scratched or cut hand. The newest implement of this character is a tack puller with a shield, which makes it impossible to injure the hand in this manner. The shield is mounted on the shank in front of the handle and is curved to afford complete protection to the hand of the worker.

Creamed Chicken With Dumplings.

Take a chicken (not too fat), clean, joint and put in rather large stew kettle, pour in water to not quite cover and let come to boil, skim off scum and let boil slowly till done. The water should be well boiled down by now. Pour in rich milk or cream and milk enough to make a generous allowance of gravy. Thicken with flour rubbed smooth in a small quantity of milk or water, season well with pepper and salt. Have a pan of small light baking powder biscuits freshly baked. Lay these in the kettle over the chicken, cover and let steam for ten minutes, remove and place round the edge of platter. Put chicken in center and cover with gravy. There should be enough gravy to serve extra in pitcher or boat.

Shoshone Baked Apple.

For each cored and pared apple allow one scant teaspoonful of honey and a bit of butter. Put the honey in the cavity and the butter on top. Arrange the apples in a deep baking dish which will just hold the number to be baked. Pour on enough boiling water to come halfway up on the apples. Cover closely and set on top of the stove. Boil about ten minutes, or until the apples begin to look clear. Then remove the cover and finish by baking until done in the oven. The secret is in boiling the apples first, which makes them puff up when baked instead of shrinking. If the honey is not at hand sugar can be used, though it is not so rich.

Apple Ketchup.

One cupful of sugar, one teaspoonful of pepper, one teaspoonful of cloves, one teaspoonful of mustard, two teaspoonfuls of cinnamon, one tablespoonful of salt, two grated onions, two cupfuls of cider vinegar. Wipe, quarter, pare and core twelve apples. Put in a saucepan, cover with boiling water, bring to the boiling point, let simmer until soft, when nearly all the water should be evaporated; then rub through a sieve. To each quart of apple pulp add the above ingredients. Bring all to the boiling point and let simmer one hour. Bottle, cork and seal while hot.

Stuffed Peppers.

Select one-half dozen sweet peppers. Cut the tops off and scoop out the seeds. Prepare a forcemeat of one pint of chopped meat or shredded fish, one cupful of mashed potatoes or a half cupful of breadcrumbs, a tablespoonful of parsley, one egg yolk, dash of salt and a few drops of onion juice. Boiled rice or macaroni may be used in place of the potatoes. Fill the peppers with the mixture, sprinkle breadcrumbs on top and bake in a hot oven for a half hour. They may be fried in deep fat if preferred.

Spiced Grapes.

Make a sirup of one cupful of vinegar, one-half cupful of water and one and one-half cupfuls of sugar. Add one teaspoonful each of ground cinnamon, allspice and cloves. When the sirup has become thick add the grapes, which have been carefully picked from the stems and washed. Simmer very gently for ten minutes; then seal in glass jars at once.

Ideal Sponge Cake.

Beat four eggs very light, then beat in, a little at a time, two cupfuls of sugar. Add one cupful of sifted flour, a little at a time, then another cupful of flour in which two teaspoonfuls of baking powder have been mixed, lastly a scant cupful of hot water. Stir in a little at a time. Flavor with lemon.

Ironing Lace.

Lace with a raised surface is better ironed between blankets or not ironed at all. It should be stretched, while still wet, with a pin at each point or at distances of an inch or less apart on a sheet of clean cardboard.

TODAY'S FASHION NOTE

In the most exclusive frocks for girls one sees clover combinations of plaid silk with plain color serge or cachemir. In this frock the silk combined red, blue and green in its color scheme to give tone to a background of plain blue. Two yards 44-inch cachemir and 1 1-2 yard 40-inch silk are sufficient to reproduce this model.

True and Tried.

COCOA Sponge Cake.—Beat four eggs to a froth, sift two cupfuls of sugar and two heaping tablespoonfuls of cocoa together, then add to eggs; beat; add a teaspoonful of vanilla; sift four times two cupfuls of flour with two teaspoonfuls of baking powder and a pinch of salt; mix well; beat to boiling one cupful of milk and add to it butter the size of a walnut; let melt, then add to the mixture and beat. This is enough for two loaves.

Butter Frosting For This Cake.—Sift two cupfuls of confectioner's sugar and cream with butter the size of an egg. The butter can be melted if desired. Heat about a tablespoonful and a half of milk and add just enough to give the right consistency to spread. Add a little vanilla.

Silver Cake.—Four cupfuls butter, one cupful sugar, one-half cupful milk, two cupfuls flour, sifted with three teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Pinch of salt, whites of four eggs beaten stiff. Mix same as gold cake, folding whites in at the last. One-fourth teaspoonful of almond extract may be added if desired. Bake in a moderate oven about forty-five minutes.

Eggless Sour Cream Cake.—One cupful sugar (either granulated or brown), one cupful sour cream (if separated cream use one-half cupful filling, other half with water), one teaspoonful soda stirred in cream, flavoring; one tablespoonful cocoa sifted with enough flour to make cake consistency. This is inexpensive but delicious.

Cocoanut Cake.—Mix together one-half pound of flour, one-fourth pound each of butter and sugar and two eggs and a small cupful of milk and one tablespoonful of baking powder. When well mixed put in a cupful or more of grated cocoanut. Bake in small buttered tins in a moderately quick oven.

¶ This was the quest upon which the buyers of this store set ont. The markets of the country were scanned and their offerings carefully considered—and always we bore in mind that our purchases must bear three attributes—Quality, the best—Style, not only correct but bearing those characteristics that make for permanency in style—and lastly that the Price be such as could only be found by careful, continuous and discriminating search.

¶ Today, as a result of this expert shopping, the store is a veritable show place of the new Fashions for Fall—a monument to the artistic conception of many designers and to the skilled handiwork of thousands of nimble fingered workers.

¶ You will want to be posted on the styles that the fashion centers of the world have pronounced correct. You will want to see them, to admire, to criticise—perhaps to buy. We shall be very glad to show you, to explain to you and to assist you in any manner that we may to the end that your Fall wardrobe may be correct in every detail.

BATTLE CENTER IN TWO WARDS

Little Interest Taken In Balance of City---Scramble for Supervisorship Keeps Candidates Moving.

To use a time-worn phrase, the political pot is not only boiling in the Sixth ward, but is in imminent danger of bubbling over after the primaries today. The contest between Rex Carvey and Benj. Ingersoll for the Republican nomination for supervisor has been momentarily submerged in the heat of the struggle between Frank Van Valkenburgh and W. H. Bidwell for the Republican nomination for Alderman.

Mr. Bidwell and several of his supporters, and Mr. Van Valkenburgh with an escort, were hard at work last night making a final survey of the situation, and those in a position to know say that every enrolled voter in the ward who is able to be about today will cast a vote in the contest, following a thorough canvass by the friends of both candidates.

It is expected that the polling in the Fourth, Fifth and Sixth wards will easily double the votes cast in the other wards, where there are no contests for nomination.

In the Fourth ward, the contest between W. Lawson Woodbury and J. A. Bort for the county committeeship, is absorbing the interest of all the voters in that section. Friends of Mr. Woodbury prophesied this morning that he would snow his opponent under, but Mr. Bort's supporters predict a surprise for the opposition.

Dr. H. L. Lake is out against Harry C. Webb for the county committee in the Fifth ward, and here also the contest is expected to be close. The eleventh hour odds are about even.

Mr. Richard Roe Acts as Pacifist of Neighborhood

According to an inquiry received at The Evening Times office, Fate works as strange kinks in the mouse catcher's kingdom as that of any other.

Mr. Richard Roe of this city last evening left his fireside and wended his way to the police department, and later to this newspaper office on information bent. A neighbor, Mrs. John Hoesler, found the stork had presented to a happy Tabby cat, in her cellar, three little Tabbies. Now, Mrs. Hoesler does not claim ownership of the Tabby—and likes cats at a distance—so, she hurriedly dispatched Mrs. Tabby and her three little mousers to the owner, a certain Mr. Harper in the neighborhood. Mr. Harper denied the acquisition his by returning the new family to Mrs. Hoesler, and, at the same time admonishing Mrs. Hoesler to see that they are well cared for "under penalty of arrest."

Mr. Roe, acting as neighborhood pacifist, is seeking the solution of the problem. He thinks the city should have a Humane Society, and that is just what this newspaper thought once last winter.

However, who owns the little mousers?

Wouldn't it be well, Mr. Roe, if you and Mrs. Hoesler and Mr. Harper left it to Tabby to decide, and in the meantime station a saucer midway between the homes of the parties involved and therein pour, now and then, those few drops of milk "left over."

There's no fitter place for the milk of human kindness than in the dish for a discarded Tabby family, is the observation of The Evening Times.

A LOST $2 BILL FOUND IN STORE

Another honest man has come to light in Fulton. Yesterday a lady with her little son visited the Waldhorn store in South First st. and there purchased a suit for the boy. After the lady left the store Mr. Waldhorn discovered she had dropped a $2. bill on the floor. Mr. Waldhorn does not know the lady's address, but wishes to state the money will be returned if she will call for it.

A. M. TAYLOR (ALBERTUS) JOSTLES FULTON

Down in one of the Southern States a colored parson was engaged to officiate at two weddings at churches some distance apart. The first ceremony completed, the groom, with a great show of magnanimity presented him with a twenty-five cent piece as a reward for his services and departed, whereupon the parson heaved a sigh, took his daughter, Jinny, by the hand and trudged three hot, dusty miles to the church where the second marriage was to take place.

As he entered the door, the poor box caught his eye, and being a generous soul he proceeded to drop in the "two bits" that he had received for the first job. The second ceremony completed, the happy couple departed without offering the parson anything in the way of pecuniary recompense. As the parson and Jinny, accompanied by one of the "elders" of the church were on their way out, the elder paused at the poor box. "Parson," said he, "it am the custom ob dis church on occasions ob dis nature to present de officiating devine wid the contents ob de poor box as a reward for his officining." Whereupon he opened the poor box and presented the dominie with its entire contents—the lonesome little two-bit piece that the parson had but a few minutes before dropped into it.

The parson, whose hopes had been for a minute raised by a vision of many monies, was grievously disappointed—he reached forth his hand in silence, words failed him—and into the breach, the awful silence stepped little Jinny. "Daddy," said she, in her childish treble, "if yoh had puttn more in yoh would have token more out."

And Jinny had said nothing. Unaided by the tenets of philosophy or study of the science of causes leading to cause and effect, she hit on a great truth. WE GET OUT OF THINGS JUST WHAT WE PUT INTO THEM. For life's a mirror and to a smile reflects a smile, to a frown reflects a frown. In every line of human endeavor this truth holds good, and we reap our reward from our work in proportion to the labor and thought and care we put into it.

Chicago's Spirit

It would be hard to find in Fulton, we believe, a citizen who does not desire to see his town grow and flourish and prosper until it attains the size and standing to which we believe it to be entitled, a mark toward which it has just started its upward climb. Yet this goal cannot be attained unless each one does his share. And some, perhaps, may ask, "What can I do?" Just this. No matter what a man's position, social or financial, this much lies within his means, the power to BOOST. Recently a writer in Collier's Weekly told of a visit to Chicago. She devoted a line or two to the immense buildings, the beautiful parks and drives, and a line or two to generalities, and PARAGRAPHS to the Chicago spirit, which being translated means to BOOST. For, no matter where you meet them, which is anywhere and everywhere, you will find Chicagoans "boosting," singing the praises of the town which they aver is the "greatest burg on earth, bar none," and though Elbert Hubbard, of gladsome memory, wrote degratorily of "Chicago Tongue," he had in mind another class of speech, for to this boosting is due in great degree the position which Chicago holds in the financial and commercial world today. But Chicago is not perfect. Her people know it. They could tell you all about it if they could take the time from their boosting. But they haven't the time. Things are not always just as we would like to have them, but the mere fact that we know how they could be bettered helps some. We can strive toward the ideal. A community with an ideal and a set purpose is half way there. In Chicago they have the ideal in mind, and as for set purposes, look to their motto, "I will" and a clenched fist. Why argue?

Be a Credit to Your Town

But let's forget Chicago and talk about Fulton. We've got a great little town with everything that is necessary in the making of a big town, waterpower almost unlimited, excellent railroad facilities, healthful climate, sanitary conditions, and in some of the big cities they pay "two-bits" a bottle for drinking water no better than we use for the Saturday night scrub.

What else do we need then? Just BOOST. Boost Fulton, her industries, undertakings and enterprises. That doesn't mean just mere "wind jamming." It means spending your money in Fulton, with Fulton merchants. If you want bigger and better stores, help them to grow. And speaking of enterprises, until recently Fulton was the only town of its size and possibilities in New York State without a daily paper. A few miles over the border into Pennsylvania you will find towns of half its population with two dailies. There is only one way to boost a newspaper and that is to kick in with the necessary subscription price. When you do that you help it to grow and become something better, to become a credit to your town, when you boost it you boost Fulton.

Ads. Work Two Ways

In recent years, advertising has come to be recognized as the greatest creative force in commercial life. By means of it, great businesses have been built up, communities, towns and cities developed. To the wide awake merchant in the smaller towns and cities it affords the opportunity and the channel through which he may inform the community in which he is located of the excellence of the stock which he has to offer, to the end that they need no longer turn to the larger city stores for the merchandise which they desire. And if his advertising is backed by a well selected, thoroughly up-to-date stock, bought right and offered right, he will never find reason to complain that advertising does not pay. In a recent issue of the Saturday Evening Post, Forrest Crissey, a noted business writer, tells of the remarkable success of two live youngsters in a Western hamlet, who, after falling heir to an "Emporium" with a business of a few thousand per year, through close study of the needs of their community, right buying and proportionately right selling, backed by forceful, methodical advertising, are now doing a business of over $400,000 per year, trade even coming to them from some of the large nearby cities. As one of them said, "the carfare was the same in either direction." The same inducements which took people into a city to buy, would bring them out from the city to his store.

There are two reasons, both selfish ones, why local merchants should advertise LIBERALLY in this paper. First, the increase of their own business. Second, the growth and improvement of this community, upon which, in no small degree, the ultimate success of their own business is dependent. No publication, and more especially a newspaper, ever attained to even mediocre success without plentiful patronage in the form of advertising. If your "daily" is to grow this is one thing that it must have and your advertisement in its columns not only helps you, it helps the paper and BOOSTS Fulton.

Real Boosters Needed

Those of us who reside in this community are so close to the proposition that we perhaps do not realize, as we should, the wonderful strides that Fulton has been making in late years. Recently, there came into our office a former resident. Having in mind the Fulton that he left but a few years ago, he was able to appreciate fully the wonderful improvements and changes that have taken place—and he was enthusiastic. Commencing with the magnificent new bridge, with the splendid post office, its wonderful lighting effect, the many miles of new pavements, the theatres, new banking quarters, new industries, he went over the list of what he had seen, congratulated us on the issuance of a DAILY, which in itself he declared to be the first step needed to lift Fulton a long way towards its ambition to be a real city, which reminded him of several stories of the old horse car days, one having for its leading character "Dutch" Meinberg, whom baseball enthusiasts will recall as having appeared here during the old Empire League days. "Dutch" dropped off a N. Y. C. train one day and caught sight of old car No. 1 bobbing placidly down First street. "My Gawd, fellers," said Dutch, "that car's so old it's childish."

We were glad to see this "old timer." He didn't tell us anything we did not already know, but it sounded good to hear some one else say it. "You bet Fulton is improving," we told him, "and is going to keep right on." And after he had gone we sat down with our pipe to think a few "thinks." We've got everything in our favor. Fulton has just started. And the great force that will get us there is the Chicago spirit of BOOST. Each one of us must do his share, and as little Jinny said, "The more you putten in, the more yoh will tooken out."

BLACKMAIL IS LAWYER'S CLAIM

Jury Promptly Acquitted Farmer of Charge of Striking Boy With Fork---Blackmail Attempted, It is Said

Patrick McSweeney of Phillips st., charged with assaulting nine-year-old Michael Dudek, a Polish boy, with a pitch fork last spring, was declared not guilty this morning by a jury in City Court before Judge Herbert J. Wilson, and discharged. McSweeney was represented by Frederick G. Spencer, and in the absence of Herbert J. Fanning, attorney for Dudek, W. S. Hillick appeared for the complainant. The jury deliberated only a few minutes before returning a verdict in Mr. McSweeney's favor.

The information charged that Mr. McSweeney had hit the Dudek boy on the head with the prongs of a pitch fork as the little fellow with some playmates was catching on the back of McSweeney's wagon and stealing peas. Two companions of the Dudek boy testified that McSweeney started back over the top of the load of peas after the Dudek boy and another lad, and struck at them with the business end of a pitch fork. The Dudek boy displayed a wound on the head, and it was also alleged by Mr. Hillick that his playmate was cut on the hand. The Dudek lad's wound was treated by Dr. A. M. Anderson, who also testified.

Mr. Spencer contended that Mr. McSweeney made no attempt to hit the boys, but started back over the top of the wagon to chase them away, and was thrown against the fork when the horses started suddenly, and that the boy received the cut on his head from a bolt under the wagon, which scraped him when the horses started. McSweeney's testimony bore out these contentions.

Mr. Hillick introduced in evidence a paper which he claimed was prepared by Attorney Boyd of Granby, in which the parents of the Dudek lad stated that they were convinced that no assault had occurred. According to Mr. Hillick, McSweeney, Judge Summerville, Mr. Boyd and others went to the Dudek home and urged the parents to abandon the action and offered them $20 if they would sign the paper. The $20, it was stated, was put in the hands of Dr. Anderson, who was to give the parents the money after McSweeney was discharged by the court. For some reason, the agreement was not carried out, but Mr. Hillick argued that an attempt to effect a compromise by McSweeney was evidence that he was guilty and wished to escape punishment.

Mr. Spencer stated that the Dudek boy's parents had attempted on several occasions to effect a compromise with McSweeney, and that the action was brought about simply to blackmail the defendant into paying them money.

OPEN HOUSE OBSERVED BY MERCHANTS TONIGHT

That the merchants of the city have entered into the Fall Fashion week movement with the right spirit is evidenced by the unusually fine displays in windows and interior decorations which have been arranged by almost every store in the business district. Many of the merchants have engaged special music for the opening days and will give souvenirs to their customers tonight, when the stores will remain open for inspection.

Some beautiful and novel effects in window decorations are noticeable and it is predicted that the Fashion Week will have the effect of setting higher standards in this branch of advertising in the city.

GROSKI TAKEN TO WARE BY POLICE OFFICER

Detective-Sergeant Buckley, of the Ware, Mass., police, arrived in this city last night with extradition papers for Joseph Groski, who was arrested a week ago in Oswego. The officer left immediately for Ware with his prisoner.

Groski made no attempt to fight extradition. It is stated that his bride of a week, a Fulton girl whom he married after his arrest, will also go to Ware to await the result of his trial there. He hopes to compromise the case and return to this city to work.

WORK, STARVE OR STEAL?

Orlando F. Lewis, general secretary of the Prison Association, has taken the New York Sun to task because that paper, editorially, printed a note in which it emphasized the alleged humor of the fact that there exitss "a most unreasonable prejudice of employers who object to hiring released prisoners." Mr. Lewis rebukes the frivolous attitude of the Sun and expresses astonishment at its jocularity.

The material upon which the Sun based its little sarcasm was a report given out by the Prison Association showing that most employers replying to a questionnaire indicated that under no circumstances would they employ men who have been inmates of state prisons.

Mr. Lewis points out that should this attitude remain general, as it appears to be, there is little hope of the state ever making effective progress against the spread of crime, for if the discharged prisoner is not to be given employment then he must either starve or return to crime, and the latter alternative is the one that he will pursue.

It is perhaps excusable for the editors to brighten their pages occasionally with a quip at the expense of some wrongdoer, but they should never lose sight of the fact that a witty cynicism, a sneer or superiority, directed at a movement that is based upon perfectly good foundations may do far greater harm to society than the critic imagines.

The good of society demands not that obstacles be thrown into the way of those who are striving to obtain employment for released prisoners, the first requisite in regeneration, but that all possible encouragement shall be given to those who are unselfishly laboring for prisoners in the direction of obtaining employment for them.

Many hundreds of men are discharged annually from our penal institutions. They must work, starve or steal. Which shall it be?—Auburn Citizen.

WE SHOULD NOT CRITICISE.

If England finds that she must resort to conscription, there should be no critics among the people of this country. The North found that it was necessary to enroll men in its armies by compulsion quite early in the war. It was designated "drafting" at that time in this country, but it did not materially differ from conscription.

There were serious troubles about these drafts through the occurrence of "draft riots" in several of the big cities, notably New York, while individuals and agitators all over the country carried on a propaganda against making men fight if they didn't want to. It was argued long and loud that it was against the rights of freedom, and that it was contrary to the constitution. Murders were committed, an orphan asylum was set on fire and destroyed, violence was manifested in many ways, the papers and speakers who were opposed to the draft were most intemperate in their language, organizations were formed in localities to resist the draft, and the President was appealed to in one notable case to suspend the operations of the draft until the constitutionality of the act might be decided. The truth of the matter is, there was considerable opposition to enlisting for the preservation of the Union, just as there is in England opposition on the part of some organizations against fighting to preserve that country from being defeated by Germany—and run the risk of what will happen afterward. Lincoln and the members of his administration were denounced as tyrants and usurpers, and even in Congress speeches were made that in the light of the present day appear very unpatriotic, to say the least.

So we can't sneer at England because it appears likely that she must resort to the draft—or to conscription. It is a thing that we have met ourselves, and we got along very well with it after all, considering the violence of the opposition. This can scarcely be greater in England than it was in the United States in 1862-4. The drafted men went to the army by the tens of thousands, orf urnished substitutes, for which they paid $300. And they made good soldiers, too. When they found out that they had to fight they went into the contest with all the zest of the volunteers, and when they came out of the army they were just as good veterans as any others. In the after years, the distinction vanished entirely, and on the Grand Army rolls the conscripts and the volunteers stand side by side, as they did on the battlefield.—Utica Observer.

THE MUNICIPAL BUREAU

A fine suggestion comes from Missouri, the University of Missouri, which will fill a long felt want. It is the establishment of a municipal bureau, the plan of the institution being to furnish non-partisan information on all questions affecting municipalities. If the public wants to know about the experience of other cities with their sewerage systems, water supply, paving, city government, police and fire protection or any of the other problems with which cities struggle, they can get it free of all cost by application to the University municipal bureau.

In order to accomplish the work it will be necessary to keep on file at the Universiay newspaper clippings, reports, speeches and specially prepared articles relating to all matters pertaining to the municipality.

The value of the suggestion may be found in the midst of political campaigns, when the air is filled with all sorts of claims of men who know or think they know all about municipal affairs and charges of the failure of certain measures in other cities are running over the brim. With a municipal bureau available at such times authoritative information can be had on short notice by making application at headquarters.

It is respectfully recommended that when the time comes again to load "the first gun" we get in touch with the "show me" bureau.

NEEDLESS CALF SLAUGHTER

The great loss in the slaughter of calves is not in the difference in value between beef and veal and a hide and a skin. It is in the countless number of deacons which are slaughtered on the dairy farms. The skin is "hacked" off and not taken care of. * * * The price obtained for such a skin hardly makes it worth the farmer's time to bring it to town. As for the meat, it is fed to the hogs. The offals, entrails, etc., are thrown in some corner to rot and breed disease.

The reason behind the slaughter of deacons is well known in dairy sections. Unless a cow is allowed to breed at certain intervals the milk supply will fall off and so by cutting out a few head of cattle occasionally the rate of milk for the whole herd is kept up to the maximum. The milk, or rather form of milk, that is obtained from a cow during the first three or four days and in some cases a week, after birth of a calf is just the right substance provided by nature for the delicate digestion of a calf, but is unsalable for human consumption. So the poor little deacon is allowed to live for a few days to perform its function of getting rid of the unsalable milk and then it is killed, the meat thrown to the hogs, the skin, which is most poorly taken off, is thrown in a corner and finds its future course as I have already described.

To me the remedy for this appears simple enough. If the slaughter of calves until they are between three and four weeks old was prohibited, this would not only protect the poor from unwholesome meat but would also bring the deacon proposition as a whole to an economic basis. The dairy farmer could sell the deacon to a back-country farmer for raising to either veal or beef. In this way the value of the back-country farms will be considerably increased. This is along the lines of true conservation.

In Europe farming is a trade and a man has to serve his apprenticeship in his trade for a number of years before he is classed as a journeyman. * * * In this country, the farmer at best, is a jack-of-all-trades who imagines himself competent at anything. He is the type who will do his own butchering rather than pay a small fee, whereas if he waited for a journeyman butcher the improvement in the appearance of the meat, the higher value of the better taken off skin and the conservation of the entrails would more than counterbalance the butchering, etc. Entrails to the farmer are nothing more than an unhealthy nuisance, whereas to the traveling butcher who gets enough of them, they are a valuable by-product.

Let us license the butchers * * * We will then develop all over the land the trade of butcher to the point it should occupy, and if the farmer doesn't want to pay the fee, let him apprentice himself or one of his sons to some abattoir for such a time until he can prove to the proper officials that he is competent in this branch and can take out a license as ab utcher.—Hide and Leather.

WILL BEAR WATCHING.

Ever since there has been a state prison at Sing Sing, convicts have quarrelled and prisoners have escaped from time to time.

These mishaps were accepted as a matter of course until Thomas M. Osborne became Warden at Sing Sing and undertook to revolutionize prison management, to the great consternation of the Westchester political ring, the scandal of the clandestine dealers in drugs, and the general pecuniary disability of certain scoundrels who fattened off an evil system of maladministration.

Supt. Riley in asking a Grand Jury investigation of convict quarrels and of the escape of four prisoners from Sing Sing may have been taken in good faith, but in view of the campaign that has been made against the warden we are frankly sceptical. It looks suspiciously like another hopeful attempt to "get something" on Warden Osborne that could be used as a public excuse for his dismissal.

That is an investigation that, with due respect to the Superintendent of Prisons and to the District Attorney of Westchester County, will bear watching.—New York World.

POLITICAL EDITORIALS.

Chairman William Church Osborn of the Democratic State Committee is coming up the state to see what the chances are for a Democratic Assembly and whether the party will support or oppose the revised constitution. If the chance of the adoption of the constitution were no better than for a Democratic Assembly, it would be proof indeed, but Morgan J. O'Brien says 90 per cent. of the Democrats will support it.—Jamestown Post.

For a parallel to the Wilson foreign policy, so far as Mexico is concerned, at least, it is necessary to go back to the administration of James Buchanan. This latest plan to recognize Carranza as a means of stopping his attacks on American citizens and soldiers in Texas is the crowning example. We are still hoping, from a sense of patriotism which exceeds our partisanship, that the European policy is not going to be a repetition of the Mexican policy, but hope deferred maketh the heart sick. —Buffalo Express.

The importance of the November election in this state should be fully appreciatde by a majority of the voters. Assuming that the new constitution will be approved by the legislature of 1916 will be called upon to give force by legislation to the remodeling of the state government provided in the document. There must be a reorganization, and it is declared that a number of new laws will be necessary.

The party which is in thorough sympathy with the new constitution should be chosen to pass laws fitting the changed order of things soon to be in effect.—Brooklyn Standard-Union.

Federal Treasury Deficit May Compel Loan of a Billion

Washington, Sept. 27.—(Special Correspondence). Prompted by the demand of the European Allies for a loan of a cool billion of American dollars, a western financial writer suggests that our own government may need to borrow that much money itself. According to him the daily deficit in the Federal Treasury is $467,344, or at the rate of $170,000,000 a year; which suggests that within three months it will be necessary for the government to raise a loan of at least $200,000,000 to provide for ordinary expenditures and a suitable working balance.

Then if the talk of bringing the army and navy to the state of preparedness materializes into action, there will be required at least $300,000,000 more, so that the banks and investors of this country may reasonably look forward to being called on within the next six months to lend the United States $500,000,000.

From July 1, the beginning of the government's fiscal year, the average daily deficit to Sept. 8, was $467,344 in excess of receipts making a total deficit from operations of $32,714,133 in a little over two months. On Sept. 8 the net balance in the treasury available for such expenditures was $51,671,502.

At the current rate of deficit this balance will be exhausted by the middle of December, if not earlier. Apparently about the first matter that will be brought to the attention of Congress on its assembling will be the necessity for providing funds to meet daily expenses.

At the rate of $467,000 a day deficit, the total for twelve months would reach nearly $170,000,000. And as imports continue to fall off, due to the continuance of the foreign war, the gap between income and expenditure should grow larger, although even had there been no war, the reduction on tariff duties would probably have brought about a treasury condition similar to that which now exists.

For the current fiscal year to Sept. 8, government receipts were $121,141,074, against $138,998,947, for the corresponding period in 1914, a decrease of $17,857,874 or 12.7 per cent compared with last year. Up to Sept. 8 of this year the expenditures were $153,855,207, making a deficit from operations of $32,714,133, or an average daily rate of $467,344. For the corresponding period last year the deficit from operations was $25,754,375, a daily average loss of $339,348.

In thep resent fiscal year the receipts from customs to Sept. 8 were $34,378,702, against $46,756,791 for the corresponding period last year. "Ordinary" internal revenue showed an increase of about $4,100,000, total receipts from this source being $65,369,000, as against $61,287,290 last year. Corporation and income tax receipts were $10,244,722, compared with $7,688,695 in 1914. In "miscellaneous" receipts there was a larger falling off than in customs revenue, the figures to Sept. 8 being $10,283,058, against $23,266,171 last year. Neither the income tax nor the internal revenue "war tax," singly or combined, has served to make up the loss in tariff revenues.

The Administration has been reported as "setting no obstacle" in the way of the proposed loan to the Allies. Is it because the Administration hopes that no obstacle will be set when it has to borrow a lot of money itself to pay for its mad folly in cutting down revenues while increasing expenses?

SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS GRADUALLY CREEPING UP

Dun's Review says:

Commercial enterprise responds to the stimulus of lower temperatures, which accelerate a broader distribution of fall wearing apparel and other merchandise. Industrial operations, notably in iron and steel and allied lines, continue apace and full employment of labor, in a number of instances at advanced wages, enhances the purchasing power of the people. Savings bank deposits, drawn down during the late period of depression, are again accumulating, and practically unlimited financial resources are available for facilitating the return of national prosperity. Substantial progress is made in the negotiations for the pending foreign credit and definite announcement of the success of the undertaking is expected in the near future. Each week the business map of the country shows fewer dark spots and it is significant that the area of favorable conditions is extending to the South, where the gradual revival of activity is accompanied by a distinctly improved sentiment in most quarters. The better feeling in this section is also accentuated by the sharp rise in cotton prices to the highest level since the war. In the agricultural regions of the West and the Northwest trade is recovering the ground lost through previous high temperatures and everywhere an undercurrent of optimism is manifest, owing to the virtual assurance of the bountiful harvests. Manufacturing expansion in the East stimulates broadening consumptive requirements in strictly mercantile channels and generally the situation abounds in encouraging features. Not unnaturally, various branches of enterprise reflect different conditions and prospects, but reports from the leading centers are now more uniformly favorable, progress no longer being confined to a few special departments.

HOW YOU SHOULD ARRANGE THE HOUSE FURNISHINGS

System, color, classification and common sense should be taken by the housewife as the basis of the arrangement of all furnishings in the house from the furniture in the living room to the contents of the jelly closet, according to a publication entitled "The Arrangement of Household Furnishings," issued by the New York State College of Agriculture at Cornell. The arrangements of objects in a room, it is stated, should follow, repeat or fit the structural outlines of the space used. For example, a piano, table or sofa should not be placed diagonally across the corner of a room, but parallel with the length or the breadth of the room. This arrangement not only assures an orderly and restful repeat of the structure lines of the room, but prevents a waste of space, and a place for dust to accumulate. The principle is illustrated by diagrams. A long narrow room may be made to appear better proportioned by placing furniture, especially rather large pieces, across the ends of the room.

Objects should be massed or grouped, not scattered over a space. For instance, the circular states that vines, ribbons and flowers are strewn over a dinner table when the table would be much more attractive if the decorations were massed or grouped so as to be surrounded and set off by the plain cloth. Plain space around an object draws attention to it and enhances its good qualities.

Any resident of the State of New York may obtain this publication by applying to the State College of Agriculture at Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y.

KINKEAD RAIDS JERSEY MOVIES AND SALOONS

Hoboken.—Sheriff Eugent Kinkead of Hudson county made a single-handed raid on the saloons and moving picture shows of Jersey City, Hoboken, Bayonne and Union Hill yesterday. In his auto car he whirled from place to place closing them and arresting the proprietors.

In Hoboken he arrested Ered Grube for selling liquor under the Democratic headquarters. Within a block of police headquarters he found half a dozen saloons doing business. He arrested Charles Zimmerman, Herman Griese, Henry Henning and Henry Brown for selling liquor on Sunday.

DEATH BED JOKE OF BOY OPTIMIST

Rare Disease Caused End of Youth, Sixteen Years.

HIS RAPID GROWTH FATAL.

"High School or the Undertakers," He Said, and His Nurses Smiled—Family Physician Explains Death as Hemorrhage of All Boy's Organs and Blood Turning to Water.

The joy and delight of his nurses at the Homeopathic hospital in Newark, N. J., who took his death as a personal bereavement, sixteen-year-old Hilton Warren Chalmers lay cold and lifeless on the day when he counted on beginning his second year in the Newark High school. For weeks he had won the hearts of the bereaved nurses by his patience, his optimism and his wit, and only the day before he had said, "Well, if I don't return to High school on the opening day it's up to the undertakers!"

"One of his jokes," said the nurses, but it was more prophecy than joke.

Men of the medical profession will undoubtedly study the case of the boy whose rapid growth was the cause of his death. The family physician explains the death as hemorrhage of all the boy's organs and blood turning to water. He admits that the case, though not unknown, is a rare and uncommon one.

Mother Greatly Bereaved.

Mrs. Chalmers of 85 Elliott place, East Orange, while seeking to avoid publicity at such an unfortunate time, was so completely carried away by her bereavement that she eagerly narrated many instances connected with her son's life, as though it tended to bring the departed spirit closer to her, as she began hysterically:

"Last December I first noticed that Warren was growing weak and languid instead of participating in his athletic games as he had previously done. He seemed always tired, but until two weeks before his death I did not believe his condition to be serious.

"Then we found it necessary to place him in Dr. Cook's hands, who took him to the hospital. I underwent an operation in order that my blood might be transfused into his, and my mother also gave her blood in an effort to save my boy's life, but all to no purpose."

And the slight, dark haired mother broke down as she continued: "We were so proud of Warren! While at the hospital he was always cheerful and optimistic, and he continually pointed to my picture, saying in explanation, 'My sweetheart!' He was the youngest member of the Junior Mechanics in the state of New Jersey, was a choir boy in Christ church and belonged to the boy scouts. His sole ambition centered on civil engineering and he had repeatedly stated, 'Mamma, I shall never marry while you live, as I intend to take care of you and see that you have a trip around the world.'

Gave Flowers to Others.

"While at the hospital he asked me to take the flowers his numerous friends had sent him to the children who had received none, and when I remonstrated he insisted until I was forced to comply with his wishes."

Warren's brother, Miner, a timid youth of fourteen years, who stands five feet nine and a half inches in height, shyly interrupted:

"Warren and I were always the best of friends, and we played baseball, football and everything. I was just entering high school this year, and we had expected to go together."

But probably the one who feels the loss greatest is the youngest member of the family—five-year-old Madeline, who has just enlisted in the kindergarten class, and who lispingly said:

"God has taken Warren away to be an angel, but if am a good girl and go to school he will send me another brother, so I will have two again."

NEW USE FOR MOTORCAR.

War has shown a number of uses for the motor vehicle little dreamed of in times of peace. The latest development in connection with mechanical transport as a motor bathroom built for the St. John Ambulance association of London. Large canvases to form two tent bathrooms are rolled up under shelves on each side of the body and tent poles and other accessories are carried on the roof. The size of these bathrooms is about 8 by 10 feet, and there are six baths each.

In the car are two circulating boilers, which supply hot water at about two gallons a minute to taps from which the water is taken to the baths by means of a hose pipe. The boilers are heated by paraffin vapor supplied under pressure, and the paraffin is stored in a fifty gallon tank, which can be refilled by means of a hand pump and hose. Inside the car are store cupboards and shelves, with a large fumigating cupboard capable of holding twenty suits of clothes. The latter are cleaned and disinfected by vapor rising from a tank containing water and chemicals.

The motor bathrooms can be carried on any twenty to thirty horsepower chassis and not a very long wheel base is required.

FIFTEEN YEAR HUNT TO END.

Captain C. E. Farrand's Widow to Be Declared Legally Dead.

Denver.—Mrs. May Spencer Farrand, second wife of the late Captain Charles E. Farrand, U. S. A., retired, who mysteriously disappeared fifteen years ago, may soon be declared legally dead in order that the captain's estate may be settled. The only heir the attorneys for the estate have been able to find is Mrs. Louise A. Ryder of New York city, daughter of Captain Farrand by his first marriage.

A nation wide but futile search has been made for Mrs. Farrand for fifteen years by war department officials, federal secret service men and attorneys, since she left Arvada, a Denver suburb, shortly after her husband's death. Neither relatives nor friends have since heard from her.

"Unless Mrs. Farrand is found in a few weeks, Public Administrator Woodward said, "she will have to be declared legally dead, and the captain's fortune will go to the only heir we have been able to locate, but if she is found half of the fortune will go to her."

MAY LOSE CITIZENSHIP.

Status of Baltimoreans Fighting in Europe Is in Doubt.

Baltimore.—A question of law may arise if the young Baltimoreans now fighting in Europe, John Poe, John Sydney Howell, Alexander Godby and Martin D. Monaghan, attempt to return to their native land. It is held by the department of labor that by taking up arms they have expatriated themselves. This was the finding in the case of Frank Caswell of Harrison, Me., a trooper of the Canadian contingent, who attempted to come home, but was held up by the authorities on the ground that he had ceased to be a citizen of the United States.

Local officials declare that a different light may be thrown on the subject when it becomes known under just what conditions these young Baltimoreans enlisted. If they swore allegiance to the flag under which they aspired to fight they of course ceased to be citizens of the United States, but there appears to be doubt as to just what the foreign powers exact of their recruits.

The Dinner Horn.

Details in regard to the manner in which meals were served during the dark ages do not abound. It is only toward the twelfth century that we begin to have a little light on this interesting subject. When a meal was ready in the thirteenth century the guests of a castle, with the vassals, were assembled to the sound of a horn, a method of summoning that appears to have been the privilege only of the greatest lords. Some hundreds of years later a bell was used for the purpose.

COMMON BLESSINGS.

It is not rare gifts that make men happy. It is the common and simple and universal gifts; it is health and the glance of sunshine in the morning; it is fresh air; it is the friend, the lover; it is the kindliness that meets us on the journey. It may be only a word, a smile, a look; it is these and not any rarity of blessing that are God's gentle art of making happy.—Mormion.

[President New York Women's Trade Union league.]

It has been very wisely said there can be no division of interest or purpose between the men and the women who work for the organization of the workers in our country. This is demonstrated in the onward sweep of organization among women wage earners.

The great curse of all nations and peoples has been and is that labor, especially woman's labor, is not properly rewarded.

One of the purposes of the American Federation of Labor through the organization of both men and women is to get the proper reward for services rendered to all who work for a living.

When labor receives such reward through the efforts of organization we will have no more sweated industries, no more child labor, in this country.

The National Women's Trade Union league held its fifth biennial convention in New York. Any one really interested in the organization of women need only attend these meetings to realize what a splendid body of women workers in all trades are today doing the uphill work of organizing the women wage earners of our country and teaching them the meaning and purpose of our great labor movement. These workers fearlessly teach that organization is necessary not only for their own industrial welfare, but for the protection of their fellow workers and those who will come after them. These women realize fully that upon them as workers rests the responsibility of working out their own salvation and raising the standard of living for all workers, because, organized or unorganized, we stand or fall together. These delegates from all over the United States proved that the organization of women is possible and beneficial, for every one of these women worked like a woman who felt herself a responsible member of a movement that stands for better conditions for every man, woman and child in the world today.

Anything which helps the organization of the workers helps to make us a better educated people as a whole. It has been said that organization breathes discontent. We organized workers must answer back: Well, if it does, it must be a holy discontent, for any man or woman who is satisfied with the labor conditions as they are today is little better than a slave. To wipe out all forms of slavery is a holy calling. Men have found it necessary to organize to improve their conditions. How much more necessary is it, then, for women, who are supposed to be the weaker sex, to organize. Yet in the unorganized trades women often work longer hours than men.

The cheapest thing in the labor market today is immigrants, women and children. It is just because women are so looked upon by the employers of labor that we, the organized women, must appeal to our organized brothers to help us by understanding us and our sincerity in the great labor movement. They can begin with the womenfolk in their own homes. We find very often that the wives and sisters of the brothers in our trade unions know nothing of the trade union movement, and we must work together until we get women as thoroughly organized as men are. Together we will see to it that child labor is abolished. There shall be equal pay for equal work and a workday which shall not bring to the workers physical and mental exhaustion and starvation wages.

This is a great age to be living in. Great changes are being made, and women must be alive to the situation and take their places by the side of the men in the industrial warfare which we are now waging against child labor, starvation wages, unfair conditions and the crushing of the hopes and aspirations of our men and women. These are causes for industrial war, and we must have soldiers with courage and sympathy.

Women must organize into trade unions, for organization among all the workers has come to stay. They must not take any substitute for industrial organization. We do not want welfare work, social centers or vacation funds. We find that the manufacturers are willing to give us everything under the sun but justice and the right to demand a living wage, shorter hours and decent conditions, with the right to spend the money that we have justly earned and a freedom to take our pleasures where and with whom we choose.

Urge State Labor Bureau.

At the first convention of the South Carolina Federation of Labor it was voted to ask the legislature to establish a state labor bureau. The unionists favored a state system of highways, a compensation bill and a fifty car bill to apply to railroads.

FIGHT FOR PRINCIPLE.

His Task Seems a Hopeless One, Yet He Sticks to the Job.

Every little while you hear somebody say: "It isn't the expense I mind. It's the principle of the thing."

United States treasury officials have found that the country is overrun with persons who feel just that way. Here is one case:

Some years ago the crew of a government revenue cutter gave an entertainment of some sort, and, according to custom, assessed the cost of the affair among those aboard. Each man's share was taken from his pay. One young man was not in sympathy with some feature of the entertainment and objected to having to pay his share. It cost him only 30 cents, but it was the principle of the thing.

He began to write to the assistant secretary of the treasury, who had charge of the revenue cutter service, and demand justice.

That was years ago and the man has averaged about two letters a week ever since. He numbers his letters, and the last one was numbered seven hundred and something.

Two or three years ago he resigned from the revenue cutter service and is now living in New York, but he is still after his 30 cents and the establishment of a great principle.

When Charles Dewey Hilles was an assistant secretary of the treasury he sent the man his personal check for 30 cents in the hope that it would end the long correspondence, but it did not. The man promptly sent back the check, saying that he did not want the money but justice, and that the 30 cents must come from the government itself.

The Way Out.

The caricaturist borrowed £5 from the author.

"When he had got it and put it in his pocket he said these memorable words in his broken English: 'Halle, my fellow, if I take this £5 as a loan every time I see you I say: "Dere dat tiresome Halle. I owe him £5." And you say: "Dere dat tiresome Pellican. He owe me £5." It make unpleasant between us. So I take dis as gift.'"

When Spencer Tried Vegetarianism.

Herbert Spencer tried vegetarianism for about a year, says London Opinion. "At the end of that time," he relates, "I went over all that I had written during the year and consigned it to the fire." Spencer found an exclusively vegetarian diet too bulky, and came to the conclusion that rational life is a compromise. In the matter of diet it is best to strike the happy mean, "between the tiger pacing its cage and the cow lying upon the grass."

Old Hickory.

The fifth grade class in history stories had been studying about Andrew Jackson, from his boyhood up. Finally the day came for them to write all they had learned of this great man. Bert, a bright little fellow of nine years, wrote among other interesting things:

"Andrew Jackson was called 'Old Hickory' because when he was a boy he was a little tough."—New York Tribune.

Compromise.

"Might doesn't make right."

"No, but it most always makes good."—Exchange.

SOCIETY PEOPLE HEAR CALF MUSIC

Sad-Eyed Heifer Rips Off Selection After Months of Practice.

Winston, Conn.—A calf with a soul, is today the subject of ground and lofty conversation in Winsted. The calf is the property of Mrs. Minnie Snell of Warren. The story of how the calm came into the musical life of Winsted could hardly be stranger. About four months ago Mrs. Snell was seated at the piano playing Melachrino No. 2, when the calf, whose given name is Elizabeth, came to the window near the old trellis and looked in.

The Calf Was Tapping the Notes With Her Nose.

As the melody flowed on, Elizabeth swayed on her hoofs, sighed deeply and said as if from the depths of a troubled soul, the following, to wit:

"Moo!"

Mrs. Snell turned to the window, and the expression she saw on the animal's face fascinated her. It was as though the mild-eyed calf had seen some cruel farmer placing a gallon of water into a pint of milk for the New York trade.

Two days later Mrs. Snell heard someone picking out notes on the piano. Startled, she ran into the parlor, and there, far from the maddening cowlick, was Elizabeth. The calf was tapping the notes with her nose.

Since then the calf has been allowed to come into the house over a patch of linoleum every day to practice. The other day Mrs. Small gave the first recital for a few friends. It was awful.

PULLS BOY FROM THE TRACK

Brakeman Climbs on Cowcatcher and Makes Rescue at Risk of Life.

Altoona, Pa.—Harry E. Duey, thirty-five, of Tyrone, a brakeman on the Tyrone division of the Pennsylvania railroad, is to be recommended to the Carnegie commission for a hero medal.

Duey was the front brakeman on a heavy freight train which was coming down the mountain from Snow Shoe. When the train shot around a curve at Clarence, a mining village, Engineer A. H. Rowe saw a boy playing on the track. He knew it would be impossible to stop the train in time to save the child.

His cry was heard by Duey, who was in the engine cab. Duey scrambled out on the running board along the boiler and in a flash was at the pilot. Springing lightly to the cowcatcher he was just in time to snatch the lad from death. The rescued lad is a son of Jack Yancy, a miner at Clarence.

KILLED SNAKE BY STRATEGY

Copperhead Enlivens Harvesting by Wriggling Out of Sheaf.

Rehrersburg, Pa.—While unloading wheat in the barn of Edward Bickel, in Tulpehocken township, George B. Gerhard and William B. Oxenreider saw a copperhead snake three feet five inches in length squirm from the last sheaf tossed from the wagon. The snake landed on the back of a horse, fell on the theshing floor and escaped under a grain barrel.

Then the problem arose as to how to get the snake killed. Finally Oxenreider lifted the barrel just the least bit and the snake came forward ready to bite him. Bickel jumped to the floor until Oxenreider could run to the wood pile, get an ax and chop the head of the reptile off.

Hoarded Money in Windmill.

Pleasant Hill, Mo.—Shortly before his death, recently, John Kiersey, eighty-six years old of this place, told a niece to look in the windmill tower. When the tower was searched, $1,500 in cash was found.

Girl Died Trying to Become Slim.

Stanford, Conn.—Miss Mabel Ridabock, who suffered an extreme loss of blood in an effort to become thin, died here, while her father was preparing to sacrifice blood in a transfusion operation.

NEW AUTO RECORD SET

COAST TO COAST RUN MADE IN TWENTY-FOUR DAYS.

Mrs. Lillian Harris Has Moved Up the Mark for Woman Long Distance Drivers.

In making the coast-to-coast drive—New York to Los Angeles—in 24 days, Mrs. Lillian Harris of Redbank, N. J., is considered to have set a new record for woman drivers.

Carrying four other women as passengers, Mrs. Harris drove the entire distance of 4,950 miles without assistance. She reached her destination without mechanical or any other kind of difficulty. One of the things about which Mrs. Harris was particularly enthusiastic was the absence of fatigue during the tour, which she attributes to the smooth running of the car and the ease with which it was handled.

Out of the twenty-four days there were only four on which it was necessary to go into gears lower than high, the use of the intermediate and low gears being occasioned by encountering some unusually bad roads.

After the women have visited the San Diego exposition, toured southern California and have seen the San Francisco fair, they will begin the return trip overland, following the Lincoln highway.

ROTARY LIFTING AUTO JACK

Lifts Vehicle in One Operation and Provides for Swinging It Around on Own Axis.

This automobile jack, invented by a New York man, provides means for lifting a vehicle of the character indicated in one operation; provides means for rotating the vehicle about a self-contained center; and provides a rotary supporting apparatus adapted for removal from its service position. The engraving herewith gives a side view of the jack, and showing in conjunction therewith an automobile, the same being supported in lifted position thereon.

Makes Poor Lubricant.

Frequent additions to the oil in the crank case are all right for a limited time only. When the oil gets saturated with mineral wear, and has also considerable gasoline which slips past the piston rings combined with it, it is a very poor lubricant.

New Type of Prodigal.

"The people in his home town said he never could or would amount to anything."

"And now he's rich. I presume he went back and paid off the mortgage on the home place or something of that sort."

"No. The old home place wasn't mortgaged. He went back and demoralized his good old parents by giving them a high power automobile. Now they are the worst speeders in town.—Birmingham Age-Herald.

BETTS BRANDS W. H. ANDERSON

Lyons Man Does Not Spare Anti-Saloon League Secretary — Accuses Him of Fraud.

In Friday's issue of the Lyon's Republican the editor, Charles H. Betts, proceeds to denounce the Anti-Saloon League man as little short of a scoundrel. Mr. Betts says:

William H. Anderson, the common lobbyist, the common liar and the uncommon intellectual fraud and political crook, is sending out letters to candidates for Member of Assembly and endeavoring to get them to pledge themselves in advance to support measures that they have never seen, in violation of the state constitution. Mr. Anderson is a promoter of perjury. Any member of the legislature who in advance pledges himself to favor any measure or any proposition for the purpose of securing votes cannot take the oath of office without committng perjury. Mr. Anderson, however, since we exposed his political trickery and fraudulent methods in Oswego county employed against Speaker Sweet, is becoming exceedingly tame. He is very careful these days how he words his propositions to blind members of the legislature. He is beginning to realize that the public is on to the fact that he is not working in the interest of temperance, but is using the funds of the Anti-Saloon League to promote the cause of the Democratic party. He wrote Governor Glynn that "he was born and bred a Democrat" and he has devoted most of his time to attacking the leading Republicans of the state, like Senator Root, Speaker Sweet, Leader Brown and other prominent members of the legislature who refuse to obey his ignorant dictation.

The Betts Bill.

It will be remembered he attacked many members of the legislature for not supporting his local option bill two years ago which bill provided for the free and unrestricted sale of liquor without a license. Last year he introduced a new bill and had to abandon his old bill after we exposed its crude and unworkable provisions and pointed out the "jokers" in that measure. The old bill, two years ago, presented by Mr. Anderson to the legislature and which he condemned members of the legislature for not supporting, contained thirty-five pages of printed matter. After we got through criticising the bill Mr. Anderson was obliged to change thirty of the thirty-two pages of his bill to meet our criticism. It then became the Betts bill instead of the Anti-Saloon League bill. The measure which he introduced last year contained more than eighty changes made to meet the criticism which we made of his old bill and now after condemning the legislature for not passing both of his bills he has abandoned them both and is aiming to come forth with a new bill.

We want to say to the Anti-Saloon League that the worst enemy that the cause of temperance has in the State of New York is this same Anderson. No measure will ever pass the New York State Legislature advocated by him because every member of the legislature knows that he is an intellectual fraud, a dishonest political trickster and is unworthy of either confidence or belief. Intelligent members of the legislature will never be dictated to by such a political rascal and moral imposter and religious hypocrite as William H. Anderson.

Anderson Hypocritical.

Mr. Anderson is not advancing the cause of temperance. He does not want to advance the cause of temperance. The more dives and saloons there are in every town the more public sentiment it makes against the liquor business and the greater the opportunity for Mr. Anderson to pick the pockets of the people by contributions. These are the conditions in which Anderson thrives. The more whiskey is sold, the more dives there are, the more drunkenness there is, the better it suits Anderson, because the more it inflames public sentiment and the more it allows him to pick the pockets of the people to enrich himself.

It is high time that the churches and the intelligent moral people of the state awakened to the fact that every contribution to Mr. Anderson is money thrown away. He has been in this state two years. According to his own statement he has collected $80,000 a year, $120,000 in all, and not one single piece of legislation has he been able to pass through the legislature to improve the temperance conditions in this state. All the money he has collected has been wasted and worse than wasted. He has brought reproach upon the cause of temperance by his dishonest political trickery and unjust and slanderous criticism of public men.

The worst enemy of temperance and the best friend of the saloon in this state is the common liar and lobbyist, William H. Anderson.

who is opposing W. L. Woodbury for Republican County Committeeman of the First District of the Fifth Ward, said this afternoon: "I have entered into this contest at the persuasion of friends who appear to believe that there should be a change from present committeeman W L. Woodbury. In entering this contest I have in mind only the idea of bringing strength to the Republican party. By advocating my office, elective or appointive, men who are efficient can bear the endorsement of REPUBLICANS AT LARGE. If I am honored by the Republicans of the 1st district of the 5th ward my election to the office of County Committeeman, it will be my aim to act as a proper representative of my constituents. I will not seek all the offices myself. In fact, I do not want any office. My motto is: Pass the good things around."

SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY IDEA GETS THE POPULAR STAMP

A brief outline of a Building and Loan Association in this city, suggested last week by George Coffing Warner, of New York, is a conversation with local newspapermen, is given in a letter from Mr. Warner to his Fulton representative here, John J. Jordan, of the Fulton Light, Heat & Power Company, and is evidence that Mr. Warner intends to follow up his suggestion and will do all in his power to effect the organization of such an association here.

The plan Mr. Warner cites is similar to that given in The Times of last evening, with the exception of the idea of making loans available for all purposes to the members of the association and not restricting the loans to real estate as is the practice in some cities.

Some interest has been aroused in the plan to have here a Building and Loan Association that shall work along mutual lines. In a conversation held yesterday one city merchant is quoted as saying:

"Fulton has two national banks and a savings bank and I am hoping that before long it will have a trust company. But there are a good many people who will not save their money unless they have to. They must make a contract to pay a life insurance premium or something of the kind, or the money will be spent and they will have nothing to show for it."

Since the receipt here of George Coffing Warner's letter in which the gentleman announced his ideas relative to the savings and loan association The Times has been furnished with more thoughts along the same line, one of which is a suggestion made by a gentleman whose interest in Fulton never lags. He says that to reach the class of people who will not save money unless they have to, "I see no better way than the organization of the Fulton Savings and Loan Society to be owned, controlled and operated by the people who save the money. Organize it on the lines of the Building and Loan Associations, except that instead of the savings being available only for lonas on real estate, they will be available for any loans and investments that the members of the society think wise.

"I would suggest getting the officers of the banks and some of the business men of the town to act on the committees, to properly organize the business but provide that the people who save the money shall at all times be in control."

Bacteriologist Believed By Farmer as Little Short of Useless Appendage

Not much favor is shown by a number of farmers and men who supply milk to customers in this city toward the idea advanced upon one or two occasions by Mayor Fox, that the city shall appoint and maintain upon salary an official bacteriologist.

The Mayor's idea in this respect occasions a lot of alarm in the minds of those whose business interests are identical with those of the people of this city, so much so that one farmer whose place of business lies just outside the city limits, criticises severely Mayor Fox's theory. This farmer is one of the largest growers of vegetables in this county and has been identified in various ways with the milk business. He says:

"The expenditure of one or two thousand dollars annually to pay the salary of a city bacteriologist is absurd. Aside from analyses on milk, there are no other duties for the intended appointee to perform. State Health Inspectors are required to keep in touch with the condition of water supplies and other conditions necessary to keep the public health up to the required standard and to appoint a city representative would be a waste of the taxpayers' money. It is true that tests should be made of milk supplied to Fulton residents, but this work I am positive will be done gratis by the Agricultural Station at Cornell, or by the State Experimental Station at Geneva, N. Y. It would be well for taxpayers and other residents to thresh this matter out thoroughly, with the assurance that hearty co-operation will be lent by every man supplying milk to the city to see that public health is safeguarded. In voicing this sentiment, I have only the interests of the community at heart and from a business standpoint am unconcerned as regards the manner of passing approval or disapproval on the milk supply."

PARIS MILLINERY

Fulton's Most Famous Review

A magnificent and exclusive representation of the latest and most authoritative Paris and American Millinery modes for Autumn and Winter. Unquestionably the foremost showing in Oswego county. The shopping public can choose this season from the greatest diversity of styles that have been presented for years. Large, Small and Medium Size Hats are equally good.

The clever Parisian modistes, as if by some secret understanding, have selected the Girondin, Directoire, Louis Philippe and Second Empire period styles, which, of course, indicate a return to the medium and high crown Hats, a somewhat drastic change from recent modes. All these are in our spacious Milliner Salon and are either the reproductions or originals of such well-known artists as MARIA GUY, REBOUX, LEWIS, MARIE EDMEE.

WOMAN'S SUFFRAGE AIDS THE NEWSPAPER

Rochester.—Mrs. Henry M. Youmans, president of the Wisconsin Woman Suffrage Association, and assistant editor of her husband's paper, the Waukesha Freeman, has come to Rochester to aid in the seventh campaign district workers under the leadership of Mrs. Alice Clement. She was asked what she thought of the way women show their interest in the newspaper.

"It seems to me that newspapers that work against woman suffrage are directly opposing their own interests," said Mrs. Youmans. "When women can vote they will be much more interested in public affairs than they are now and when they are more interested in public affairs, they will, of course, read the newspapers more than they do now.

"Of course, many women read the newspapers now, but when you notice the crowd in the street car going downtown in the morning, you see most of them en reading newspapers and few of the women doing so. Under present conditions, women are passive rather than active newspaper readers. They look over the newspaper that comes into the house, but they are not so likely to have opinions about various newspapers, or to have a choice among them."

SEVEN COUNTIES WILL PLANT TREES

Rochester.—Fourteen hints for seven counties that are to plant trees along their highways this fall were submitted to and approved by the General Tree-Planting Committee of the Community Council of the Chamber of Commerce at a meeting yesterday. At the same time the recommendations received the compliments of representatives of boards of trade, chambers of commerce and the other similar organizations in Genesee, Livingston, Monroe, Ontario, Orleans, Wayne and Wyoming counties who were at the meeting.

It is intended to line the more important highways in Western New York. The byways will be cared for after the more traveled avenues have received attention. One hundred American elms and forty Norway maples, according to a letter received from W. H. McClelland, of Perry, have been planted in that territory so far.

HUNTING SEASON OPENS IN THREE MORE DAYS

It will be perfectly safe to shoulder a gun and go forth to give battle to most of the game found in this vicinity on and after Friday of this week. This is realized by hunters who will have an ear open Thursday night for the sound of the bell.

Including among the small game to be found in this section are ducks, woodcock, rabbits, black and gray squirrels, partridges and raccoons, although the latter are very scarce. In the Adirondack Mountains the deer season will open and many from this city will take trips there.

There will be no open season on quail until October 1, 1918, the right to shoot them having been taken away two years ago.

The season on wild pheasants constitutes four days during the fall, the last two Thursdays in October and the first two Thursdays in November. Only the male birds can be taken.

Those who are anticipating hunting in the Adirondacks must bear in mind that one person is entitled to shoot only two deer with horns not less than three inches in length. It is reported from the up-state cities that deer is more plentiful this year than in many seasons.

All who have not secured their hunting licenses are warned to do so early in order that they be sure not to fall victims of the game wardens.

SLOWERS' STEALINGS AMOUNT TO $300

Atlanta, Ga.—The funds of the Episcopal Diocese of Atlanta, from which George C. Slowers told New York police yesterday he had stolen $15,000, show a shortage of less than $300, Bishop Cleland Nelson announced today.

The Bishop, who employed Slowers as private secretary, reported to the authorities here that some of the pay checks had been raised, but that the total stolen was comparaivtely small.

SYNOPSIS

Old Cyrus Martin, the head of the American soap trust, makes a bet of $30,000 with a friend, John Clark, a rival soapmaker, that his (Martin's) son Rodney would be making more money at the end of a year than Clark's son Ellery.

Martin takes his pretty secretary, Mary Grayson, into his confidence and enlists her co-operation. Rodney has been a spendthrift, and the father wants to make him reform and go to work.

Mary meets Rodney, and the son proposes marriage to her. Rodney tells his father about his proposal, and the old man pretends great anger. He tells Mary he will disinherit Rodney.

Rodney defies his father, and Mary is deeply touched at the lad's genuine affection for her. Mary makes a financial bargain with Martin to encourage the son to go to work.

Ambrose Peale, press agent, meets Rodney and agrees to go into business with the lad on a salary basis. Rodney has resolved to go into the soap industry and buck the trust.

Rodney, Peale and Mary go into the soap trade together. Rodney then endeavors to borrow $10,000 as capital for his newly formed company.

The offices of the "13 Soap company" are opened, and they advertise it as "the most expensive soap in the world." Peale talks advertising continually.

The 13 Soap company finds its expenses very heavy, and financial rocks loom ahead. Their chief business seems to have been to spend money for advertising under Peale's directions.

An alleged countess, who has appeared on the scene, desires to purchase the French rights for the sale of "13 Soap" and produces a draft for $20,000, which she desires to have cashed.

The "countess" is shown to be an impostor and despair settles over the 13 Soap company. The firm introduces her, however, to Ellery Clark. Father Martin visits the offices.

Martin, fearing rumors that the new company would injure his business and might break the trust, offers to buy out the firm for $100,000 and give Rodney, Peale and Mary good positions. Then he learns that the company is "dead broke."

Suddenly out of a clear sky comes an order for 50,000 cakes of 13 Soap from the great firm of Brown & James of Chicago. "The tide has turned," the trio now declare.

The 13 Soap company having no factory cannot deliver. The trio endeavor to buy the cakes from branch offices of the Martin trust. They fail to get the necessary number, but send 5,000 cakes.

Mary, in despair, calls on old Martin. Rodney also appears. There they both learn that the father caused the sending of the telegram from Brown & James. Naturally they are amazed and mortified.

"Three-seven-four Schuyler, and hurry, sweetie."

"It'll have to be old rose," said Rodney in an aside as he held the wire.

"Castile is the cheapest," Peale suggested.

"Order small cakes," said the prudent Mary. And then they all began again together.

"Hello. Is this the Martin Soap company? We want to get some soap—pink castile—small cakes—40,000 or 50,000 cakes—immediate delivery. What's the price?"

"Hello, four-eight-o Audubon. I want to find out if I can buy a lot of soap right away—old rose—castile—50,000 cakes. We want it this afternoon."

"Hello, son. I want to buy a lot of soap, 50,000 cakes. Got to have some of it today—smallest size castile cakes you keep. If you haven't old rose, pink 'll do. Who am I? None of your business."

This last message, with its bit of airy persiflage, came from Peale, who looked at the others and gave a large and happy wink as he surveyed them waiting at their receivers.

The tide had turned.

They could hardly wait till the soap came in and was shipped out again to Chicago. All three of them were as excited as children waiting before the doors that open on a Christmas tree. Fifty thousand cakes! It was an inestimable, an infinite, an incredible number. Rodney had not an idea whether a row of 50,000 cakes of 13 Soap would reach from our earth to the moon or only from the Union hotel to the railroad terminal. They came and came, an endless chain. But when the influx stopped and had been carefully counted by Mary, Miss Burke and the office boy, pro tem. it totaled, not 50,000, though it seemed a million, but only 5,000 altogether.

"Are you sure?" asked Peale and Rodney in one breath. "Aren't there any more?"

"Quite sure," said Mary.

"Positive," said Miss Burke.

"Are you certain sure there aren't any more of them anywhere?" repeated Ambrose.

"Search me," said the office boy.

It was true; only 5,000 of the lot had been delivered.

The company's three officers made a dash for their telephones. Peale got 374 Schuyler, Mary 480 Audubon and Rodney 276 Broad in a jiffy, only to be told that there was no more soap in stock. In each instance the news was conveyed in a cool and uncordial tone that gave them to understand there was nothing more doing in that quarter. What was the matter?

Peale turned round and stared at his companions and partners aghast.

"Well, wouldn't that get you?" he ejaculated.

Rodney was the most crestfallen of them all, for an idea had come to him of the true reason of things.

"It's the pater," he said in a quiet tone that carried conviction. "He shut down on us."

Mary set her lips and nodded her head in her turn, for the same idea had occurred to her. She was afraid it was all too true. As one sometimes, even in a nightmare, tells oneself this horrible sensation is a dream, so she told herself now this cruel, horrible refusal to give them more soap was only a part of old Mr. Martin's bluff to make Rodney work, one more of his "scenes" in his grand scheme to transform Rodney from an idle rich man's son into a real money getter; that tomorrow, in real life, the other cakes would come.

"So have I," Mary chimed in.

In one mental flash she would see the thing this way and now that.

Then she began to look on the more practical side of things, to turn round and see where they stood. An order for 5,000 cakes in itself was not so bad. It was the very largest they had ever received, at any rate. They would ship the 5,000 promptly and Brown & James would pay cash for them in ten days. She made a rapid calculation. They were giving old Mr. Martin 3 cents a cake for them and would get $3,000 back. That would mean $2,850. She smoothed out the frown in her pretty forehead and announced aloud:

"Well, it means about $3,000 to us, and cash too. After all, that's not so bad."

Peale cheered up immediately.

"Cash," he repeated, rolling the word round in his mouth and tasting it. "The most beautiful word in the English language."

"Except one," said Rodney, looking at Mary.

"Which is?" Peale queried.

"Love," said Rodney.

"No, cash," said Peale. "Why, look here. Think what this means—$3,000."

"We'll discount Jones' note," said Mary resolutely.

"And it's only a beginning," went on Peale. "Give me back that telegram. It'll be my letter of credit, my passport and all the rest of it. I'll show it to the advertising agents. They'll trust me on the strength of that."

It proved a help indeed, this cash, when it came on in due course, but not a cure. It vanished like smoke in thin air, like cream before a set of kittens; like snow upon the desert's dusty face. Their joy in it was short lived, because it was so soon gone. Again there came a day when the end of the month, with its next rent payment, seemed much nearer than the first, a day when time, which, Peale said was the same thing as money, seemed very much like time, and short time at that, and very little like real money. To make matters worse Peale meanwhile had swung round the circle again, waving his "letter of credit" and running up a lot more in the way of bills on new advertising. He had scooted off for a week and never let the office know by so much as a telegram where he was. Then, as cheerfully as he had gone, he blew home again one day, announcing that he had contracted for about $30,000 worth of advertising in Boston, Baltimore, Philadelphia, Washington and a few other eastern metropolises. He declared it was the greatest advertising campaign ever undertaken since George W. Advertising was a young man.

For a self respecting bookkeeper it was all dreadfully disheartening; Mary sighed and found it very difficult. Making five go into two was nothing compared with the effort to make $22,818.09 go into $133.13.

For a little while the days passed uneventfully, drawing nearer the inevitable end. Then came the last day of the month, and Mary's blue devils were very large and blue. The day passed quietly enough in the 13 Soap company's offices, so far as outward signs revealed it; there were few callers, Jones being out of the way, though Mary knew he would be heard from tomorrow if his note was not properly met at the bank. How was she ever going to get a check certified to meet it!

Rodney at his desk sat quietly absorbed. He rustled a few papers now and then, and used his rubber stamp, but its impact on the pad and paper lacked the usual vigor. Even Peale's head, Mary noted, drooped a little as he wrote his ads.—ads. that would be born to blush unseen if money could not be raised somehow, somewhere, to pay for them.

As the hour of 5 drew near Mary began to make some long drawn out preparations for going home. This last quarter of an hour of time must be killed and done to death by fair means or by foul. A resolution had been slowly forming in her head and now took definite shape. She shut down her desk with a delightfully loud noise and stood up.

"I may be a little late tomorrow," she said to Rodney as she began putting on her hat.

"All right," said the president mildly.

Rodney too looked as if something were working in his mind, and no wonder, Mary thought, with their situation what it was. Mary knew him like a book, but this time she would ask no questions and keep her own counsel. She was going straight up to Mr. Martin's on Fifth avenue and have a long talk and argument with him. He simply must let them have those extra 45,000 cakes of soap for Brown & James.

She scurried over to the Third Avenue elevated and climbed the stairs of the station at Worth street, her brain working all the time. In a curious, detached spirit she saw her nickel slide into the groove made by so many previous nickels on the hard wood sill under the office window and dropped her ticket delicately in the ticket chopper's glass box.

Several local trains passed, all crowded, and, being tired and enjoying the fresh air, Mary was disposed to take her time and wait till she got the seat she wanted. It gave her a luxurious feeling to let the trains go by and not run after them, as people usually did in New York.

A woman came presently and sat down beside her, with an evident inclination to talk. She was young, though her peroxide hair made her look older. There were two types of women with dyed hair like this, Mary had noted—the fast and the sentimental. Her neighbor was obviously the latter, and Mary's looks had probably appealed to her. Without insolence she looked Mary over thoroughly a moment as if appraising her.

MISS WINIFRED HOLT.

Miss Winifred Holt, secretary of the New York Association For the Blind, writes from Paris, where she has gone to establish with the help of French military authorities permanent surroundings and occupations for soldiers blinded by war:

"The purposes of the committee are to find the blind sufferers, some of whom are marooned in improvised hospitals, farmhouses or chateaux, and many of whom are segregated in the large hospitals or Red Cross stations.

"The committee will send visitors and teachers to these blind soldiers, furnish them with entertainment through reading, games, etc., and for those physically able it will start the task of putting eyes on their finger tips and giving them 'light through work.'

"We have found all the blind men in the hospitals of Paris and some in their homes. I estimate that there must be from 3,000 to 4,000 blind soldiers in this immediate neighborhood.

"We have begun teaching in the hospitals here and have among our pupils two very interesting and grateful blind officers who will make good teachers and attractive agents for the Paris Lighthouse when it is opened.

"The committee will seek to consider the men's individual interests and abilities and as far as possible to train them in trades and occupations for which their blindness has temporarily unfitted them or to find new openings in which they may become wage earners.

"When they have become proficient it is hoped wherever possible to return them to their home surroundings with the knowledge and tools to make them self helpful. When this is not practical it is hoped to establish them in congenial surroundings, where they may again have a feeling of independence and well being. Without prompt expert assistance soon after loss of sight the blind man is apt to become despondent, to lose his intelligence or to drift into an apathy from which it is difficult, if not impossible, to arouse him later.

"The work is very heartrending, but unspeakably essential. We found a blind soldier the other day who had not left his room in the hospital since the accident and was afraid to walk. After we told him of Fawcett's wonderful life the man jumped up, looking a new human being, and, to the amazement of his nurse and everybody else, strode forth, with his head lifted high, into the corridor and walked up and down with his hands behind his back like any other proud man. That is what hope does for these people, who were desperate until we brought them light.

"I wrote you last week of the young officer who was blind, had lost his arm and had only two fingers remaining on his right hand. He is doing wonderfully and is full of hope and light. His fiancee comes from Corsica to see him at the end of the week. I am to see her before she has the shock of receiving what remains of her soldier, so as to prepare her to appreciate what life may still hold for them both."

Miss Holt wrote that there should be a corps of at least fifty teachers to cope with the work and that funds were badly needed for materials for work and clothes. She hopes her American friends will send her a million dollars. "I can use all of it and to good purpose," she writes.

A Wedding Breakfast.

Serve a fruit cocktail for the first course. This must be ice cold and the fruit prepared long enough in advance for the several flavors to be well blended. Follow this with creamed chicken and mushrooms and potato and nut croquettes, else chicken croquettes and peas, with finger rolls, then tomato salad with dressing and last the ice cream, cake and coffee. Any light wine will be suitable, if there is no objection to its use. Serve with chicken course.

Shredded pineapple, grapefruit and orange pulp make a delicious cocktail. Prepare each separately and sweeten to taste. Let stand on ice several hours; then mix and let stand over night on ice. Serve in sherbet glasses with maraschino cherry on top of each.

YOUNG FOLKS' CORNER

Robin Redbreast Saved.

There is a happy robin redbreast singing somewhere around the pleasant suburbs of Springfield, Mass., that owes its life to those who could not see a robin in trouble or in danger of death through an accident that had befallen it. While it was building its nest in the top of a tall maple forty feet from the ground one of its legs got entangled in some twine it had picked up. A resident near by who had been watching the busy bird saw its predicament and at once telephoned to Agent Dexter A. Atkins of the Massachusetts S. P. C. A. Agent Atkins communicated with Chief Daggett of the fire department, who dispatched the aerial ladder truck to the scene, and then Fireman Robert D. Ruhe, in the presence of scores of children who had scurried thither from all points to see the little songster released, ascended the tall ladder, snapped off the twig that held the bird and brought it to the ground. The cord that held the tiny captive was cut, and it flew away to freedom, to the joy of everybody.

The Eagle's Nest.

There was once a young lad named Rudy, who lived in Switzerland, where the mountains are very high. When he was a little boy he had been taught by a cat how to climb, so that he could always climb very high, and when he grew up he became a chamois hunter. One day he fell in love with Babette, the miller's daughter, and they wanted to get married. But the miller told Rudy he must first bring him the young eagle whose nest was on the top of a high, steep rock.

Rudy tied five long ladders together and at last captured the eagle; then, of course, the miller gave his consent, and Rudy and the miller's daughter were married.—Andersen's "Fairy Tales."

"Going to Jerusalem."

A very interesting game to be played is "going to Jerusalem." Arrange a row of chairs down the center of the room, one chair facing one side of the room, the next facing in the opposite direction, and so on to the end of the line, there being one less chair than there are persons to play. A brisk march should then be played on the piano, while all the players march around the whole row of chairs.

Suddenly the music stops, and all must try to sit. One, of course, is left standing, and that one is then out of the game. One chair is therefore removed, and the game goes on until only two persons are left. The one who wins the last chair wins the game.

Timing a Train.

Have you ever tried to tell how fast the train on which you were riding was traveling? The next time you are on a train try this: Watch in hand, count the clicks of the rails for twenty-one seconds, divide by two and you have the number of miles per hour at which the train is moving. Another method is to count the number of rail joints of a parallel track for the same length of time. The reason for dividing by two in the former case and not in the latter is the fact that the rails are staggered, thus making the two rails of each track click separately so that the number counted is twice the number actually traversed.—American Boy.

"Hill Dill."

The game of "hill dill" is often played between the curbings of a street. These curbings serve as boundaries. One player is chosen to be "it" and stands in the center. The other players stand in two parties beyond the boundary lines, one party on each side.

The center player calls: "Hill dill! Come over the hill!" The other players then exchange goals, and as they run across the open space the one in the center tries to tag them. Any one who is tagged assists in tagging the others.

Sausages.

A train was rushing through some swamps in which thousands of cattails were bobbing their brown heads in the breeze.

Hugh was from the city and had never before seen a cattail. He watched them curiously through the car window a moment, then turned to his mother excitedly.

"Why," he cried, "I didn't know sausages grew that way!"—Continent.

Easy & Practical Home Dress Making Lessons

Prepared Especially For This Newspaper by Pictorial Review

A STYLISH COSTUME IN SOFT SILK.

6396

For the semi-formal costumes of the season soft silks and satins are used, the above model being fashioned of mulberry purple satin trimmed with black satin and white silk.

Although many of the smartest costumes of the season are developed in such materials as gabardine, duvetyn, serge, etc., taffeta, soft satin and gros de Londres are used quite as extensively, especially when to a frock is imparted an air of formality.

The vest and points of the collar are of white silk, but the collar and cuffs are of black satin. To reproduce this model in medium size requires 5¾ yards 36-inch material, with ⅜ yard silk for the vest and ¼ yard 40-inch satin for the collar and cuffs.

The skirt, with the piecing that is added to the side to give more fulness, must be cut from an open width of material. In case the dress is not to be trimmed with satin, but all of the trimmings be carried out in the silk, the cuff may also be cut from the same width as the skirt and piecing.

With the skirt provided for, the silk can now be folded for the remaining parts of the pattern. Directly on the fold place the back and collar, (G) and (B), respectively, marked by triple "TTT" perforations. Opposite these sections comes the vest, if made of the dress material, then to the right of the vest the front. Both of these are laid on a lengthwise thread of the silk, and if contrasting material is used the vest section is arranged in the same way. The piecing for the skirt follows the front and is along the selvage edge opposite the belt. To the extreme right, on a lengthwise thread, the sleeve is placed. The small "o" perforations on the sleeve indicate elbow length, while the single or double "oo" perforations on the skirt show how it may be shortened.

The introduction of black on the collar is a very strong note and promises to be very fashionable as a detail of dressy Autumn frocks.

For the Children

Miss Katherine Brown, Five-year-old Swimmer.

One of the features at a recent water carnival held at College Point, N. Y., was the swimming feats of Miss Katherine Brown, the five-year-old daughter of Commodore Al Brown, the champion long distance swimmer of the world. The little tot not alone swam a hundred yards in fast time, but performed some remarkable diving stunts from a thirty-five foot stand especially erected for the occasion. Miss Brown has been swimming since she was three years old and is considered a water marvel for her age. She does not alone use the breast stroke while swimming, but can use the crawl and the trudgeon as well. The illustration shows Miss Brown on the diving board showing some of her little friends how to begin the breast stroke. No need to say the listeners are paying strict attention to her advice.

A Potato Race.

Children of all ages (except the baby) enjoy greatly a potato race. Two rows of potatoes are laid along the ground for a distance of a hundred feet or so, about five feet apart. A basket or pail is placed at the end of the row from which the contestants start. Two persons begin together, each having a spoon, and they must pick up the potatoes, one at a time, on the spoon without touching it with the hand, and carry it safely and drop it in the basket. One may select the potatoes in any order one pleases, but must make a separate trip for each potato. Sometimes they fling the potatoes from a distance, but if it falls short it must be picked up and placed in the basket. Whoever gets his potatoes in first is the winner of these two; then two others enter the contest. After all the company have had their turn the winners are pitted against each other until there is only one remaining, who is pronounced the champion.

Hidden Pet Puzzle.

By taking the initial letter of a one syllable word from each of the following sentences and writing them together correctly the name of a certain kind of four footed pet will be spelled:

Aim at the sun and you'll reach the moon.

Few gems are as rare as the pearl.

Art is a long and tedious study.

A gentle nag is the children's friend.

When given an inch do not take a mile.

Sweet is the bread one can earn for himself.

Always look well before leaping.

Answer.—Spaniel.

Riddle.

I may be made of brass, paper or wood. I may live for a century or be easily defaced and lost. I am given as a token of love, and yet the sight of me may cause sorrow. Sometimes I hold a stream, a tree, a bird and a bush; sometimes I hold only a face. I may look like you or like your friend. I may be black or white and so small I may be seen in your eye.

Fern Dust.

We tiptoed through the forest
One bright midsummer night,
And there we found a clearing
Aglow with fairy light.
We spied a little elf man,
With a tiny, shiny pail;
And he was singing, "Fern dust,
Fern dust for sale!"

He sold us each a pailful
To sprinkle in our shoe.
We paid him for it, gladly,
With a bunch of meadow rue.
And then we heard a rustling,
A whispering in the breeze,
And the laughter of the fairies
Who danced beneath the trees.

We pitter pattered homeward,
And my, but we felt queer!
For not a soul could see us
And not a soul could hear,
As, fairy-like, we tripped it,
And scarcely touched the ground—
The magic fern dust hid us
And stilled the smallest sound.

But when we woke next morning
The fern dust all had gone;
Had vanished with the fairies
In the misty light of dawn.
But we shall find that elf man
With his tiny, shiny pail,
For we'll hear him singing, "Fern dust,
Fern dust for sale!"

POPULAR MECHANICS

Automatic Safe Lock.

To protect vaults from being broken into by cracksmen, a secret auxiliary locking device has been invented which acts automatically when the combination of a safe is disturbed, says Popular Mechanics. It is installed between the door and the back cover plate and so arranged that it is neutral at all times unless the regular combination is blown off or tampered with in an illicit manner, at which time the concealed lock is automatically sprung. This confronts the cracksman with a puzzling situation, for there is no means of his ascertaining the position of the second locking member, even if he is aware of its presence. The location of the device may be varied, while its bolts are also placed in different positions and hidden from view even when the door is opened. Only the owner and the lock company are aware of the exact place at which the device is fitted.

Making Impressions of Leaves.

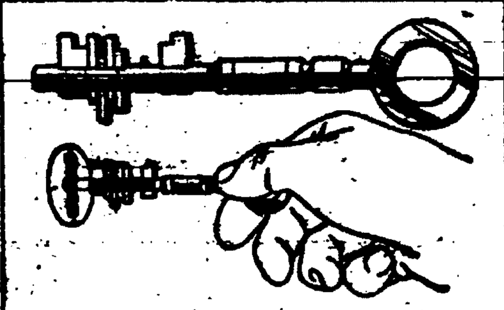
Grease a piece of heavy writing paper with linseed oil, and smoke the surface well by lighting a small piece of camphor gum and holding the paper over the flame. Place the leaf on the smoked surface of the paper and cover it with several thicknesses of newspaper; then press the leaf into the blackened surface. Remove the leaf and lay it with the blackened surface on a piece of white paper; then cover again with the newspaper and press evenly and thoroughly. A beautiful and permanent impression of the leaf will be transferred to the paper.

Care should be taken not to move the leaf the least bit either in coating it with the smoke or in transferring it to the paper. Be careful not to use too much oil.—Popular Mechanics.

Lock of Many Combinations.

In France an inventor has recently produced a lock which is capable of being changed at will into any one of 10,000 combinations, says Popular Mechanics. The inner construction of the device is intricate, but so formed that by altering the web arrangement of the key its locking tumblers may be set to conform to any desired outline and respond to no key of dissimilar detail.

There is a longitudinal slot in the stem of the key carrying the individual teeth which by loosening the thumbscrew may be moved transversely.



KEY USED WITH VARIABLE LOCK.

To alter the combination of the lock the key is inserted into it and given one turn. It is then removed and the structure of its web changed, whereupon the key is again inserted and given a second turn. In making this last turn the tumblers in the lock conform to the new shape of the key and lock themselves to its outline, thereafter responding only to it, but upon being turned over once always come back to neutral to the extent that they are ready to be subjected to a different key arrangement.

Leave Room For the Wrench.

Designers of machinery and particularly engines often overlook, in their endeavor to secure compactness, the fact that a wrench at times has to be used on the various nuts. Consequently, when examining a car with an idea of purchasing, this point is well worth remembering. Be sure there is plenty of space between the nut and the nearest metal, and if the position is such that an ordinary wrench cannot be used see that there is sufficient head room for a box wrench. When it is necessary to remove a number of adjacent parts to get at a single nut it is not only annoying, but it also means a waste of time and money.

To Remove Cotter Pins.

While removing cotter pins is generally considered more or less of an easy matter, repair men can learn something new, says Blacksmith and Wheelwright. One of the best methods of getting an ordinary pin out of its hole is to grasp it in the jaws of a pair of pliers and use a hammer to pound the pliers. This is a very effective way and is used by nearly all good repair men.

Another method is to use a drift pin or large nail. Put this through the hole of a cotter and strike it with the hammer. Sometimes the pin may be removed with the drift or nail, using the latter as a lever.

Removing Putty Stains.

Putty purchased from a dealer is usually in a soft and oily state, and the amateur glazier soon finds his hands, as well as the tools, plentifully smeared after the job is finished. Removing this from the hands with the putty knife or a stick is very tedious, but if a bunch of fine excelsior is used the putty will be removed quickly and thoroughly.

A Hint For Motorists.

The motorists should give special care in seeing that the mud guard beneath the engine and gearing is kept free of volatile oil, for the reason that at any time a little gasoline might get in with it and start a fire.

TODAY'S FASHION NOTE

The woman who likes a touch of the masculine in her top coats will find the idea cleverly embodied in this model, developed in heavy blue cheviot. The lines are unusually comfortable on account of the roomy sleeves, roomy pockets and wide belt. Panne velvet forms the collar. In medium size the coat requires 4 1-2 yards 54-inch cheviot, with 1-4 yard 22-inch velvet for collar.

NEW HAVEN CHURCH NEARS COMPLETION.

New Haven, Sept. 27.—The repairs, which for several weeks have been under progress at the Congregational church at New Haven, are now completed and on Sunday, October 3, the regular services will be resumed. The entire interior of the church has been repaired and decorated, the side walls with a soft shade of Tiffany blend, and the woodwork painted in harmony with the color scheme adopted; the general effect is pleasing and restful and entirely suitable to a place of religious worship.

Yesterday Placed Boston Only Two Games From Championship---Cobb Pulled Bone Play.

The prospective world series games to be played at the Braves' field, Boston, next month, may be seen at prices ranging from 50 cents to $5, according to an announcement yesterday by the management of the Boston Americans. The highest price will be for box seats. Other reservations in the grandstand will cost $3 each. The number of seats which may be obtained by reservation has been increased by setting aside the stand that runs back of third base. These seats will sell at $2 each. Tickets in these three classes will be sold in advance only in blocks of three, covering first three games that may be played in Boston.

Tickets for the rightfield bleachers, at $1 each, and in the bleachers, at 50 cents each, will be placed on sale at the grounds before each game.

The Boston Red Sox, closing the season on their home grounds with an 8 to 4 decision over St. Louis today, approached within two games of clinching their claim to the championship. Two more Boston victories, two Detroit losses or a Red Sox victory and a Tiger defeat, will decide the race in Boston's favor.

The Browns found Leonard off form and took the lead with three runs in the second inning, assisted by Lewis' error. Boston scored two in the third on a pass, Scott's double and Gainer's hit, and tied the score in the fourth through Sisler's wildness and Wagner's double.

St. Louis again took the lead in the fifth inning when Sisler and Shotten singled, Howard was hit and Sisler scored on Lee's sacrifice fly. Boston settled the contest in the seventh by timely hitting and by taking advantage of the wildness of both Sisler and Weilman, who succeeded him. Shore, who replaced Leonard in the sixth for Boston, pitched almost perfectly.

BELGIAN RELIEF STILL BIG TASK

New York.—There are 7,000,000 Belgian mouths and 2,000,000 French ones in the "occupied zone" of war in Europe into which nothing enters save what is provided by America, but the situation in some ways presents more serious aspects than it did this time last year.

Lindon Wallace Bates, vice chairman and New York director of the commission for relief in Belgium, says that it will be several weeks before it can be definitely known just how much it will be necessary for Americans to do during the coming winter. Much depends on the Belgian harvest. But it is certain that the commission, which has undertaken to supply the Belgian noncombatants with food until the war ends, has before it perhaps the most arduous part of its work—most arduous because, although the first enthusiastic wave of sympathy for the stricken country, which made the collection of donations little more than the sending of acknowledgments, has had a year to lose its original ardor, the task is just as big as ever.

Sixty thousand tons of food have to be sent every month and over 1,500,000 people fed who have no means to pay for anything. This means a minimum of $3,000,000 a month to be raised, and it is not expected the commission's present funds can last much longer.

In one respect the work will be much easier than it was last year. The organization of the commission is complete and well nigh perfect. Its committee has become accustomed to smooth and harmonious co-operation, and its agents have been established in every center of distribution. The problem thus is merely that of getting the food instead of getting it and then getting it to the people of Belgium.

The diplomatic obstacles which made the early work particularly arduous also do not now exist. All of the belligerent nations have recognized the commission as the medium to supply food to noncombatants and have agreed not to molest its shipments. As Bates put it, the commission has become established as an "imperium in imperio."

But there have been many births in Belgium, and, although many adults doubtless have died, a baby is somewhat more difficult to feed than his father.

The people of Belgium who are able to pay for food of course have not been receiving gratis their supplies from the commission. There are about 5,500,000 of these. As there is little other food for sale in Belgium, they have to buy their supplies from the commission. They each have had to procure them a ticket entitling them to buy only a certain amount—precisely the same as that given to those who have no money.

The amount is about ten ounces of bread and dried beans and rice and prunes, and others basic foods a day. It is about one-third of a soldier's ration, or about one-fourth of what the average American eats. It costs for each member of the "bread line," about $2 a month.

In spite of the small amount and the even smaller cost, however, it has sufficed not only to keep alive the people of Belgium, but to keep them well and physically fairly well contented.

If, as has been suggested, Henry Ford should aspire to the Vice Presidency, his political opponent probably will charge him with being a machine candidate. — Chicago Evening Post.

DRIVE WILL CONTINUE UNTIL GERMANS ARE SENT ACROSS RIVER RHINE

London.—Despite the efforts of the Germans to minimize the great Franco-British victory on the western front, I am in a position to say—though both the London and Paris Press deprecate premature rejoicing—that the results achieved are far more potential than the victory on the Marne. The latest figures report the capture of more than twenty-three thousand men, and all the special dispatches from the battle front agree that the German losses were terrific.

No doubt, as the German Communique reports, there have been very heavy losses in the allied armies, but the result achieved, the establishment of the moral superiority of the Franco-British forces, the capture of nearly all the Points, Dappui, on the road to Lille, was worth the great sacrifice.

More than a week ago I cabled that the artillery action along the whole of the front was the prelude to a great movement which I believe has been begun and which will continue, according to the judgment of the military experts here, until the Germans are driven out of France and Belgium and over the Rhine.

The French are still advancing in Champagne, while east of Loos the British are also going forward. All German counter attacks—and they have been of the fiercest character, owing to the stinging comments of the Kaiser on the capacity of his generals—have broken down. To add to the feeling of jubilation which, despite official cautions, cannot be suppressed, favorable news continues to come from the eastern theatre of war to the effect that the Germans are failing to pierce the barriers at Dvnsk and are meeting with disaster among the Russian marshes, while General Ivanoff, by retaking Kovel and administering a smashing blow to the Austrians has compelled them, according to the very latest information, to evactuate Brody. General Codorna and his Italian army, fighting amid iceclad mountain peaks, are also advancing slowly but steadily.

In brief, the whole character of the war has been changed, temporarily at least, bl the Allies' triumphs during the last few days. This explains why Bulgaria, having mobilized, now is insisting the call to the colors is only to enforce a policy of armed neutrality to protect the country from invasion. While the Bulgarians have no sympathy with the efforts to align themselves against Russia, their own creed and race, the Greeks are rallying with splendid enthusiasm, which is being intensified by thep ledge of the Quadruple Entente to support the Island Kingdom with great armies of men and millions of money. Meanwhile, according to a Daily Chronicle special correspondent at Bucharest, Germany is exhausting every effort to prevent Roumania from entering the conflict on the side of the Allies, but if Germany violates Serbian territory the Roumanian army, as in the last Balkan war, will be found fighting side by side with the Greeks and the Serbians. Sofia knows this now, and the knowledge has had the effect of paralyzing the campaign of the pro-German war party.

The Daily Telegraph in an editorial tody deling with the question of there being a surprise in the Allies' attack on the Germans in France, argues that nobody could suppose that there is anything faulty with the German intelligence service, and delclares considering the Allies' attackk had been prepared for by artillery for several weeks that there could have been no element of surprise in it.

"What are we to make," says the Daily Telegraph, "of the astounding fact that so many thousands of unwounded Germans were captured, to say nothing of the wounded not yet enumerated and of the capture of three hundred unwounded officers in Champagne alone? It is plain, one the face of the meagre body of facts yet published, that something very remarkable, and certainly without precedent in this war, took place in the attack on the Champagne front, if not elsewhere."

The Daily Telegraph urges that the authorities should let the authorities into the facts of the situation at the soonest moment possible.

The official communication made public last night says:

"Northwest of Hulluch we have repulsed a number of counter atacks and inflicted heavy losses on the enemy. East of Loos our offensive is progressing.

"Our captures now amount to 53 officers and 2,800 men, 18 guns and 32 machine guns. The enemy abandoned a considerable quantity of material which has not yet been classified."

KEELER WANTS STATE JOB

State Conservation Commission Job Not So Easily Landed as Reported.

The report that Harold Keeler, a young newspaperman of this city, was to be named as a member of the State Conservation Commission, which appeared in the Syracuse newspaper last evening, has been classed as a product of feverish imagination by interested parties here.

Hubert L. Gilman, who was mentioned as a possibility for the position of secretary to Mr. Keeler in the event of his appointment, because of his efforts in Mr. Keeler's behalf, said today that he knew nothing whatever about the situation and had done nothing along the lines mentioned in the newspaper story.

Mr. Gilman was skeptical regarding the chances of any Fultonian annexing the appointment, and said that leading politicians here would endeavor to get $6,000 jobs for themselves if there were any at large.

Mr. Keeler at noon today admitted having conversed with Speaker T. C. Sweet in regard to the appointment, but said, insofar as he knew, it was only a possibility and it was doubtful if there was sufficient influence in the city to insure the appointment of a Fulton man. In view of the salary attached, Mr. Keeler said, it was obvious that there would be countless applicants for the position.

RUSSIA REFUSES TO CENSOR TONE OF PRESS

Petrograd, Sept. 27.—At a meeting of the Cabinet yesterday a preliminary poltical censorship of the press was informally proposed by the Minister of the Interior, but was rejected by a majority.

The question was, however, suspended as there is a strong feeling the newspapers are having a bad influence on public opinion through their outspoken criticism of the government.

4,000,000 ALLIES IN DRIVE, SAYS BERLIN

Berlin (via Amsterdam)—The drive of the allies in the West has been stopped, according to official reports given out here today.

Great losses have been inflicted on the attacking forces. In Champagne alone the French are estimated to have lost 40,000 men, while the British also have suffered heavily. In the course of the day more than 6,000 prisoners and fourteen machine guns have been taken.

On every section of the fron the British and French have been brought to a standstill, the War office announces. Fierce attacks continue, but have failed to gain ground.

While the Germans evacuated Souchez, the French have been unable to occupy the ruins, which are swept by the fire of German artillery. Loos, which was abandoned when the Germans retired from their advanced positions, also is being heavily bombarded.

Along the entire front where the Germans evacuated their first line trenches shells are now being poured into the abandoned cities, inflicting heavy casualties on the allied troops which occupy them.

Fully 4,000,000 allied troops, it is estimated, were concentrated for the great drive.

Printers' Marks.

The interrogation mark or "point" (?) was originally a "q" and an "o," the latter placed under the former. They were simply the first and last letters of the Latin word "questio." So, too, with the sign of exclamation or interjection (!). In its original purity it was a combination of "I" and "o," the latter underneath, as in the question mark. The two stood for "Io," the Latin exclamation of joy. The paragraph mark is a Greek "p," the initial of the word paragraph. The early printers employed a dagger to show that a word or sentence was objectionable and should be cut out.—Exchange.

FROM PRIVATE TO CHIEF OF STAFF

British Headquarters, France.—Little is known to the outside world about Sir William Robertson, K. C. V. O., K. C. B., D. S. O., whose remarkable career from the ranks to chief of staff of the army is so well known to the army itself. His work in relation to that of Sir John French, the commander in chief, has been described as that of the general manager of a great corporation to that of its president.

A powerfully built country boy, he came to London at the age of nineteen and enlisted in the Ninth lancers. Promotion from the ranks is not frequent. The majority of officers come from the military school at Sandhurst. But the door is kept open for a private of good education and character. By passing a stiff examination he may secure a commission.

Young Robertson had had only an elementary education, but set out to make up for the deficiency by study.

SIR WILLIAM ROBERTSON.

He invested his shilling a day—which is the pay of a British private—in books. As a British regular trooper has none too much time to himself, he used to get comrades to read to him from Bacon and the English classics while he was grooming his horse or cleaning his equipment.

In the course of lineal promotion he could never hope to be more than a major. Special promotion could come only through distinguishing himself. MacDonald, who won fame by his charge at Omdurman, and other eminent British commanders who had risen from the ranks had won their way as natural leaders of men in the field.

Four years after he had received his commission he had won enough attention to be assigned to the intelligence branch of the quartermaster's department in India. There he found his opportunity. Rewards are given officers for learning native dialects.

To the average officer there is nothing attractive in spending hours with a native munshi or teacher in acquiring a tongue which can be of use with only some frontier tribe. Robertson offered his munshi a quarter of the reward when he was proficient enough to earn it by passing an examination.

On the staff throughout the South African campaign he earned the praise of Roberts and Kitchener by his capacity for getting things done when others sometimes failed. When in 1910 he was placed in command of the Army Staff college even those who agreed he had shown himself to be the man for the place were amazed at the thought of a man who had been for ten years a private without any groundwork of regular academic education should become the director of an institution which gathers the ablest officers of the army for instruction in the higher branches of war and gives the character to army organization.

Meantime he had kept on with his languages. He now knew French and German, and he had studied the continental army systems. There seems to be a general agreement that his improvement of the Staff college marked an epoch.

As director of military training at the war office he later had much to do with the preparation of the British expeditionary force. He went to France with it as quartermaster general and was responsible for keeping the army overseas supplied. His success in this capacity led to his appointment as chief of staff.

O'NEILL'S MEN WORKING HARD

Bucknell May Give Orange Early Season Troubles---Coach Makes Many Changes

Syracuse.—Having seen the glaring faults of his men brought out in a preliminary game against a local aggregation, Head Coach Frank J. O'Neill, of the Syracuse University football squad, has begun his campaign of correction. The practice of the first few days of this week will be devoted entirely to rudimentary drills designed to break down the defects shown last Saturday.

The remainder of the time this week will be spent in bringing out plays to be used against Bucknell next Saturday. The Pennsylvania boys come here intent upon holding the Orange if victory is impossible. At any rate they will give Syracuse just the strenuous battle the coaches seek before sending their team against Princeton the following Saturday.

It is not probable that many changes in the fine-up of the Varsity will be made for the Bucknell game. With the exception of the ends and center the line is ready for a season of very strenuous work. There are a number of good ends who lack finesse. They will bew orked on considerably this week. Three men are trying for the center birth and as soon as they perfect their passing they will be fit for battle.

There are two good quarterbacks, Meehan and Huycke, while the halfbacks, RoRse and Newberry, should stay in position. Wilkinson is fighting for his berth, where in past years he has been considered a regular. There is a keen battle for fullback, which may be solved by the shifting of Newberry and the placing of Wilkinson.

Many alumni have sought reservations for this game, expecting to see just what the Orange is depending upon for the big games with Colgate and Dartmouth.

CORNELL ELEVEN MASCOT A REAL LIVE BEAR

Ithaca.—The Cornell football team is to have a regular mascot this year. It will be a six-months-old black bear, which is expected to be here in time for the Oberlin game Saturday. Manager Hunking and Assistant Manager Lally saw the bear at Old Town, Me., bought it and ordered the owner to ship it here at once. They say they will call it Gib, the nickname given to Cool, the varsity center, who is something of a bear cub himself when in action.

SHUGRUE SAID TO HAVE BEEN DOING SQUINTING

A few days ago there came from New York the story that Joe Shugrue was not training as vigorously as he should for his coming bout with Willie Ritchie, the former lightweight champion. Shugrue immediately came out with some hot denials. He asserted he never went near the white light districts, that he was retiring early every night, and putting in the accustomed amount of work. Evidently the promoters didn't care to take his word for it, remarks the Newark Evening Times. The bout, which the two were scheduled to have October 4 has been postponed to October 26, and Johnny Dundee is to meet Ritchie October 7. The promoters say the postponement was by request of Shugrue so that he could have more time for training.

PRIMARY RESULTS FAVOR REGULARITY WOODBURY WINS

Figures Give the City Leader Good Cause for Smiling—Ingersoll Wins Over Carvey, 23-14—Speaker Sweet and Clerk Stanton Run Strong.

Those who were predicting the political demise of Myron Stranahan, State Committeeman, through the defeat of two of his lieutenants, W. Lawson Woodbury and Harry C. Webb, in the Republican nominations for the county committee yesterday, have changed their minds this morning, for both candidates, whose certain defeat was presaged by sanguine members of the opposing forces two weeks ago, swamped their opponents in approved fashion. Mr. Woodbury had a walkover in the contest against J. A. Bort, the final count standing 83 to 33. Mr. Webb won an overwhelming victory over Dr. H. L. Lake by 71 to 26.

The contest between Mr. Woodbury and Mr. Bort was considered an even matter until along in the evening, but in the last hours scores of Mr. Woodbury's supporters cast their votes for him, and the staunch support that had been promised the losing candidate was not in evidence.

The old guard Republicans won out in every clash for the nominations, although there were very few contests in the city. In the Sixth ward the contest for supervisor between Rex Carvey and Ben Ingersoll developed into a question of a few votes, and Mr. Ingersoll won the nomination by a majority of nine in the second district of the First ward. Both men polled an equal vote in the Sixth, and in the first district of the First, but in the Second district Mr. Ingersoll's supporters rallied to his support and accorded him 23 votes to Mr. Carvey's 14.

George Fuller snowed G. [illegible] under in the contest for the Republican nomination for supervisor [illegible] wards by a vote of 206 to 67. In the Fourth and Fifth wards the balloting at the Republican polling places was heavy all day.

For the Republican nomination for alderman in the Sixth William Bidwell won over Frank Van Valkenburgh by 65 to 61 votes.

E. J. Schem, who was not a candidate, received one vote in the primaries for mayor; Mayor Frank E. Fox was given a vote by an enthusiastic admirer; Dr. Harriet M. Doane, who refused to be designated for coroner, was given one vote and Fred Wise also received a vote for mayor.

Speaker T. C. Sweet polled a heavy vote in the Republican primaries throughout the city, as did Zopher D. Stanton, county clerk. Because of the lack of contests in the Democratic primaries and consequently lack of interest, Fred M. Riley, for assemblyman, was not given heavy support.

Charles Stewart, Clinton Hulett and Frank Rumsey, nominated as county committeemen without opposition, were accorded strong support in their respective districts.

Dr. Cusack, Messrs. Vowinkle and Babcock won the Republican designation for coroner in this city, and Dr. Ringland, the other candidate, also lost the preference in Oswego.

In the Fifth ward C. Milton Allen, jr., won the Republican nomination for alderman against George Smith, 63 to 32.

James Brooks, the Prohibition and Independent candidate for mayor, polled a good vote at the polling places of his party, and also won a few votes on the Republican ballots. George Rappole, who was defeated for the Republican nomination for supervisor by George Fuller, is also the Prohibition nominee, it is stated, and will be in the race for supervisor at the general election.

Victor C. Lewis and Myron Foster, Republican and Democratic nominees for mayor, had no opposition, but their supporters evidenced their support by according both men good votes yesterday.

NEW BOOKS AT LIBRARY; "LARGER CITIZENSHIP" COMPRISE THE THEMES

Miss Forsyth, librarian, announces to the public an interesting addition to the stock of books at the public library. A set of 12 books, treating on politics, various forms of government, woman suffrage, etc., has just been received from the publishers. The books were issued by the Civics Society of Chicago. The editor is Shailer Mathews, D. D., Dean Divinity School, University of Chicago, President Western Economic Society.

The series is made up of an outline on politics which leads up to the subject of Volume 12, viz., "The Larger Citizenship." The title of the first three books is "Political Science." The next two volumes treat on practical politics, then in order, "Woman Suffrage," "Woman and The Law," "The Woman Citizen and the Home," and "The Larger Citizenship."

The publishers announce the series as "a systematic course of reading in preparation for The Greater Citizenship."

RIVER PIRATE ARRESTED; WORKED WITH GANG WHO LOOTED SUMMER HOMES

Following a chase from the Canadian border of fifteen days, during which period several clues were run to earth without result, Deputy Sheriff Williams of Jefferson county, assisted by the active co-operation of the Fulton police, succeeded today in effecting the arrest of John Foley, alias John Kline, who is suspected of active participation in the looting of cottages on the St. Lawrence river of thousands of dollars worth of valuables during the past summer. Deputy Sheriff Williams arrested Foley in Sterling Centre, where the man was trying to secure employment as a farm hand.

The capture of Foley is the first step in an active campaign against the river pirates who have infested the St. Lawrence in the vicinity of Clayton and Thousand Islands this year. Almost every week some cottager returned after an absence to find his home looted of every article of value, and although the robberies were reported at once to the police, their efforts to find some trace of the thieves were in vain, until a month ago when officials in Jefferson county learned that a well organized gang of river pirates had a camp on the St. Lawrence near Brockville, Canada. The pirates, it is reported, accomplished some of their [illegible] in broad daylight and [illegible] [illegible] to ascertain the [illegible] of the gang were aided materially about two weeks ago when Foley, while intoxicated in Brockville, dropped a remark which reached the ears of the Jefferson county police. In some manner the gang learned that their whereabouts were known and some of them left the vicinity. Foley dropped a card upon which was written his mailing address here, and Deputy Sheriff Williams was dispatched to arrest him.

Foley was brought to this city from Sterling Centre this morning and Chief Dyer recognised him as a former resident who had been engaged in several questionable operations on the river here some years ago, and had served six months in jail for dynamiting the streams for fish. Foley pretended he did not remember the police officer and affected an appearance of innocence until he was questioned by the police. He refused absolutely to say anything concerning himself, and told the officers he would wait until represented by counsel.

Williams says Foley served a term in Auburn prison in 1903 under the name of John Kline, and he has been under suspicion for some time in Jefferson county for illegal fishing.

At noon today Williams wired the police in Watertown that Foley had been corraled, and according to the plans of the Watertown police the receipt of this message was a signal for the officers there to raid the pirates' camp, which is pitched only a short distance from the Canadian border. The police have kept close watch on the place, however, and expect to have all the principal members of the gang in jail before night.

Flanders Trembled When Great Guns of Allies Tore German Lines to Pieces

London.—Describing the part of the British in the great two-day battle over a five hundred mile front, Philip Gibbs telegraphs from British headquarters to the Daily Chronicle that just after midnight on Friday a general bombardment began.

"All the batteries from the Yser to the Somme," he says, "seemed to fire together in one great salvo, shaking the whole of Flanders. It was the gigantic overture to the great battle in which Lord Kitchener's new army, fighting shoulder to shoulder with the war worn veterans, wrought prodigies of valor and swept away with desperate courage the terrible resistance of the enemy so that Sir John French was enabled to write at the close of the first day's awful fighting:—'We have captured the enemy's trenches on a front five miles south of the La Bassee Canal.'

"East of Vermelles, south of La Bassee Canal and in the plain of Lens our men were out of the trenches before daylight and, at deadly grips with the enemy, advanced steadily over ground which was no longer barred to them impregnably by the enemy's trenches.

"Those trenches have been smashed and crumpled by artillery fire. Only in dugouts were the enemy still living, dazed by the intensity of the bombardment and stupefied into inevitable surrender.

"Mr. Gibbs, reiterating General French's statement that north of the canal the enemy's reserve has checked the British advance, adds:—

"Near Hodge, where there was a separate attack north and south of the Menin road, catching the enemy by surprise, the British gained more ground. The Germans were trapped on three sides and forced to surrender in great batches. This fighting occurred during a heavy rainstorm which made the trenches and fields boggy, the British digging themselves into the ground gained, which was clogged with mud, soddened with water and reddened with German blood.

In a dispatch dated Monday Mr. Gibbs says:

"The great battle is continuing along the whole front, where the British are advancing, intensely concentrated, along a line between La Bassee and Lens, with the French on the right working upwards from the captured town of Souchez.

"Nearby was Hill No. 70, round which a deadly struggle was in progress between large bodies of British who had fought their way through Loos and were now confronted by the enemy's reserves, firing up after surprise attack on Saturday.

"Across the lower spur of Notre Dame de Lorette there was Stores Crowded; Style Week Show Excels Records

Music and Flowers Everywhere to Charm Throngs of People Who Feasted Their Eyes Upon Models, Living and Otherwise, In Handsome Fall Creations.

Dame Fashion was accorded a hearty welcome by her many devotees last night at the first fashion show ever held in this city, and until a late hour the various mercantile establishments which had made special arrangements for the event were thronged with people inspecting the latest modes in fall and winter wearing apparel. While nearly every store in the shopping section was decorated for the occasion, the efforts made by several progressive merchants to attract the interest of their patrons deserve special mention.

The W. H. Patterson store featured a fashion promenade with living models, who displayed the latest creations before the admiring eyes of a large throng of interested persons. A promenade was reserved for the models and an orchestra furnished music.

At J. C. O'Brien's fall fashions were shown to advantage in the cloak and suit department, which were prettily decorated for the occasion. On the counters were displayed the new fall fabrics and draperies, and here also, an orchestra played during the evening.

At the New York shop, William MacNamara's and the M. Katz Co. special features for the entertainment of the patrons were in evidence and beautiful decorations, with flowers in abundance, graced the interiors and the windows of their establishments.

The men folk were not overlooked and at Lipsky's, the McKinstry store, Setz & McCormick's, Rosenbloom's and Amdursky's stores special offerings in fall and winter wearing apparel were accorded the attention of hundreds of men.

The first evening of the fashion show was a decided success, and it is very probable that the event will be held semi-annually. The stores will not open in the evening again until Saturday, but most of the merchants will provide special features for their patrons during the balance of the week.

SALOONKEEPER WILBUR ACCUSED OF MAKING SALE TO INTOXICATED MAN

Charles Wilbur, proprietor of the Hub cafe at the corner of South First and Wall sts., was arrested this morning, charged with a violation of the liquor tax law, in selling liquor to an intoxicated man. Wilbur may also be charged with another violation of the city law, which forbids any saloonkeeper to sell liquor to a man whose name appears on the city black list.

In compliance with a request of the Police Department and relatives of the man who gave the information against Wilbur, his name is withheld from publication for the present. Chief Dyer stated this morning, however, that this man has been arrested several times recently and has had steadfastly refused to tell where he purchased intoxicating liquor. Arrested again Monday, the man confessed that Wilbur sold him drinks, and added that he was intoxicated at the time. Wilbur's arrest followed.

In City Court this morning Wilbur asked for an adjournment in order that he might procure counsel, which will probably be furnished, as it is in the majority of excise cases, by a brewing company. He was released on his own recognizance until October 9, when he will be given an examination.

Not long ago James Decker, proprietor of the saloon in the Waldhorn block, was arrested on a similar charge, and is now awaiting trial before the Grand Jury.

Chief Dyer has instituted a vigorous campaign against Sunday selling and excise violations and Wilbur is the second saloonkeeper to be arrested in the past week.

OUT OF HIS LINE.

Uncle Sam will keep in commission his submarines until Henry Ford tests out his one man gasoline propelled undersea craft. Mr. Ford's inspection of the submarine wasn't complete because it wasn't submerged. Keen as the automobile man undoubtedly is, it is doubtful that he was in a few minutes' reflection made junk of the work of naval architects for half a century. Mr. Ford can help a lot on land. He isn't the man to take over underseas war craft. The old adage shoemaker stick to your last, may apply even to the wizard of the auto.—Watertown Standard.

BASIS OF ANOTHER FORTUNE.

It is the general impression that the laws of htis country which prohibit the entailing of property through more than two generations serve to militate against accumulations of landed and other property which would ultimately endanger republican government and institutions. There is, though, no provision of law or constitution which prohibits the holder and possessor of great wealth from providing his grandchildren and his grandnephews with means of adding to family wealth.

It has become known that one of the great American capitalists who carved out his own large fortune has apparently provided for maintaining family wealth without entailing property upon his grandchildren and his grandnephews' children. When parting with one of the latter in a western city a few days ago he handed the child a penny. Before boarding his special car he added a nickel to his gift, enjoining thel ad to lay the foundation of a fortune by placing the coins in a savings bank. That the shrewd financier had an eye to the distant future instead of the present is shown by the fact that he did not advise the grandnephew to utilize his nest egg for immediate profit, by participating in the half billion dollar loan to England and France.—Rochester Chronicle-Democrat.

TEXAS FINDING THE WAY

Another side light on the way the Americans of the west and southwest go after trade has appeared recently, and with little credit, it is to be regretted, to many of us in the east.

In this instance, Texas forges to the front as a state of the Union that will feed herself. It is the story of a lesson carried to nearly 50,000 people in a two-weeks' campaign to make Texas farms feed Texas people. For many years Texas farmers like farmers in other states faced the fact that they could not feed the people of the Empire State of the Southwest, hence the Texas Profitable Farming Campaign was inaugurated with the following words as a slogan: "Every crop may fail one year; one crop may fail every year; but every crop will not fail every year."

The purpose of the campaign was to bring about a closer business relation between all interests of the state; to impress upon the people of Texas the necessity of becoming economically self-sufficient; to abandon the one-crop system—the growing of cotton to the exclusion of other crops; to adopt a practical system of diversified farming.

The campaign determined a few facts which should be forced upon the attention of people in other sections of the country—that Texas has been sending away over $200,000,000 annually to northern and eastern markets for food such as meat, dairy and poultry products, canned fruits and vegetables and feed for live stock—all of which can be produced more abundantly and at less cost at home. Further investigation proved that it requires nearly fifteen bales of cotton at nine cents a pound to purchase one hundred bushels of canned sweet potatoes; and the potatoes can be produced on one acre of Texas ground while it requires from fifteen to twenty acres of land to produce the cotton.

Forty speakers were engaged in the campaign. They were divided into crews and in each crew was a school man who gave practical lectures at the rural schools. More than 1,000 persons took active part, serving on committees and donating energy, time and money to the work. It was a campaign to show the people that if every farmer of Texas would market ten dozen eggs a week, the amount of money received annually from the sale, at twenty cents a dozen, would amount to over $60,000,000—nearly half as much as the whole South asked for in its appeal for Federal aid to finance cotton growers.

The lesson learned in Texas is a lesson to be learned here where it is desired that every farm shall become a factory. It is a lesson that should bring back the fertile acres surrounding Fulton; that will make this city's real opportunity lie in the country.

MERCHANT HIS OWN NEWSMAKER

The editor of a newspaper must content himself with printing, in an informing and entertaining way, the news of things that Providence has permitted to happen in the world since his last issue went to press. Sometimes this means a tremendously interesting newspaper—and now and then a more or less dull one. For the editor does not "make news." He just makes a record of it.

The merchant, however, makes the news of his store. He originates the things that happen there—usually. If he is alive to his opportunities his store becomes, in its way, a real news center. Things happen there which concern, directly and importantly, every reader of this newspaper.

When he decides to readjust his stocks, and for that purpose to sacrifice profits on some broken lines of goods, he has "made news" for all who want such opportunities for economies in buying.

When he secures an especially attractive line of new goods, he has again "made news" for all live and up-to-date people.

Every improvement in his store service is a matter of news interest. The arrival of new stocks is a new event. The advent of a new dress fabric has a news value all its own.

In hundreds of ways a live store is a news-maker.

If, however, the merchant does not publish his store news attractively, fully, interestingly and continuously, he misses the full advantage of his position as a maker of news. If, on a dull day, he does not publish any store news at all, he will break the chain of reader-interest in his store as a place where important things occur.

The dominant merchants in every community are those who make the most of their opportunities as makers and publishers of store news.—Concord (N. H.) Monitor.

MAKING LAND VALUES

THAT which is not desired cannot be said to possess a value.

But that which is desirable and in demand possesses a value according to its desirability—the value being regulated by the demand.

Farm lands vary in values according to their location, their productive qualities and their accessibility to the markets.

The character of crops must be regulated according to the market at hand and every community necessarily directs the character of the product brought to town by the farmers.

There must be a market for the farmer. There must be some place where he can realize on his crops and receive in exchange a fair value in money or in such merchandise as will supply the necessities of those dependent on his efforts—to say nothing of the luxuries that have become practically necessities.

The day has gone by when the farmer and his family raised and produced by home manufacture all the things needed. We have become creatures of conditions entirely new. We must have stylish clothing to take the place of the home-spun worn by our forefathers. We must have pianos and organs, upholstered furniture, chinaware, crockery, tinware, aluminum utensils, self-binding harvesters, threshing machines, together with modern machinery and tools of all kinds. Our wives and daughters must have millinery and all sorts of fol-de-rols which, bless them, they are entitled to have and to wear.

Our day is no longer a period of appreciation of beauty unadorned or a disregard for the good things of life. We need, or we think we need, which is the same thing, a lot of things which cannot be produced on the farm, therefore we incline our motives and our endeavors to obtain such things.

In answer to the demand for such things we have established communities for a general exchange of these things; for the exchange of the farm products for money and for merchandise. Now that we have established a standard of values for everything we figure everything in dollars and cents and if we are dealing with a storekeeper who carries a stock of the things we require and wish to buy and who wishes to buy that which we have to sell, there is no bother about making the deal.

In our community we have storekeepers who have equipped their places of business with everything we need. They have invested their money in merchandise just as the farmers have invested their money and their time in lands and machinery and cattle and in crops.

In this manner there has been created a certain market for a proportion of the crops raised by our farmers. The marketing of the balance of the crops is readily attended to by the mere fact that we have a community, a headquarters for buying and selling; the greater the size of the community, the better facilities.

IF A COMMUNITY IS POOR AND UNPROSPEROUS, THEN THE FARMER CANNOT MARKET HIS CROPS SO PROFITABLY.

The prosperity of a community rests entirely with the people in that community, this, of course, including those who live on the outskirts and who really form a part of the community, because of the fact that they do their marketing there. If they bring their products to the community market and sell them there and then spend their money with the local business men, the community will grow and prosper. Land values will increase and the earnest toilers and workers will become wealthy.

But if either the farmers or the storekeepers fail to do their full share in the way of complying with the business requirements then there will be a lack of success and the community will not grow or prosper. Land values will not increase.

There is a division of responsibility, practically equal. The interests of the storekeepers and of the farmers must come together. Without a due appreciation of these requirements, no community can look for progress.

If the storekeepers do not carry the merchandise ready to meet the requirements of the farmers they realize that they cannot expect to do the business. But the failure is not here.

The great trouble in our community, now, is that the shower of mail order catalogues has descended on the land and the farmers are inclined to believe that no harm can come of diverting their trade from the local storekeepers to the mail order houses in the big cities.

We must keep our money in circulation in our own town. We must protect our local storekeepers. We must create and build up conditions of prosperity right here at home or there will be no increase in land values. In fact, they will decrease if we send our money to the mail order houses.

IF WE DESIRE PROSPERITY, WE MUST HELP TO CREATE IT OURSELVES BY SPENDING OUR MONEY AT HOME.

A Plea for Our Friends the Horses

Every horse that works saves money; it is entitled to reasonable hours of rest and plenty of food. It is entitled to much more, but I mention these essentials because no horse can be deprived of them without showing it and thereby proclaiming its owner the meanest kind of a thief, for the person who pockets the earnings of a horse and overworks or underfeeds it is a far meaner htief than the fellow who lives by picking people's pockets, because he is getting his living by stealing from the helpless. Any one who cares to know how many such thieves we have in town has only to look at the horses; their thin bodies, lame legs and flopping ears do not lie.

There is a large class of people who, having been born and bred in the midst of filth and brutality, are incapable of understanding even the meaning of humanity; to these I do not appeal. There is another class of people belonging, in my opinion, to a still lower order of humanity; those who, notwithstanding advantages of education and refined influences, are as inhuman as the former; to these I do not appeal; but I do entreat every man and woman who is interested in the cause of humanity to lend his or her aid in putting down the outrageous abuse of horses in our town. The aid I ask you to give is very simple: Do not deal with people who drive half-starved or crippled horses. The person who knowingly buys stolen goods is as guilty as the one who steals them and I hold that the person who knowingly employs a man to do his work with a horse that is in unfit condition to do it is as guilty as the brute who drives it. Boycott the people who starve and abuse the faithful horses thatw ork for them.

HOUR OF LABOR'S OPPORTUNITY

Eight Hour Day For All Is Within the Workers' Grasp.

DEPENDS ON UNITED EFFORT

On Trade Unionists Rests the Responsibility For the Extension of Organization Among All Who Work—Quick Action Is Needed to Seize the Opportunity at Its Best.

A most momentous alternative is presented to the workers of our country. As a result of war conditions some industries have now immense contracts secured on most highly favorable terms. Other nations' needs have given work to men and women who have lived through a year in which unemployment has been greater than usual.

Whether or not this opportunity comes to the industries of our country through perfidy or greed of other nations does not alter conditions that confront us in this country. The problem of America's workers is whether the employer shall use them as a means to secure greater profits from the present necessity of other nations or whether this terrible world calamity shall be used to promote the welfare of at least a few of the world's workers.

Many workers have already decided that they will see to it that humanity shares whatever opportunity shall come out of the terrible war. Already there has been raised the slogan of the eight hour workday for all workers, and that demand has been and is being made more effective.

This spirit of enlightened self interest and industrial statesmanship among these workers is infectious—the slogan "eight hours" has been echoed by others. The workers have it in their power to make that slogan an irresistible force. Employers feel the impulse that sends its throb of hope and inspiration out among all the toilers; many feel and grant in advance demands they realize will be made, and justly made. Even the United States steel trust has increased wages. It granted them in advance because it did not want the workers to know the feeling and the experience that become part of the characters of workers who make demands for justice and secure them through their own organized power.

This is the time for a campaign for organization—a campaign that shall enable the workers to become responsible, resourceful participants in America's industries. It is an opportunity to develop individual independence, resourcefulness and understanding that constitute the virility of the nation.

The organized workers who know and value the power of organization must feel the heavy personal responsibility for doing a part in this organizing campaign.

Organization is not only necessary for taking advantage of present opportunities, but to protect the workers in the convulsive period of readjustment that will follow the war. Either the forces of greed and cruelty will use the workers or the workers will use organization to make the forces of greed and cruelty serve human welfare.—Samuel Gompers.

Organizing Baldwin Workers.

Business agents of the metal trades council are organizing machinists and metal workers employed at the Baldwin Locomotive works, Philadelphia. The agitaton of the union for an eight hour day and a minimum wage of $4 a day will center at the locomotive plant, according to the organizers. Only a small percentage of the workmen there are union men. About 7,000 men are employed in the Philadelphia plant, according to the union leaders, with about the same number at Eddystone, Pa. Of these, about 8,000 are machinists, while practically all come under the branches in the Metal Trades council.

CORNERED HIMSELF.

There Was Only One Way Out, and He Just Had to Take It.

William F. Cody one day engaged in a spirited talkfest with a white haired, gray bearded trapper, who was by way of being the greatest and most unsuccessful liar in the locality.

"Sho, Cody, that there b'ar story o' yours ain't puppy high to a little seance I had with a ol' she grizzly back some twenty years ago. I come on that pizen critter at th' mouth of a canyon. Bing! I plops a shot f'om my ol' muzzle loader into her, but she don't even tarry. On she comes 'thout givin' me nary chanst t' load. I th'ows th' gun at her, hits her on th' snoot an' takes out up th' canyon with th' old gal, plum' mad, pitty pattin' after me.

"We runs fer 'bout a mile, she paddin' along behind an' gainin' a bit. Them canyon walls kep' gettin' higher an' smoother an' narrower 'ntil they was about a thousan' feet up, an' I c'd most touch each side. I couldn't a-clim' 'em if I'd tried, an' that she varmint wasn't givin' me no chanst. All of a suddint th' path got still narrerer till me an' the b'ar had to most squeeze through, an' then I come slap into a straight up wall in front o' me. There I was, slick as glass walls on three sides and th' mad b'ar pitty pattin' ten feet in 'm' rear. Couldn't go ahead, turn round ner go straight up."

The trapper paused, enjoying the deep silence of the crowd.

"Yes, but what did your bear do?" asked Cody.

The old man's face began to take on the purplish hue of pent emotion. His features strained and twitched as his brain sought a way out of his own mendacious cul-de-sac. Looking helplessly around and meeting no friendly glance from the audience, he finally blurted out:

"By gum, she killed me!"—Samuel J. Lewis in Harper's.

Quirk Theatre—All Next Week, Billy Allen Musical Opera Company. A Bunch of Billy Allen Choristers.

BILLY ALLEN ONLY ORGANIZATION OF ITS KIND

The Billy Allen Musical Comedy Company has the distinction of being the only organization of its kind on the road today. In the old days of the Wilbur Opera Company and the Bostonians, there was a demand for entertainment of a light operatic character which may be said to correspond in some respects with the field occupied today by the Bily Allen Company; but at the present time there is no other company giving the tsyle of entertainment on the scale provided by Billy Allen and his company of thirty-five talented performers. Another reason for the continued success of the Billy Allen Company is that Mr. Allen does not allow his performance to become hackneyed. He is continually providing nevelties for his shows, and while he adheres to the policy of presenting only recognized successes, even these are subjected to a careful reconstruction to permit the introduction of up-to-the-minute ideas. Every one of Billy Allen's performances is filled with good and wholesome comedy, good music, bright settings, rich costumes, pretty girls and catchy songs that you whistle or hum on the way home. And it may be remarked that it is a tremendous undertaking to equip, stage and produce the many musical plays used, for an entirely different amount of scenery must be built, set and painted, six times the usual number of expensive costumes provided, and the performers must be taught and drilled in six times the usual number of songs, dances and comedy scenes and dialogue. And in the presentation of such plays as Billy Allen provides for his company, royalties must be paid to the authors amounting to several times the cost of a single production. This is a big item of expense for such bills as The Time, the Place and The Girl, The Dingbat Family, A Hot Old Time, Keep Moving, King Dido, and A Night at the Wintergarden. And in presenting this class of attraction expensive people are required, for they must not only be capable, but they must be versatile. Billy Allen himself is the central figure of each cast, and he is careful to surround himself with singers, dancers and comedians of recognized ability, including a big chorus of very pretty and graceful girls. Taken altogether, the Billy Allen Musical Comedy Company is a remarkable organization coming, as it does, in the class of a popularp rice attraction.

Valuable Medical Advice.

An anxious inquirer writes to the medical department of a New York paper, "Would you kindly tell me if there is any cure for a bunion?"

To which the medical journalist replies:

"You will get help from (1) walking pigeon toed; (2) wearing sandals."

The doctor does not mention it, but a bad case of pigeon toes can be cured by walking bow legged. The remedy for chronic bowlegs is to walk knock-kneed. Should knockknees bring on pigeon toes again one can, of course, always escape back to bunions.

LABOR PAYS HEAVY COST FOR SICKNESS

Ill Health More Prevalent Among Poorly Paid Wage Earners.

THE average wage earner in the United States loses nine days every year on account of sickness, much of which is preventable.

The total annual loss in wages and expenses for medical attention is $750,000,000.

These figures are the results of study in a new field of industrial economics made by the public health service for the federal commission on industrial relations. Every city and every town has its health department that operates principally to prevent contagious and infectious diseases and to lower the death rate.

This latest scientific investigation aims to get at the relation of good health to work and the purely practical benefits resulting from a man being able to be on his job every day in good physical condition. It means not only more wages and less expense to him, but it has an important effect upon his productive capacity for the benefit of his employer.

The greater part of the heavy tax of ill health falls upon those workers who are least able to afford it. Dr. B. S. Warren, who made investigation of records of nearly a million workers, found sickness much more prevalent among low paid workers than among those whose incomes are sufficient to provide sanitary housing, adequate food and pleasant surroundings in the home and the shop.

It is not merely loss of wages and direct expense of medical attendance that must be taken into consideration from an economic standpoint. Impairment of the worker's efficiency and the burdens cast upon his family by sickness cannot be computed in dollars and cents.

From the many statistics interesting deductions are drawn concerning industrial conditions. One conclusion is that fully one-half of the wage earners in this country do not receive incomes sufficient to maintain healthful conditions of living.

Experience in treatment of diseases and the study of economic conditions of sick persons agree that poverty and sickness go hand in hand, the report says, and it is among those low paid workers and their families that the highest mortality rate is found to prevail.

Sickness has been found to be one of the principal causes of unemployment and a large factor in recruiting the army of destitute and dependent persons.

The cost to industries of the country resulting from ill health of employees cannot be estimated, the report asserts, nor is it possible to indicate the tremendous cost to the nation.

CONTROL OF STREET TREES

Municipal Oversight Imperative Is Conclusion Arrived At by Student of the Subject.

After many years' study of the street-tree problem, digesting reports from the principal cities in this country, viewing such work done in California, one can form but one opinion as to how the work may be properly instituted and prosecuted. No satisfactory permanent improvement in street planting may be done except under direct and strict municipal control.

But very few property owners are competent to choose the right tree for a specific street, and not one such may live in your block or in your street. It is all a question of fitness, of which its natural ability to thrive under the hard conditions prevailing in city streets is by far the most important point. Then comes longevity, for a tree should stand for centuries.

Even after the right tree is planted it must have intelligent care bestowed, and all trees on one street should be watered and pruned alike, set at the same distance apart and given the same general care, the latter consisting of numberless little things that make an important factor as a whole. Even the control of insect and other pests becomes a serious matter early in the life of any tree. Individual property owners are possessed of too great a variety of tastes, interests, ideas of responsibility and degrees of hanging on to the purse strings even to make unorganized effort more than a failure or even organized effort much of a success.—Los Angeles Times.

PAYS TO SAVE THE TREES

They Add to Attractiveness and Comfort of Home, Is Declaration of Writer.

It is a rare case when we cannot give the following admonition, says a writer in the Minneapolis Journal. Save all the trees possible on your land. If a tree insists on standing in the way when you are building a road, let your road take a way around. Even a tree left standing at the side of a road or in the sidewalk may add picturesqueness to the land, which in itself is an attraction to buyers.

If the land bordering the road in a residential tract is thickly wooded, trees may not be needed in the planting strip. Indeed, leaving all planting out of the street tends materially to widening its appearance. It is unusually, however, a good idea to plan for street trees. Their presence makes for coolness and comfort and the general attractiveness of the region.

Forty feet apart is the best distance for street trees and a safe one to follow. Planting at closer distance gives the trees scant room for mature development. It is also more expensive for the real estate man. Trees may be planted opposite each other, if the distance between trees on opposite sides of the street is forty feet. Should the distance be less, the trees had best be "staggered"—that is, placed alternately.

Small Town's Beauty.

Austin, Minn., with a population of about 8,500, has the usual activities of a little western town. Five divisions of the C., M. & St. P. railroad center there for repair shop facilities. It has a large packing house, its own electric light and water works, worth $300,000; a good-sized cement plant, brick and tile works, etc. But this prosperous community is especially notable for its "city beautiful" idea. Not content with its parks of forty-five, fifteen and five acres, it has established a floral decorative scheme. The well-paved streets are arranged on a floral plan. The wide parkings of one street are beautiful at one season with a profusion of the wild crab tree's bloom; another presents a ribbon of color from geraniums; another street presents a line of catalpas, snowy with blossoms, and so on. The workmen at the shops and railroad station at their own expense annually employ a landscape gardener, and the bare, dusty patches of waste ground thereabouts have been transformed.

AVIATOR INJURED AT TRENTON FAIR

Trenton, N. J., Sept. 29.—"Art" Smith, a famous aviator, noted for his thrilling exhibitions of "looping the loop," almost lost his life yesterday at the Trenton, N. J., Tri-State Fair through waiving a salute to his wife.

Smith got in his machine to make his usual flight.

Just as the machine was about to rise, Smith noticed his wife watching him anxiously near the grandstand. Impulsively he took one hand off the machine's control and waved to her goodbye.

In an instant the machine swerved from his grasp, and at full speed he crashed into the grandstand.

His wife was among the first to reach him. She found Smith cut and bruised on the head, arms and body and, it was feared, internally injured. The machine was destroyed.

To add to the excitement, the Speed Building took fire from a spark, it is believed, from the fireworks display, with a loss of $10,000.

BROKEN MAIN TROUBLESOME

Hundreds of gallons of water have been leaking through a large break in the water main at the north end of South First st., close to the city line, since Monday night. Half a dozen workmen from the Department of Public Works are digging toward the city's pipe line to shut off the flow of water through the broken main.

The pipe which burst is a 3-4 inch conduit which carries the water supply from the large eight-inch pipe to the home of Clinton Ferris at 701 South First st., the last house in the street.

The break occurred halfway between the house and the intersection of the two pipes and to stop the flow of water through the smaller main the men will have to dig to the joint connecting the two pipes at which point the tap is set.

Considerable trouble has been given the water department by breaks of the smaller pipes which supply the houses in that neighborhood, the water in the main supply pipe carrying an estimated pressure of 90 pounds. This is considered a tremendous pressure for the small 3-4 inch pipes to withstand. To repair the damage in this case the street car tracks will have to be tunneled under and considerable excavating done. No damage has been done by the escaping water.

CURIOSITY OF BOY LED TO INJURED HEAD

"Teddy," unseen by his father, stooped over to get a better view of the proceedings and was struck on the forehead by the blunt end of the ax. A severe cut was made half an ich long which bled freely.

ADMIRATION FOR STREET IMPROVEMENT WORK

Only a few finishing touches are required to complete the pavement at the intersection of First and Oneida sts. The change in the appearance of the street receives much admiration. At the time the work was started there was considerable wrangling in regard to making the job complete by doing away with several unsightly structures and purchasing the ground on which they stand. This would have straightened out First st. and improved the corner considerably.

Jews Differ on Observance of Their Dietary Laws

Rochester.—The Jewish dietary laws, which are of great antiquity, being older than the Bible itself, are a subject of some discussion among Jews of Rochester. An effort is being made to develop sentiment in favor of the establishment of a new synagogue in which orthodox services will be conducted in English. A desire is expressed to make it a medium between the orthodox synagagues, and the reformed congregation of Temple Berith Kodesh, in Gibbs st. One of the chief differences between the reformed and orthodox Jews relates to adherence to the ancient dietary laws. That question is a factor dium between the orthodox synagog-

The ninth chapter of the Book of Genesis permits the use of animal food by Jews provided that it be free from blood, but various injunctions as to diet are to be found in all parts of the Old Testament. Few people are familiar with the injunctions and their purpose.

How Dietary Laws Arose.

The ancient Israelites lived chiefly on vegetable food and fruit, on which the Bible puts no restrictions. As animal food was added in the Jewish diet, the ancient lawgivers, evidently to protect the health of their people, promulgated certain rules as to diet. These rules aimed to prevent the use of unclean animals as food. The eggs of unclean birds, the roe of unclean fishes, the fat of the meat of animals that died naturally or were improperly butchered were forbidden. And a stringent ban, which still is universally observed, was put on blood, which is considered the life of the animal. By a strange contradiction, however, the blood of fishes was permitted. Owing, it is said, to the account saying that in his struggle with the angel Jacob became lame, the sinews of the hind legs are forbidden.

Strict rules are observed in Rochester in slaughtering cattle, sheep and poultry. The animal must be in the best of health. To be "kosher" it must be slaughtered by a specially trained "schochet" according to a ritual intended to make death as easy as possible. After thec arcass has been dismembered a careful examination is made of thel ungs, tongue and the heart. If by any chance there should be a defect, the entire carcass is declared "trefah," and is sold to Gentiles. This is done daily by orthodox Jewish butchers. The purpose is to make the meat used by Jews the cleanest possible.

Rejection of Hind Quarters.

"The "schochet" puts the date of killing on the "kosher" carcasses, as they may be eaten not later than six days after slaughter, provided they have been washed with clean water the third day. The hind quarters are always sold as "trefah," owing to the difficulty of removing the blood vessels, against which there is an injunction.

In the home the meat is subjected to a series of operations designed to eliminate the last drop of blood. It is first soaked in fresh water for a half hour, then drained and thoroughly sprinkled with salt and allowed to stand for an hour. Afterward the salt is washed off and the meat, absolutely drained of blood, is cooked.

All professed Jews obey the dietary laws more or less, the degree of strictness varying with the individual's orthodoxy. The most rigid adherence to the law is found among the Russian and Hungarian Jews, many of whom, reared in strict orthodoxy, would rather starve than permit a particle of "trefah" to pass their lips. But this class is much in the minority. Most Jews are now said to content themselves with observing the dietary laws at home, outside of it many eat whatever their Gentile neighbors do. Owing to ignorance, the very interesting anomaly of preparing "trefah" meat according to the "kosher" ritual has grown up among perfectly sincere women, who ibagine that thus they keep within the law. It may be said their food is absolutely "trefah."

friendsetaoinetashardanothoahoatdop

Another interesting injunction is the one against the use of vessels in which flesh has been prepared for the cooking of a preparation containing milk as an ingredient. Consequently every Jewish housewife keeps two complete sets of utensils, one "milching," for diary products, the other "fleischig," for meat products.

By Jews the hygienic superiority of "kosher" meat has been long and vigorously preached. It is undoubtedly true that the dietary laws were a great step in advance of the prevailing practice at the time they were formulated, and, indeed, of all practice up to a very few years ago. Not until a very few years ago was meat properly inspected, and even today in some cities there is no inspection for disease. Wherever an adequate system of meat inspection is in force the dietary laws are said to be rendered unnecessary.

Eating Flesh and Fish.

The prohibition against the mixing of milk and meat was probably an effort to prevent the mixing of what appeared to be incompatible. No adequate medical reason for it has yet been advanced. The same is true of the ban on eating fish and flesh without rinsing one's mouth between the two dishes.

Reformed Judiaism claims that the dietary law affects differently the social position of the modern Jews living in a world which is no longer idolatrous or hostile as in former days. On the contrary, the laws tend to keep the Jews from associating with his fellow citizens. Whether justified or not, a majority of Western European Jews and those in the United States have broken away from the dietary laws.

Rochester Jews are considering whether this condition should be recognized in the movement for a new synagogue. Many attending orthodox synagoguges hear rabbis urge a rigid adherence to the dietary laws, but argue that it is a physical impossibility to carry out their teachings.

BILLIARD ROOMS NOT CLOSED BY THE LAW

Rochester.—John F. Kinney, attorney for Charles H. Briggs, of No. 2 Alexander st., who will be tried today in police court on the charge of having permitted billiards and pool to be played on Sunday in the room over 194 Main st., east, holds that the penal law affecting Sunday amusements does not apply to amusements indoors. In a statement he made yesterday he cites a decision of the Appellate Division and comment on it by Justice Cuthbert W. Pound. There is no moral question involved in the Briggs case, he declares.

HOPES TO STOP TARIFF TINKERING

Rochester.—W. B. Marsh, of New York, field secretary of the Tariff Commission League for the Eastern territory, was in Rochester yesterday and talked with several prominent men, including officers of the Chamber of Commerce, regarding the plan by which the league hopes to stop tariff tinkering.

"People recognize that the present system is insufficient," said Mr. aMrsh. "In thirty years there have been five revisions of the tariff and two attempts at revision, and the result has been that nobody is satisfied, business is periodically upset, there are hundreds of millions of dollars lost and millions of workers are distressed.

"Moreover, we are going to have to face conditions at the close of the war that will be staggering. For instance, European countries will export tons and tons of goods and dump them upon the markets here. It is time that we decided whether we want these goods sent here or whether we want some barrier erected to bar them."

FOUNDERS' DAY NEXT WEEK AT THE NORMAL

Oswego.—When the seven hundred odd students of the State Normal and Training school wend their way in solemn procession to the house situated in the clump of trees at the foot of Sheldon avenue in the rear of the school, Monday next, the event will be in connection with the most important observance of the school year at the Normal. Founders' Day.

A program formulated by Miss Caroline L. G. Scales, and other members of the faculty will not only appeal to the students but also to the general public desire.

The house was the home of the late Dr. Edward Austin Sheldon, the recognized founder of the school, and as a tribute to his memory a wreath of flowers will be placed on the door of his late residence. The wreath will be the work of students in the training school and will be of appropriate and attractive design.

Oswego.—Yesterday morning Justice Devendorf granted a number of divorces which had been on trial in Special Term on Monday. Following is the list:

Ernest DeMott, of Fulton, vs. Lena DeMott.

Ella E. Card, of Oswego, vs. David S. Card.

Hannah Chubb. Phoenix, vs. Wallace J. Chubb.

Herbert J. Bostler. Central Square, vs. Julia E. Bolster.

All of these cases were undefended and in most cases the defendants had disappeared. One of the few cases in which a defense will be interposed is scheduled for today, the action of James M. Riley against Mary Riley. F. D. Culkin appears for the plaintiff and J. R. Pidgeon for the defendant.

In No. 12 the action of Mary J. Haresign vs Anna Raybareyzk for breach of contract; briefs are to be submitted. L. A. Coulter, clerk of the court, and recently admitted to the bar, argued the case for the plaintiff.

The action of Arthur J. Thompson vs. the New York Central, No. 1 on the calendar, for an injunction and damages for water flowing across his property in Fulton, was scheduled for trial, but at the last moment Mr. Thompson decided to get a new lawyer. The result was the case went over the term and the plaintiff was taxed costs of $58.

This afternoon a decree of divorce was granted in the case of Anna Pullen vs. Levi Pullen and evidence was taken in the case of W. F. Morton vs. Ellen F. Morton. The latter case can not be completed until the arrival of a commission from Wisconsin.

WENDELLS SOLD $2,000 WORTH OF DIAMONDS

Oswego.—One of the greatest auction sales ever conducted in this city occurred here yesterday, when the Jules Wendell jewelry store placed on sale a large stock of diamonds. From early morning until the closing hour the store was packed with people who came to look, but when they realized what was going on they began buying; and they kept up their work until the aggregate sales amounted to $2,000.

SYNOPSIS

Old Cyrus Martin, the head of the American soap trust, makes a bet of $30,000 with a friend, John Clark, a rival soapmaker, that his (Martin's) son Rodney would be making more money at the end of a year than Clark's son Ellery.

Martin takes his pretty secretary, Mary Grayson, into his confidence and enlists her co-operation. Rodney has been a spendthrift, and the father wants to make him reform and go to work.

Mary meets Rodney, and the son proposes marriage to her. Rodney tells his father about his proposal, and the old man pretends great anger. He tells Mary he will disinherit Rodney.

Rodney defies his father, and Mary is deeply touched at the lad's genuine affection for her. Mary makes a financial bargain with Martin to encourage the son to go to work.

Ambrose Peale, press agent, meets Rodney and agrees to go into business with the lad on a salary basis. Rodney has resolved to go into the soap industry and buck the trust.

Rodney, Peale, and Mary go into the soap trade together. Rodney then endeavors to borrow $10,000 as capital for his newly formed company.

The offices of the "13 Soap company" are opened, and they advertise it as "the most expensive soap in the world." Peale talks advertising continually.

The 13 Soap company finds its expenses very heavy, and financial rocks loom ahead. Their chief business seems to have been to spend money for advertising under Peale's directions.

An alleged countess, who has appeared on the scene, desires to purchase the French rights for the sale of "13 Soap" and produces a draft for $20,000, which she desires to have cashed.

The "countess" is shown to be an impostor and despair settles over the 13 Soap company. The firm introduces her, however, to Ellery Clark. Father Martin visits the offices.

Martin, fearing rumors that the new company would injure his business and might break the trust, offers to buy out the firm for $100,000 and give Rodney, Peale and Mary good positions. Then he learns that the company is "dead broke."

Suddenly out of a clear sky comes an order for 50,000 cakes of 13 Soap from the great firm of Brown & James of Chicago. "The tide has turned," the trio now declare.

The 13 Soap company having no factory cannot deliver. The trio endeavor to buy the cakes from branch offices of the Martin trust. They fail to get the necessary number, but send 5,000 cakes.

Mary, in despair, calls on old Martin. Rodney also appears. There they both learn that the father caused the sending of the telegram from Brown & James. Naturally they are amazed and mortified.

"Are you a business woman?" she asked after a little pause.

Mary was good natured and a good mixer, and, seeing that the woman suffered only from human curiosity, she answered, "Yes," adding just for fun:

"I'm a vice president and a secretary. Our company has offices on Broadway."

The woman looked quite impressed.

"What line are you folks in?" she pursued.

"Soap," said Mary.

"Married?" asked the woman.

"Not yet," said Mary.

"Well, you'll get a husband if you want one," said the woman, with a crisp laugh. "A pretty girl like you usually gets what's coming to her."

"I'm engaged," said Mary, amused.

"You see?" said the woman. "Now, I'm a bachelor maid, as they call them nowadays, myself. Most of my girl friends have too much trouble with their husbands. None of your married life for mine. No, sir. No matter how swell a little home I might have, it wouldn't appeal to me! When are you going to be married?" the woman inquired.

"Oh, I don't know," said Mary. "I suppose we'll go down to the city hall some day and have it over with."

"You'd like a nice wedding, though, wouldn't you," the woman continued sympathetically, "with white satin and a wedding veil and all? I know one girl who's never got over it because she was married in a brown dress."

The woman with the dyed hair rushed off presently, shrieking, "Oh, there's Mayme," and Mary was left alone again. The local that she waited for came along, and she got aboard at her leisure.

Mary alighted at Seventy-second street, keeping her courage at the striking point, and pressed the bell button on Mr. Cyrus Martin's front door. Johnson, looking surprised, but pleased to see her, let her in and showed her into the little reception room downstairs to wait while he took her name up to Mr. Martin.

CHAPTER XV.

Soapsuds.

"MR. MARTIN will see you, Miss Grayson," said Johnson, coming back, and she followed him upstairs with beating heart.

If there is any time in the day when a retired business man should be allowed to enjoy himself in his own mature and self chosen way, it is the hour between 5 and 6. This hour "between the dark and the daylight" was not the children's hour in Mr. Martin's house, for good and sufficient reasons, his only son having been cast off and there being no "grands" yet any way. Neither was it a 5 o'clock tea hour, for Mr. Martin never had tea any more since Mary Grayson had gone. He had had Johnson bring it in for her once in awhile in the old days, to feed her up, but not now. His new secretary was a goose, and he packed her off, and now he found some letters to open with his own hands today, which seemed to annoy him. Disgruntlement still swayed his paternal heart when he thought of Rodney. He was torn between love and irritation where that boy was concerned.

He turned to the papers for consolation and held one sheet up to scrutinize the headlines. As he did so he displayed to the empty room a full page advertisement of 13 Soap—the hand of Ambrose, in fact—which by some occult influence presently impelled him to turn the paper over and glance at the last page next. The blatant sprawling ad. caused him a pang of regret and disgust, and he flung it down. He took up another paper and had the same experience, then turned angrily to some letters, only to be rewarded by the sight of 13 Soap circulars fluttering to the floor when he opened the envelope—the hand of Ambrose again, in fact. Another "letter" and another—they had got a beastly way now of addressing them in refined female hands, on good stationery, so you'd think they were invitations—followed the first into the waste paper basket.

It was a relief when Johnson presently appeared and announced a caller, though a great surprise to hear the caller's name. Mary Grayson! Now, what was this sly puss after? he speculated as he bade Johnson show her in. Come to get her old job back, he supposed. Well, she could have it at her old salary. He said this last aloud to her as she came into the room looking very sweet, he must admit. The serious expression she wore was not at all unbecoming to her pretty face.

The room looked just as it used to do, and the recollection took Mary back again in spite of her engrossing errand. The diamond pendulum was still swinging on the mantelpiece. Mr. Martin himself wound all the clocks in the house every Sunday morning at exactly half past 9, when the hands did not interfere with the keyholes.

"But I don't want it," said Mary in response to his ungracious proposition.

"Oh, then, Rodney has sent you to plead for him," suggested Mr. Martin.

"No, sir," said Mary. "He doesn't know I'm here."

"Then what are you here for?" he demanded, really curious.

"To make you a business proposition," said Mary stoutly.

"Why doesn't Rodney make it himself?" asked his father.

"He doesn't know what it is," explained Mary.

"That's something in his favor," Martin conceded. "I can't see much use in women tying up in men's business. Somehow I love the scallawag, and; —— it, I miss him around here!"

He looked at Mary curiously as he said this, wondering how she and Rodney were getting along these days and what her errand really was, though he didn't propose to give away his interest in it. She had betrayed the true nature of things to him once. What was she going to do now?

His reflections and Mary's business were interrupted, however, by Johnson's entering a second time and announcing the last two people in the world that Mary had counted on, namely, Mr. Rodney Martin and Mr. Ambrose Peale.

"Oh, the whole firm, eh?" said Mr. Martin, eyeing Mary sharply.

Mary started guiltily. For a moment she feared that Rodney might hark back to that $5,000 check his father had given her and grow jealous again. She couldn't pretend to be pleased to see him, despite her sentimental reflections just now downstairs. She had wanted to handle this interview in her own way. She felt as if she could have done it right, convincingly, just as a hunter feels within himself that he can clear the hurdle that looms ahead. Now, here were Rodney and Ambrose to interfere with her, and Ambrose of course would interrupt and switch her off and perhaps irritate the old gentleman with his advertising talk. He couldn't help it. Ambrose would pop out of his jack in the box instanter if you sprang the subject of soap and advertising.

Old Mr. Martin surveyed all three of them grimly just long enough to let embarrassment set in on all their faces. His eyes rested on Mary last of all and longest. A fairly perceptible change crept round his firm old mouth as he did so. He was satisfied the little minx had told him the truth about Rodney's not knowing anything as to her mission here, and indeed, when the boy came in and saw her there, he exclaimed in genuine surprise:

"Why, Mary, what are you doing here?"

Mary thought fast a moment, and evidently decided that the best part of diplomacy this time was the truth.

"I came to tell your father about Brown & James," she said frankly.

Rodney looked relieved.

"That's why we're here too," he said.

"Absolutely," added Peale.

"Well, what is it about Brown & James?" blustered Martin. "Let me tell you right now, I won't back any fake company."

"But we're not a fake any longer," protested Rodney.

"We've actually sold some soap," chimed in Peale.

"Fifty thousand cakes," Mary explained impressively.

"To Brown & James," said Rodney.

"Then why did you send 'em only five thousand cakes?" inquired old Martin bluntly.

Rodney looked astonished, but answered promptly:

"Because after we'd got that much from one of your branch factories you shut off our supply."

"And we couldn't get any more soap anywhere," said Peale plaintively.

"And you knew it very well," Mary said accusingly.

"We've still got 45,000 cakes to deliver if we can get 'em from you," went on Rodney. "Why let all that money get out of the family?" he pleaded. "It's a business proposition."

"No, it isn't," said the father. "Don't fool yourself. I sent that telegram."

"What telegram?" asked Rodney.

"The telegram from Brown & James ordering the 50,000 cakes," grunted old Martin.

Mary plumped down on a chair in dismay.

"You sent it?" she gasped.

Mr. Martin decided to amplify a little.

"That day at the office you were pretty game, son," he said, "and, to tell the truth, I felt so sorry for you I had to do something, so I sent that wire"—

"So that success is all a bluff, too?" sighed Rodney.

"Well," said his father, "I figured an order like that would stall off your creditors, and when I had fixed it with one of our factories to let you have 5,000 cakes at 3 cents a cake I knew it would mean some ready cash for you from Brown & James."

"But how did you square Brown & James?" inquired Peale, still hoping it was his ads.

"Oh, I just wired 'em I'd be responsible," said Mr. Martin. "And say," he added, turning to Rodney, "you had a nerve to charge 'em 60 cents a cake. I had to pay the bill. That shipment cost me $3,000 for $150 worth of soap."

Peale laughed.

"That isn't funny, young man," said Mr. Martin, glaring at him.

"No, it isn't," admitted Rodney. "I thought we'd really made good, and all the time it was you behind us"—

"You see, my boy," said Martin senior, "even if you did nearly trim me, I've got a sort of sneaking fondness for you. Look here, son, why not quit? There's no market for dollar soap."

"But how do you know?" Rodney objected bravely.

"How do I know?" asked his father. "Because I had a letter from Brown & James a few days ago asking me what to do with the soap. They hadn't sold a cake. I told 'em to dump it in the

Woman's World

What Femininity Knows About War Was Told by Noted Woman

DR. ANNA HOWARD SHAW.

When Dr. Anna Howard Shaw was speaking the other day she touched on the subject of the war, and a man in the crowd called out, "What does a woman know about war anyhow?"

"Take the newspaper out of your pocket and hold it up," answered Dr. Shaw. "Five hundred and fifty thousand men already sacrificed to the war! You ask what a woman knows about war—550,000 men dead! No woman can understand the horror of the death of 550,000 men. Nobody understands this. But if you were to tell me that one man lay dead I might be able to understand something of its meaning. I might be able to go back over the years and remember that a woman whose heart throbbed with love and sympathy and hope of coming motherhood walked day by day with her face toward an open grave, with a courage so sublime that no man ever surpassed it.

"And then after her child was born that woman in her young womanhood laid aside what every human being of us has—her ambitions for herself—that she might give her life to the life which she had given. And year after year her child grew until he became a man, and the mother looking into the face of that boy knew herself built into him, her life wrought into his life. Then in an hour that wonderful thing, that beautiful spirit, was called out, and he lay dead. And while that mother is looking into his dead face some one asks, 'What does a woman know about war?'"

Raspberry Sirup.

This is a very refreshing drink and is especially recommended for the invalid, to whom a cooling drink with tart flavor is appetizing. Boil the raspberries and strain, and to one pint of the strained juice add one pound of granulated sugar. Let it stand overnight. In the morning boil it again for about ten minutes and then bottle. When serving put two tablespoonfuls in a glass of cold water.

HOW THE LOVE POTION WORKED

Amusing Result of a Scientific Experiment.

"I tell you, doctor, we have no knowledge of the point where the imagination gives place to the germ or the germ gives place to the imagination."

"And I tell you, doctor, the imagination has nothing to do with it. The germ produces the disease."

"How do you account for the deaths that have occurred in cases where the subject supposes himself to have been poisoned, when he has not been poisoned?"

"I don't believe one has ever been substantiated."

"Do you admit that men and women have gone mad for love?"

"No. They have gone mad while in love. They would have eventually gone mad anyway."

"I will produce love by means of the imagination."

"Nonsense."

Dr. Finch, who made this daring proposition, sat thinking, while his companion, Dr. Hargrave, lighted a fresh cigar. Presently Finch said:

"Your Alice is now about fourteen, I believe. My Dick is fifteen. For my part, a match between them, when older, would be acceptable. How do you feel about it?"

"I should not object."

"Very well. We will give the children lessons in germs and their effects, then administer to each a dose, telling them that it is an infection of love, after which they shall be kept for a time in propinquity with each other."

"Agreed."

A week later each one of the children was given a dose of some sweet smelling liquid—the principal odor was of violet—and told that it would infect them with love. Then they were packed off together to a farm owned by Dr. Finch, where they were put under the care of the farmer and his wife. Alice, who took far more interest in the disease than Dick, had purloined the bottle from which her father had given her the infecting dose and proposed to experiment with it on her own account. Dick told her that he had been given a dose, and she was interested to know how the disease would first appear. But Dick found some farmer boys, who piloted him to the trout grounds and the swimming hole, and for the first two or three days Alice saw nothing of him. When he got back to the farmhouse he had forgotten all about the love germs.

Not so Alice. She watched eagerly for the first symptom of the infection, feeling her pulse and looking at her tongue a dozen times a day. In her letters home, which she was told to mail once a week, she said that she "didn't think the potion could have been strong enough, because she didn't feel any different from when she left home." Her father showed the letter to his friend Finch in triumph, but the confident Finch told him to wait. Soon after this a letter came from Dick to his father, in which he mentioned the fact that Alice had said that he needed more of the infecting dose, and she was cramming it into him.

A month passed, and the doctors were beginning to consider the experiment a failure, when a letter came from Alice which changed the situation.

"I've got the disease," she said, "and I feel so funny. I like it. Dick's got it too. I got it first, then Dick came down with it. I wonder which will get well first. It is the nicest disease I ever had. Nothing at all like that nasty old measles."

Dick wrote in a different vein. "Alice says that I'm infected," he said, "but I don't know. I don't feel exactly like she does, but I suppose she's right about it."

Drs. Finch and Hargrave met on the street soon after the arrival of these letters, and Finch crowed over his opponent, though he consoled him on the ground that their friendship would be continued by the union of their children.

The next day each received a telegram from the farmer to come at once. Fearing that their children had been thrown under a mowing machine, they met on the first train to start for the farm. Hiring a wagon at the station, they were driving down the road when they met Alice walking beside a red faced, freckled country gawk about twenty years old in a woolen shirt, no coat and his hair sticking through holes in his hat.

"The germs have worked, papa," she exclaimed. "I've given Hank a dose, and he's got it too. He says he's got it awful."

"Get in here," said the father angrily and evidently unmindful of the scientific features of the case. Alice obeyed the order, and Hank was left standing in the road. Dr. Finch leaned back in his seat, put his handkerchief to his face and roared with laughter. But when they reached the farmhouse the tables were turned. There sat Dick beside a homely young woman of eighteen in a calico dress and sunbonnet.

"I'm glad you've come, pop," he said. "I'm tired o' this business. Alice says I've got a love fever, and so does Miss Shakers, but I don't believe it."

Dr. Finch, whose laughter had died away, looked at Dr. Hargrave.

"Our next experiment will be under the care of a trained nurse," said the former.

"And this one will not be reported in the medical journals," replied the latter.

ONE-PIECE FROCK IN JACKET EFFECT.

Braid, velvet and buttons applied decoratively upon men's wear serge are featured in this frock for Autumn. The jacket effect is a novelty for one-piece models.

There is no more effective way of combining simplicity and chic than in this one-piece frock made with jacket effect. The waist is made with an open neck, which is finished with a turn-down collar of contrasting material. Men's wear serge is both serviceable and pretty for the design, the narrow soutache braid making an effective trimming. Buttons of velvet, to correspond with the collar and sleeve trimmings, are also a stunning addition to the dress, which requires, for average size, 3½ yards 54-inch material, with ¾ yard contrasting silk or velvet for the collar, buttons, etc. The belt appears at the front and back of the dress, while the peplum extends only around the back and sides, being pleated at the back.

It requires rigid economy to cut the dress from the amount of material stipulated. After the serge is folded in half the first section of the pattern to be placed into position on the lengthwise fold is the back of the waist. Opposite to this, with the straight edge resting on the selvage, is the front gore. Next to the front gore is the front of the waist; then below the waist front, but on the lengthwise fold, the back skirt gore. The collar, pleated section of the peplum and belt are laid on a lengthwise fold, and above them rests the sleeve, on a lengthwise thread.

For the waist lining back and front there will be needed ¾ yard 36-inch material. This is folded first, after which the back is laid along the lengthwise fold, with the front on a lengthwise thread, just to the opposite, so that it touches the selvage.

In the place of velvet or satin, fur may be used for the collar. Fox furs of various kinds are in excellent standing, while beaver and gray krimmer are equally in demand.

What the one fad fur of the season is to be, if there is to be one, no one can yet tell.

Baked Beets.

Beets retain their sugary, delicate flavor to perfection if they are baked instead of boiled. Turn them frequently while in the oven, using a knife, as a fork allows the juice to run out. When done remove the skin and spray with butter, salt and pepper on the slices.

POPULAR MECHANICS

Temper For Butcher Knives.

Above all, use good steel and forge at an orange heat as much as possible then finish by refining the steel to a low heat with water and light hammering, but don't let the steel get cold enough for the water to set on it, as at that heat it would tend to crystallize the steel, says the Blacksmith and Wheelwright. Now reheat to a low red and lay it down until it gets cool enough, so that a pine stick rubbed or scraped on the edge will not brown then dip in hot machine or linseed oil and lay down until cold. This keeps the air from the steel and removes the strain, or, in other words, equalizes the steel, thus preventing cracking and springing out of shape and also to remove all hard spots caused by forging. Now heat to a bright cherry color and plunge in the same oil; remove and wipe the oil off. You will find that it can be bent or straightened on the anvil, but the air, which is life to everything, soon hardens the steel. When cold draw your temper with a furnace or a piece of hot iron to a purple or dark blue and then let the air finish cooling it.

Soft Hammers.

For driving bolts and keys and straps and other work about machinery a babbitt or lead hammer is better than a copper hammer, which hardens the more it is used, says the Automobile Dealer and Repairer. To keep the lead hammer from getting out of shape take a piece of copper pipe, drill a hole in one side of it and fit with a handle, and then fill in the hollow of the copper pipe with lead. Even better than the lead hammer are hardwood blocks on end. Put against part to be driven and strike with a hammer.

Tempering Drills.

Work your drills at a low heat and hammer them well so as to pack the steel. Then when you have finished your drill lay on the forge to cool down. When cold heat to whatever degree of heat that your steel will harden at. Do not get a long heat on the bit, but as short as possible. Then plunge in water with the chill taken off the water and leave in the tub till perfectly cold, and you will not have much trouble with your drills breaking off.

Electric Vulcanizer For Tires.

With an electric vulcanizer just brought out it is possible to vulcanize a patch or casing cut as well and as quickly, according to reports, as it can be done in a garage, says Popular Mechanics. The new vulcanizer is a light and compact device that operates on six volts and takes its current from the storage battery of the car. It is equipped with six feet of cord and can be connected with any light socket on the car. A thermometer attached to the vulcanizer permits the heat to be regulated to any required degree.

Black Varnish For Iron.

A good black varnish for cast iron and forgings can be made of half a pound of lampblack, half a pound of resin, one pound of asphaltum, one quart of turpentine spirits and a small quantity of linseed oil. The lampblack is first rubbed up with the linseed oil, no more oil being used than necessary for this purpose. The other ingredients are then mixed with it thoroughly. The varnish will be found to be durable.—Blacksmith and Wheelwright.

When to Use Bronze Bearings.

For bearings that must stand heavy pressures some form of bronze or brass is used. A bronze or a phosphor bronze is best when the bearing must also stand high temperatures, such as the piston pin bearing of a gas engine where the piston is attached to the end of the connecting rod. Here the bushing must withstand the heavy pressure and high temperatures produced by the explosions within the engine cylinder.

Deodorizing Lard Buckets.

Lard buckets are the most easily obtained and the most satisfactory of utensils in which to pack food or cook for a small picnic or camping party, but it is very difficult to remove the odor of the lard. This may be easily accomplished by boiling the grounds from the coffeepot in the bucket with about one pint of water.

Care of the Varnish Brush.

Turpentine is bad to keep the varnish brush in, because it not only impairs the spring or elasticity of the brush, but the turpentine gets into the varnish and causes specks.

LUNCHEON DISHES A LA ITALIENNE.

PEPPERS WITH CREAMED FISH.—Parboil the peppers ten minutes, then fill with creamed fish of any kind; sprinkle with layer of fine crumbs, dot with butter and brown lightly in a quick oven. Creamed carrots, cauliflower, sprouts and many other vegetables may be baked in the pepper cups and served either as a vegetable or an entree. Filled with potatoes au gratin and browned they are a delicious accompaniment for chops and steaks.

Tamales.—Cut large green peppers in two parts crosswise, scrape out the seeds and place the shells in salt and water for half an hour. Make a mixture of tomatoes, either canned or fresh, and breadcrumbs, seasoned with salt, pepper, tomato ketchup and table sauce. Stuff the shells with this and tie the two parts together with a string. Boil for half an hour. A variation of this is to stuff the peppers with chopped meat instead of the dressing given above. They are very good stuffed with chopped chicken. Sometimes we have just the small end cut off. Stuff as before stated and bake.

Macaroni Croquettes.—One cupful of cooked macaroni, four tablespoonfuls of butter, four tablespoonfuls of flour, three-fourths cupful of milk or stock, a few drops of onion juice, salt and pepper and one-half cupful of cheese. When well blended add milk, onion juice and seasoning. Cool, add macaroni, shape, dip in crumbs, egg, then crumbs again and fry in deep fat.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Rochester.—Announcement that the convention of the New York State Dairymen's Association will be held at Exposition Park from December 14 to 17 was made yesterday afternoon at the Chamber of Commerce rooms, following a conference at the noon hour. Participating in the conference were H. C. Elwood, of Buffalo, president, and W. E. Dann, of Avon, vice-president, of the New York Dairymen's Association; E. C. Detrich, E. M. Hastings, Laconia; Geo. Invitations have been sent out to the Western New York Milk Producers' Association, the New York State Butter and Cheese Association and the New York State Association of Ice Cream Manufacturers to hold conventions in Rochester at the same time. All these organizations are said to be in favor of the idea.

After a call made yesterday at the chamber rooms by Calvin J. Huson, former state commissioner of agriculture and president of the New York State Breeders' Association, it was said that there were excellent prospects that the Breeders' Association would hold its convention in Rochester at the same time and a definite answer is expected within a week.

POTATO HARVEST IS RUINED BY WET WEATHER

New York.—The New York Packer has made a canvass of the large potato producing states in the United States on the condition of the crop this year. In nearly every state the forecast is far below the final estimate of 1914. Conditions in Cayuga county are about the same as those in other districts of the state.

In Central New York the crop in Chenango county is estimated at 75 cars, 75 per cent. of normal, 25 per cent. less than last year; Marathon, Cortland county, 50 cars, 75 per cent. normal, 50 per cent. last year; Apulia, Onondaga county, 50 cars, 125 per cent. of last year; Jordan, Onondaga county, 25 cars, short crop.

The Packer says the Western New York harvest promises to be smaller than last year. Estimates from the principal growing sections are that the amount of good sections are that the amount of good potatoes to go into storage this fall will be considerably under a year ago.

There has been little buying of new crop tubers for shipment, but from now on it is expected that more cars will go forward, with the movement assuming larger proportions from October as the season progresses. Early potatoes have been selling at 40 to 50c a bushel, but growers said they expected to see the market advance on the late crop.

Shippers say they have not figured much on the deal so far, deciding to wait for further developments. They have heard so many stories about the crop in different sections showing damage from blight and decay that they want to see how the stock looks before they figure much on the price.

Last year there was a large crop of potatoes in Western New York and low prices ruled at various times during the season. Toward the end of the season it was hard work to sell old potatoes at any price. In view of the reports of lighter yields this year dealers expect that prices will be higher.

The potato crop through Steuben county, perhaps the largest growing section in New York State, is in a bad way. In the early summer indications were that there would be a bumper yield, but at this time there is not 25 per cent. of a crop through the section.

Blight and heavy summer rains have caused the damage. From the best information the stock that does mature is expected to be of very poor quality. The big shippers will have to turn their attention to other commodities if they keep busy.

a continual storm of high explosives and shrapnel, showing that the Germans were endeavoring to thrust back the victorious advance of the French, but also by the track and noise of the shells it was clear our allies were pushing forward to the south of Loos.

England to Intervene If Bulgars Become Oppressive

London.—The whole press, led by the Daily Telegraph, emphatically endorses Sir Edward Grey's statement that while Britain is still friendly to Bulgaria, is she aligns her troops with those of the central empires Great Britain and her allies will give their friends in the Balkans all the suuport in their power without reserve or qualification.

The Daily Telegraph adds: "It is for Bulgaria, a Slav nation, to choose between the Quadruple Entente and Germany. The Entente guarantees assurance of the realization of the national aspirations of Greater Bulgaria, while if she casts her lot with the German enemy she will become a petty German dependency.

"If Bulgarian mobilization should result in Bulgaria assuming an aggressive attitude on the side of our enemies we are prepared to give our friends in the Balkans all the support in our power, in a manner that would be most welcome to them, in concert with our allies without reserve and without qualification," was the pregnant announcement made by Sir Edward Grey, the British Foreign Secretary.

Sir Edward Grey emphasized the long standing friendship between Great Britain and Bulgaria, and added:

"Our official information from the Bulgarian government is that they have taken up a position of armed neutrality to defend their rights and independence and that they have no aggrevvise intentions whatever against their Balkan neighbor. Not only is there no hostility in this country to Bulgaria, but there is a traditional warm feeling of sympathy with the Bulgarian people. So long, therefore, as Bulgaria does not side with the enemies of Great Britain or her allies there can be no question of British influence or forces being used in any sense hostile to Bulgarian interests, and so long as the Bulgarian attitude is unaggressive there can be no disturbance of those friendly relations."

ZAI'S CENSUS FIGURES SHOW 51 ITALIAN FAMILIES IN SECTION

Acting under instructions from Father Ciromia, of Oswego, who has been asked by Bishop Grimes of Syracuse, to take a census of the Italians living in Oswego county, Frank Zaia, an Italian leader of North Fourth st., commenced canvassing Tuesday. Mr. Zaia reported for the first day's work a total enumeration of 51 families, all residing between Rochester st. and the northern boundary of the city on the east side of the river. Today Mr. Zaia, with his assistants, will canvass the west side and they expect to finish the whole city by dark.

Within the past few months the Italian families of Oswego and vicinity have been making extended efforts to bring about the construction of an Italian church in that city. At the present time a few Italians attend the other churches in the city, while most of them worship in a public hall. No doubt the present canvass has to do with the campaign for a separate house of worship.

Mr. Zaia is of the opinion that the canvass will show a surprisingly large number of Italians in Fulton.

KITCHENER'S NEW ARMIES JOIN THE FRENCH TO GAIN PLATEAU IN CHAMPAGNE

London.—The stirring description of the glorious behavior of Lord Kitchener's new armies in the advance and the capture of the British triumph in Mesopotamia are completely overshadowed by the news that in Champagne and the Argonne, in addition to capturing 25,000 men, fully three army corps, or 120,000 men, made up of the flower of the Kaiser's troops, including regiments of the famous Prussian Guard, have been killed or wounded.

But even more inspiring to London that this epic in military prowess is the report that the French, still advancing, have reached Hill No. 140, the topmost crest at Vimy.

It is whispered everywhere that the French victory is much greater than the official communique reports and that the German lines, despite the reported presence of the Kaiser on the Western front, have been broken at the Somme-Py and that the Crown Prince's army is in danger of having its communications cut. This is sent under the greatest reserve but where there is smoke there is fire and every one here believes the French have scored the greatest victory of the war in the West as the result of their splendid advance.

One hundred metre bill which gives to the French access to the barren Vimy plateau and the first open battle field they have encountered in all the Aretois sector. At the same time it places them farther East than they have appeared at any time since early in October, 1914, when the vast planking operations which ended in a deadlock at the North Sea were in progress.

There was no indication last night of a decrease in the force of the allied offensive. On the contrary, at certain points on the long front it seemed itensified, notably in the Souchez neighborhood, at Loos and north of Massiges, in Champagne. The French here have brought their right up until it has passed north of the front occupied by the Crown Prince in the neighboring Argonne. Unless he has strengthened his right materially wher it bends north from Vienne-le-Chateau he will be compelled to fall back from his advanced positions at Four de Paris, La Fille Morte and Fontaine Madame and Bolante or lay himself open to a flank attack that is almost certain to end in utter rout is the opinion here.

Second Loan to Follow 300 Million Sold in N. Y.

New York.—An army of bond salesmen is being marshaled to overrun every nook and corner of the United States in quest of subscriptions for the $500,000,000 Anglo-French five-year five per cent. loan yielding the public almost 5 1-2 per cent. and the bankers almost 6 per cent.

Names of the prominent banks, the bankers and the investment houses which will go to form the New York division of the proposed nation-wide [illegible]

The name of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. is not in the list of New York members of the underwriting syndicate, but it is understood Otto H. Kahn and Mortimer L. Schiff, members of the firm, will subscribe as individuals.

I learn on what ought to be trustworthy, although not official, authority that payment for the bonds will be called in four monthly instalments of 25 per cent. each, the first to be paid on the issuance of the bonds next month, the second in November, the third in December and the fourth in January.

"Rookies" Rode Maccabees' Billy Goat; Want to Get Even With Another Bunch

Tuesday night, at the regular weekly meeting of the Maccabees, the first degree was conferred on a number of candidates. The initiation of the new men was handled without a hitch, and needless to say the goat made the would-be members realize they got into something when they joined the lodge. However, they all survived and are waiting for the next initiation when they can "get" some "rookies."

After the initiation the regular business of the lodge was transacted and plans made for several pool tournaments among the members and with outside teams. The Odd Fellows and Maccabees will conduct a pool tournament in the I. O. O. F. temple, the first battle of the series to take place on October 7. Members of both orders will be present in large numbers to witness the events. The second game of the series will be transferred to the Maccabee club rooms, the date of this meeting being October 14.

The tournament, in which only members of the Maccabees will take part, will have a large number of entries.

On October 12 a smoker and supper will be combined with the regular meeting. Commander Leroy Lewis, who is making plans for the "feed," gives the advance information that it will be a "real blowout," so that the members who absent themselves from meetings at times should see that they have no other engagements for that evening. Great Camp speakers from Syracuse will be on the program also.

Homer Ives was elected captain of the basketball team which is to represent the Maccabees the coming winter. Mr. Ives' captaincy insures a first-class team.

Sir Knight Warren S. Gardner was one of the speakers at the last meeting, Mr. Gardner telling of a trip last Friday night to the Oswego Centre Tent with Deputy Great Commander F. R. Carrier. The narration of the journey brought forth repeated laughs from his audience, and incidentally the speaker gave Commander Carrier a great "boost." Dr. Keller also gave a helpful and instructive lecture and promised to present at intervals during the winter speeches pertaining to hygiene. This promise from the doctor brought forth hearty appreciation from all. James Cole gave a short speech and excused himself by saying that he had "lost his voice" at the baseball game between the Maccabees and Pathfinders.

The Fulton Tent is in receipt of an invitation to go to Syracuse next Tuesday night to witness the second degree ceremonies of the Syracuse Tent which are to be [illegible] in the Universityt block. The following night in Syracuse the Alemenia Tent will hold a corn roast at the corner of Butternut and Lodi sts., to which the Fulton Maccabees have also been invited.

Oswego's Champions to Battle With Nons

On Sunday the Shakespeare eleven of Oswego will oppose the Nondescripts of Fulton on the gridiron in the first game of the season. The game will be played at the Fair grounds, and with no other contests scheduled for that day, a large crowd should be on hand to see the debut of the pigskin chasers.

Realizing the necessity of being well trained and in good condition to meet the Oswego champions, the local boys have worked hard during the past week. The team has had the assistance of several coaches. "Tunk" Ward will lead the Fulton warriors in the fray and some snappy playing will be seen.

The Oswego team last year had no difficulty in beating the Ontarios and the soldiers, considered the next best team in Oswego. The latter two have been defeated by the Independents of this place. The Independents also defeated the Jones A. C. of Oswgo, which team last year tied the Shakespeares. The championship, however, went to the Shakespeares because of the defeat of the Jones A. C. by the two other Oswego teams.

The game Sunday will be called at 3 o'clock. G. Blake will referee. The other officials have not as yet been selected. The Nondescript line-up is: Center, R. Battles; guards, J. Leroy and Brennan; tackles, P. Leroy and Miller; ends, LaGrou and J. Ward; quarterback, G. Ward; right halfback, J. Johnson; left halfback, J. Rabey; fullback, Deal.

Teams desiring games with the Nondescripts write to the manager, J. LeRoy.

CO-OPERATIVE SELLING DOOMS MIDDLEMEN

Auburn.—Farmers of Cayuga county will find a market for their products in quantities never before known if the response to the queries of Edwin T. Casler, manager of the Patrons' Co-operative Association of Cayuga county, regarding the amount of the crops for sale, continue to come in as they have in the last few days.

Last week Manager Casler sent to all members of the association blanks for the listing of their produce. Now replies are coming in to indicate that the producers are falling in line with the work of the association and that mammoth quantities of produce will be turned over to the manager for disposal in New York markets.

Heretofore, the average farmer has waited for the buyer to come and solicit his business instead of going out after the market. Now through the efforts of Manager Casler and by grouping and selling their products in quantity, the farmers expect to obtain better prices by the elimination of the middleman.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT BY MEN AND WOMEN LEADS TO 3 ARRESTS

After a spectacular chase, Chief Dyer and Officer Allnutt of the Police Department, arrested Andy Hodgdon, an employe of the Granby Paper Company, as the man was about to leap into the swift raceway of the Granby mill early last evening in an attempt at suicide. Soon after, Bessie Smith, a notorious police offender, and Guy Pitcher, both of the West Side, were also arrested in connection with the fracas earlier in the afternoon.

The police were notified by telephone yesterday afternoon that a free-for-all fight was in progress at the home of Bessie Smith in West Third st., near Hart st., and that Hodgdon was getting a bad beating. Some time before that a messenger boy passing in the neighborhood heard snatches of song and loud shouts from the Smith house and, looking in through the open door, saw several men and women dancing about.

When Chief Dyer and Officer Allnut reached the house, another man and woman who had participated in the fight, along with the Smith woman and Pitcher, had taken flight, and Hodgdon was sitting on the steps of a neighboring house, while some people of the house bathed his head, which was badly cut and bruised. The police learned the identity of the other carousers and started out to look for them. Chief Dyer had only been gone a few minutes when Hodgdon arose and said, "he guessed he'd go down to the river and jump in." A small boy was dispatched to find the Chief, and Hodgdon was trailed to the Granby mill race.

When the officers hove in sight Hodgdon walked out on a narrow wall which borders the mill race and threatened to hurl himself into the race if the police advanced further.

The man was in a frenzy with drink and excitement and, knowing full well that a struggle on the narrow coping would only result in the death of both, as the water was rushing through the race in a torrent, Chief Dyer decided to try strategy with Hodgdon, and while some men attracted his attention the Chief went inside the mill and procured a ladder. Divining the Chief's purpose, Hodgdon kicked in two windows of the mill and cried that he would leap into the pulp making machinery, 30 feet below, if the officers attempted to arrest him. When he attempted to climb through one of the windows, however, Chief Dyer was on hand to greet him with the ladder, and Hodgdon submitted meekly to arrest.

Bessie Smith and Pitcher were rounded up in the police dragnet later and the department has the names of the other couple who completed the party. Their arrest is expected today.

In City Court this morning Bessie Smith was given six months in Oswego jail. She only recently returned to this city after serving six months on the charge of maintaining a disorderly house, and Judge Wilson ordered her commitment placed in the hands of Chief Dyer, who received instructions to carry out the order if the Smith woman should be seen in this city again. She was allowed a few hours in which to leave town.

Pitcher was also given six months, with the same alternative, and he, too, decided to take up his residence elsewhere. Hodgdon was sentenced to thirty days in jail, in addition to the bad beating he received, and the sentence was suspended pending good behavior.

PATROLMAN LEWIS WINS BY COOLNESS; MODESTY FINALLY WORSTED HIM

Officer Lewis, one of the latest additions to the force of Fulton's finest, distinguished himself yesterday afternoon by stopping a runaway horse at the corner of First and Oneida sts. Lewis was on traffic post at the corner, when a bay horse, driven and owned by Mrs. Carrie Ketcham, took fright on the western approach to the lower bridge and bolted across the bridge. The light buggy swayed from side to side as the maddened animal tore along at breakneck speed, and the narrow corner at First and Oneida sts. occasioned by the paving operations there, would surely have been the scene of a smashup had not Lewis leaped for the horse's head as the animal galloped past, and after being dragged for several feet brought the horse to a standstill. Mrs. Ketcham was unhurt and Lewis was so anxious to escape the congratulations of the crowd that gathered that he neglected to learn the name of the owner of the horse.

EXPERIENCED MEN SAY PAVING JOB SHOWS UP TO NO ONE'S CREDIT

Men who profess to be judges of street work are loud in their criticism of the paving at First and Oneida sts, which is now nearing completion. The contractors, the state engineering staff and every employe from the humblest laborer to the men who lay the bricks, are included in the statements of the critics who profess to know a paving job when they see one.

The paving on the east side of the street was classed as a "slipshod, half-baked job," yesterday by a prominent local man and he pointed to the many hollows in the paving, which are noticeable even in dry weather, as proof of his statement. The joining work at the trolley tracks, curbs, and where new sections of paving are now being laid, has also come in for severe criticism from local contractors.

Leading shipping and commercial interests have advocated the creation of a federal marine commission having authority in its special field equal to that which the interstate commerce commission has within its particular sphere. Such a commission would deal finally with all shipping matters and recommend from time to time changes in the nation's navigation laws. Bills providing for such a body are likely to be submitted to the next session of congress.

The pressing necessity of rehabilitating the merchant marine of the United States is already well understood by the mass of business men. The referendum that was taken some months ago by the chamber of commerce of the United States has a good deal of significance as a symptom of public feeling. While the local associations and chambers affiliated with that organization decisively rejected government purchase and construction of ships, they approved an alternative plan of a corporation backed and financed by the national government that should be empowered to encourage by loans and subventions the building and operation of merchant ships. Presumably a measure of this general nature will be urged before congress.

When the Hatteras Shoals breakwater, upon which work has been started, shall be completed there will be a sheltered refuge deep enough to accommodate the largest ocean going ships and big enough to anchor twenty ships at once. The refuge harbor is to be created inside Cape Lookout, to include one mile square. The cost of building the breakwater and of protecting the entrance channel to the harbor may reach $3,526,000. The records show that during the past ten years 131 lives have been lost and $2,500,000 worth of shipping has been destroyed off the Hatteras section of the Atlantic coast. With the opening of the Panama route and the consequent increase of shipping that will move across Hatteras the providing of a refuge for shipping below the region of the notorious marine graveyard has become imperative.

In recent years football went through a reform period and in the refining process eliminated almost entirely the brutalities which twenty years ago were supposedly absolutely essential to the development of the sport. Practically all unnecessary roughness has been taken out, and manners and methods on the field have been revolutionized. Coachers have discovered that the club which coaches its men to harry the opposing team and resort to roughness not contemplated in the rules loses both time and efficiency as compared with a club that sticks closely to business. Wise trainers tell their men to ignore all attempts of opponents to provoke them to anger and even advise players to take abuse and blows without retaliation, because no team can play football and carry on a fight at the same time.

Some clearsighted business men are saying that local business depressions reported to exist are not fairly traceable to direct results of the European war. Eating and getting clothed, buying and selling, go on here just the same. But the war conditions, especially in view of uncertainty as to when and where it will stop, makes the merchant investor cautious and conservative. Sharp changes of value are to be expected. Whether by a slump or a boom in a wild gamble.

WANTED---MORE ENERGY

The Texas way of making every farm a factory was commented upon in yesterday's Evening Times, with the result that a subscriber out where the fields are taking on autumn hues, commended the effort to arouse interest in the welfare of our neighbors. He asked that The Evening Times continue to publish similar articles, which shows conclusively that the spirit of "getting acquainted with our neighbors, because we may like them," reaches beyond the four corners of any office in this city.

The article to which our correspondent refers told of how the wideawake people of Texas found that the farmers there were in a rut up to and over their ears; how conditions are being reversed; that instead of sticking to a standard crop they are being educated to diversify their farming. The Chambers of Agriculture of Texas are simply trying to make the people of the state self-supporting. New Jersey is another state that is finding a better footing. Alfred Gaskill is the director there of the Department of Conservation, and he is responsible for the statement that there is an area of 1,000,000 acres of land available for profitable farming within a sixty miles radius of the state's capital. Mr. Gaskill's idea in making the statement is to impress upon us the fact that one of the reasons why the markets of the large cities of the east find themselves short of foodstuffs is the neglect to properly till the lands surrounding those municipalities, for, as we all know, vegetables and foodstuffs have to be shipped long distances to supply needs that could be filled at home.

Oswego county, too, has its neglected lands, some of which surround Fulton, and which could, with little effort, be made a means of adding to the wealth of this city. Factories with belching smokestacks are not the only means to attain greatness. As we have pointed out before, a measure of Fulton's opportunity lies in the country where are raised corn, wheat, hay—beef, pork and poultry. These things are home builders and the builders of great cities.

If every farm is a factory (which is after all an established fact), then there are scores of factories surrounding this city which need just as much thought as any other item under consideration by our commercial club. While we may need good roads to reach the factories surrounding this city, and the proprietors of the farm-factory deserve to have improved highways, the roadways are not the only items to be considered in our weak-kneed attempts to get acquainted with our neighbors. The sooner we come to realize that the country can get along without the town, that much sooner shall we find our selves enriched.

The time to get out of the rut is before we sink deeper into it. Why look after the factory when we have at our doors the best opportunity in the world to corral scores of factories.

Thrift That Women Should Promote

Franklin Fisher conducts in Moody's Magazine a department devoted to investments, in which, in the current number, he contrasts the saving habits of Europeans with those of Americans, all to the disadvantage of Americans. Europeans have always been more economical, he says, than citizens of this country. Having learned economy, they "seek to practice it." In the present war their savings have stood them in excellent stead. Called upon to make the greatest sacrifices known to their countrymen, they understand how to make them. The women over there are carrying most of the burden in this sense, and it falls upon them with especial heaviness. He believes that if a similar crisis existed in this country, the chances are that the women "would rise to the occasion as nobly as any women in the world." Were they called upon to make heavy sacrifices, they would make them. If the most rigid economy were required in order to make both ends meet, they would practice it. This would be true, even of those whom we call "social butterflies." Even these would "answer the call of duty and perform it with courage and confidence." The reason is that they would have been aroused by a great crisis, their eyes opened to a great need. They would have been freed from the shackles of convention and lifted bodily out of their previous environments, so that they would see things in a new and true light.

There is, however, something which women in this country apparently cannot do, nor can the men. They cannot practice the ordinary economies that entail no real sacrifice. He believes it might be something of a blessing to this country if people "could be jolted into the frame of mind that war in Europe jolts people into," but he would like to see this accomplished without war. He says women in this country "could perform an incalculable benefit if they would unite in a national campaign in the interest of thrift." Much might be accomplished by them in a single year if they would pledge themselves "to do some distinct thing in the interests of thrift and endeavor to influence some member of the opposite sex to do the same." As things are now, however, "the influence of women is not exerted in the interests of economy and thrift." In fact:

"A great deal of extravagance and wastefulness of men is inspired by women, much of it directly and very much of it indirectly. It is not our purpose to excuse the men. They are not entitled to excuse. We are simply describing a condition. It is because we know how much the feminine influence counts that we should like to see a national movement in the interest of thrift. If every wife and sweetheart were keenly interested in such a movement, the men would soon be following their lead much more enthusiastically and generally than they are following in the cause of woman suffrage.

"If it were bond-club teas instead of tango teas; thrift parties instead of movie parties; economy-walks instead of joy rides, what a change would come about! And how much more real joy and satisfaction there would be!

"Many a woman marries a man who is addicted to drink, thinking she can save him. Many times she does. If she can perform so wonderful a feat, how simple the task to influence him to save; not to save thousands of dollars, but to save enough to make his income exceed his outgo and to invest the difference."—Literary Digest.

NO ATTENTION PAID TO UNSIGNED COMMUNICATIONS

Notwithstanding innumerable publications of notices, in effect, that no reputable newspaper or magazine will take recognition of any communication written by a person who is unwilling to furnish his or her name as an evidence of good faith, publishers are annoyed by receipt of letters intended for publication, which are sent unsigned by any other than an assumed name.

The latest instance to be noted in this line is the receipt at the office of The Evening Times of a letter intended for publication, which is addressed to the Mayor and Aldermen of this city. An explanatory letter accompanies the one intended for publication, which bears no signature whatever, and is therefore held for further instructions.

Opinions

A Plain Business Proposition.

What Mr. Edison and others apprehend is that as soon as the war ends the foreign producers, to regain their lost trade, will flood our market with dyestuffs at prices which American makers of dyestuffs cannot compete. Such is pretty certain to be the result unless an adequate Protective duty is imposed. It is a plain business proposition. It remains to be seen whether Congress and the President will recognize American interest to the extent of helping this country to free itself from dependence on others.—Troy Times.

The Senate and Its Rules.

The wisdom of allowing unlimited debate in the Senate was never demonstrated to better effect than at the last session of Congress, when the Republicans, with some Democratic aid, succeeded in killing the government shipping bill, obnoxious "pork-barrel" bills, in the shape of appropriations for alleged river and harbor improvements, and other schemes that would have increased the strain on the treasury. Senator Stone, of Missouri, and Senator Kern, of Indiana, are not safe guides, and the President will not listen to their advice to call an extra session of the Senate to revise the rules so as to limit the debates, unless he is willing to run the risk of raising an extremely dangerous issue. The Democratic majority in the Senate will be large enough to insure the passage of all reasonable party measures. The rule [illegible] in killing more "pork-barrel" schemes, bills for placing an embargo on the sale of munitions of war, and possibly Populistic Southern bills for making warehouse receipts for cotton equivalent to legal tender, or some equally absurd device for giving the cotton grower the right of way to the United States treasury.—Rochester Chronicle-Democrat.

Teaching 600,000 Aliens.

The purpose of State Commissioner Finley to conduct a course of study at Albany for the training of teachers of immigrants is entirely worthy. To teach the immigrants English, to educate them and to help them along is good not only for the people who have come to our shores, but is important from the point of view of the United States. The progress of the country depends upon the grade and intelligence of the people who live in it, whether they are citizens or not. That is particularly true in a government of and by the people.

But it must strike one as a thing to be deplored that the energies of the states must be directed towards so simple a thing as teaching inhabitants to speak the language of the country, especially when the other inhabitants are ready for more advanced work.

It is pointed out that about one-fourth of the state's foreign population cannot speak, read or write English and there are upwards of 600,000 of them. Over 13 per cent. cannot even read or write any language. It is almost a hopeless task to expect any of these to help solve the problems of government. And little can be done with the illiterates except to secure low grade work of them at a low wage, with the result that we have a low standard of living among many people.—Utica Observer.

Term of Enlistment.

The proposal that the term of service in the army be shortened to two years, and even one year, should be adopted, for it has some weighty arguments in its favor. Army leaders have advocated for some time lopping off a year or two from the three year enlistment, but Congress has preferred to conduct the affairs of the army itself and has stuck to the three year term.

It is pointed out that after a man has served in the army a year or two, he has not a great deal to learn as a soldier and the cost of keeping him is more than the value of what he may learn. Moreover, if he is discharged sooner and new men are trained, the country is in possession of a greater reserve force of trained men from which to draw upon.

The army becomes a school which turns out graduates that much faster. Then, too, three years seems a long time for many men to give themselves up in the service of their country in peaceful times. However, they would not hesitate to enlist for a year or two. A year in the army, in fact, would do many young men good in the way of discipline. But three years is quite a period out of the life of a man who intends to make his way in [illegible]—Utica Press.

GOVERNMENT ADVISER OF CHAMBERS OF COMMERCE

With a view to instructing the American business men regarding foreign fields for domestic output, Dr. E. E. Pratt, Chief of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, has designated Stanley H. Rose, Special Agent of the Bureau, as Export Trade Adviser. Mr. Rose, who before entering the government service was export manager of a large firm here and is well known as acting agent in charge of the local government bureau in this city, will tour the country from coast to coast.

Mr. Rose will devote himself to giving first-hand information and advice to manufacturers as to the best means of entering the export field, as well as emphasizing the free information service the government is ready to extend to every American manufacturer who desires to see his goods placed in foreign markets. It was said yesterday to be Dr. Pratt's aim to make the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce as popular with the manufacturers as is the Department of Agriculture with farmers.

Taking into account the general interest aroused in trade with Latin America, Mr. Rose will make a specialty of furnishing information relating to South and Central America and putting manufacturers into touch with live opportunities in the various republics. At the same time he will point out openings for American goods in other markets, such as Australia, New Zealand and Russia.

Mr. Rose will also advocate a more general study of modern languages, especially Spanish, as an aid in export business. His itinerary, on account of its extent, has not been arranged as yet as to specific dates, but will be announced shortly. Many invitations have been received from Chambers of Commerce and other organizations throughout the country, asking that the adviser visit their respective cities and make an address.

GIVES LIFE FOR ONE OF HIS CREW

Survivors Tell of Thrilling Wreck on Bermudian Coast.

CAUGHT IN A HURRICANE.

Captain Boothe Sought Life Preserver For Fireman and Was Only One Lost. Bermudian Also Brings In Thirty-three Survivors of Wreck in Mid-Atlantic Ocean.

The Quebec liner Bermudian arrived in New York from Bermuda with sixty shipwrecked sailors among her passengers and brought the story of how Captain Ernest Boothe of the British steamship Pollokshield, caught off the Bermudian coast in a hurricane and fog, ran his vessel ashore head-on and sacrificed his life while trying to insure the safety of one of his crew. This story has added interest because the Pollokshield was, up to the outbreak of the war, the Hamburg-American liner Graecia, plying between New York and West Indian and Central American ports.

The Graecia slipped out of New York harbor with a cargo of coal for the German cruiser Karlsruhe, was captured by the British, taken to Gibraltar and sold. Her name was changed to the Pollokshield, and she was used by the admiralty as a supply ship.

Had Cargo of Explosives.

The Pollokshield, with a crew of thirty-two men, left Cardiff, Wales, for Bermuda on Aug. 22 with a cargo of shells and gunpowder. In mid-Atlantic the ship encountered the great gulf hurricane and fought wind, fog and seas for five days. Captain Boothe had lost his bearings when at 8 o'clock in the morning of Sept. 7 the fog lifted and he found himself almost ashore on the beach on the south coast of Bermuda.

He tried in vain to get his vessel away from the reefs, but the gale was too strong. Nothing remained to be done but run ashore. Captain Boothe ordered the fires banked, called all the men up from below and assembled them on deck, tied down his whistle cord and headed his ship for the coral shore.

The journey was not a long one, and the Pollokshield soon struck, burying her nose in a great smother of waves beating over the reefs. She beached herself in such a way that she rested on a shelf of coral, and in a few hours she began to break in two just forward of the mainmast.

Captain Gives Up His Life.

Captain Boothe discovered that one of his firemen did not have a life preserver. The fireman said he had not been able to find one. The captain started aft for a preserver just as the ship broke in two, and the last his men saw of him he was being carried away on the crest of a wave.

The rear end of the ship slipped off into deep water, and much of the cargo fell out into the sea. The thirty-two survivors were taken off after thirty hours by Antonio Marshell, a Portuguese fisherman, who manipulated a whaleboat through the surf and got it alongside the stranded hulk.

Five of the survivors of the Pollokshield remained in Bermuda to work at recovering such of the shells as remain in the wreck. The others will remain in New York a few days and then start for England.

Besides the survivors of the Pollokshield, the Bermudian brought thirty-three survivors of the wreck in mid-Atlantic on Aug. 15 of the Italian steamship Purificasione, bound from Genoa to Norfolk, Va. The captain and crew of the Purificasione abandoned her several hours before she went to the bottom and were picked up a couple of days later by the British steamship Cayo Gitmano, which took them to Bermuda.

Laconic.

CRAZED IN GRAND CANYON.

New Hampshire Tourist Wanders Without Food or Drink.

Grand Canyon, Ariz.—After wandering for three days in the depths of the Grand Canyon without food or water W. H. Harvey, a retired merchant of Manchester, N. H., was rescued in Hell's Half Acre, one of the most perilous parts of the canyon. Mr. Harvey was crazed from thirst and hunger. He was rescued by Rudolph Reimer, Jr., of Brooklyn, N. Y., a Grand Canyon guide.

Mr. Harvey and James H. Hyde of New York started down Hermit Trail, eight miles west of Grand Canyon hotel. They took neither food, water nor guide, intending to follow the river along the bottom of the canyon back to the foot of Bright Angel Trail, which leads to the canyon bottom from here.

Soon after leaving the foot of Hermit Trail they became lost in the waste of rock formations. The alkali water which they were forced to drink caused both men to lose their minds temporarily. Mr. Hyde became separated from Mr. Harvey and found his way out of the canyon, but was unable to direct searchers to the spot where he had left his companion.

Parties searched the canyon for two days and found no trace of Mr. Harvey. Finally he was discovered in a delirious condition, his outer clothing gone. He was brought out of the canyon on a pack burro. He is recovering from his hardships.

FLAG ISLAND AERIAL BASE.

Property Owned by Peary Recommended For Maine Coast Station.

Portland, Me.—A report favoring Flag island, in Casco bay, the property of Rear Admiral Robert E. Peary, as one of the stations of the proposed aerial coast patrol was made by Henry A. Wise Wood, vice president of the Aero Club of America, to Alan Hawley, its president. The use of the island already has been tendered to the club by Rear Admiral Peary. The report says:

"With a minimum of effort and time aerial observers working from Flag island may command the offshore approaches to Portland and Bath and the inner waters of Casco bay, which lie behind the Portland defenses. The importance of a constant aerial surveillance of Casco bay in the event of hostilities cannot be overestimated, as the bay provides perhaps one of the best hiding places for submarine vessels to be found anywhere along the New England coast."

Walls of Cartagena.

The walls of Cartagena, Columbia which were built during the reign of Philip II. of Spain and are said to have cost $59,000,000, are still perfect. Some of the forts have been destroyed, but others are still in excellent condition.

City tourists through the fruit growing regions have had an object lesson in seeing stuff rotting in the orchards for which they would pay fancy prices at home. Nothing can be done about it now except bear the fact in mind until the time comes to co-operate in banishing the evil.

The president of China says that none but a fool wants to be emperor. But, Mr. Kai, republicansim should teach the subject that it is his duty to be at the call of his country for any role where he can serve best and under whatever commission is handed him.

More and more the idea is expressed that this country will be rich and prosperous when war impoverished Europe is out for loot, gun in hand. Then why put temptation in Europe's way by parading our wealth?

If one-half that Carranza and Villa say of each other is the truth our watchful waiting policy will require an injecting of ginger in it before Mexico can pacify itself.

United States dollars command a bigger premium abroad than ever before, but no one relishes the job of going over to collect it.

If the weather is to keep up such pranks we can establish all the year round resorts and maybe lasso summer coming or going.

Paradoxical though it seems, nobody can deny but the Russian army has stood well in the running.

Billy Allen Musical Opera Co., All N ext Week, at The Quirk Theater. A Bunch of Allen Choristers.

AT THE QUIRK THEATRE ALL NEXT WEEK

Of all the wekk-stand attractions playing Fulton none is more popular than the Billy Allen Musical Comedy Comedy. The reason for the Allen company's popularity here and elsewhere is the fact that it gives theatre-goers just what they want, and it does not charge them exorbitant prices. The Billy Allen Company this season brings here a number of plays of wide popularity, though never before offered at popular prices. These include "The Time, The Place and The Girl," "The Dingbat Family," "A Hot Old Time," "Keep Moving," "King Dido," and "A Night at the Wintergarden." The musical hits of these shows are well known, and the comedy is generous and of the kind especially suitable to Billy Allen, who is the bright feature around which the organization centers. The company opens with "Hot Old Time" on Monday. An excellent production is promised. In fact, Mr. Allen is very particular about his shows. He wants his patrons to have nothing but the best. He stages shows just as effectively as the higher priced musical organizations. Every show has its own scenic investiture, every musical number its own special costuming and the lighting effect are studied to give the brilliant colors required. In other words, patrons of the theatre are given everything offered by the high priced shows, but a small price of admission. There is no attempt to stint in the number or quality of the people used in the cast, these being up to the standard of the best traveling musical organizations, and including the well known Billy Allen Beauty Chorus.

MOTOR DRIVER TIRED OF HORRORS OF WAR

Chicagoan Deaf and Dumb, His Hair Almost White.

Chicago.—A remarkable war letter was made public here. It was from Robert Beck, former owner of a taxicab business in Chicago, to his friend Charles Grand. Beck joined the allies as driver of an armored automobile.

"I am glad to have the chance to tell you that I am alive, and that is all," the letter reads. "My hair is nearly white now. I am deaf and dumb through shock and wounds. I am a motorcycle dispatch bearer and armored car driver.

"I was driving a sixty horsepower armored car. I could not drive fast enough because the dead bodies and horses were so thick that I could not get through. All at once a shell hit my car and blew it up.

"When they got me from underneath the wrecked car I was deaf and dumb, with my ribs crushed and spine hurt. The other three men I carried with me in the armored car were blown to bits.

"This was a month ago. The doctors have tried to bring my speech and hearing back, but they cannot. The doctors say they will come back in time because now my nerves are shattered through hardships.

"Charlie, I am tired of killing people. I have been driving an armored car with three Maxim guns inside of it and three men working the guns. These fire 500 shots a minute, and I carry 10,000 rounds inside the car. The car weighs four tons, so you can see what fun we have on the battlefield. I have seen times when I drove my car forty miles an hour into a regiment.

"This summer has been bad for flies. There were millions of flies around us because there are thousands of dead bodies of men and horses not buried properly. The bodies are thrown anywhere."

Forgotten Belles.

Old folks tell us that their grandmothers' outfits as debutantes often consisted of two cotton prints for morning wear, a woolen afternoon dress, with the addition of a bonnet and pelisse for visiting, and one or two white muslins for evening parties, ribbons and natural flowers of different colors giving variety to the costume. Buoyant young belles from the best country families spent gay winters in Washington content with such an outfit.—New York Telegram.

BLOODLESS BATTLES.

One Campaign Where a British Army Did Not Lose a Man.

The battle of Futtehpore, one of four fights in eight days, in the midst of a forced march of 126 miles to the relief of Lucknow, was as far as the small British force is concerned absolutely bloodless, and Havelock's classical "order of the day" puts the fact on record.

In one of the battles against Akbar Khan in Afghanistan the result was almost equaly surprising. It was the punitive expedition of 1842 after the massacre at Kabul and the horrible retreat from which only Dr. Brydon escaped. This battle made up somewhat for the frightful disaster, for the victory could not have been more complete.

The Afghans were driven headlong into the river, and camp, baggage, artillery, horses, standards and arms of every kind were captured, together with abundant ammunition and provisions, while Akbar fled. Yet the British only had ten killed.

Probably the only bloodless campaign ever undertaken by the British was the Abyssinian expedition against King Theodore led by Lord Napier of Magdala. It was this bloodless war which gave him his title.

Although the British army consisted of 10,000 men and although they were met by the enemy, who put up a brave fight, and although they stormed Magdala, situated on cliffs so steep that it was said a cat could not climb them, yet not a life was lost on the British side.

If the last Ashanti expedition against King Prempeh could be dignified by the name of a campaign then it must be added to the list of bloodless wars. Certainly it cost the life of Prince Henry of Battenberg, the husband of Queen Victoria's youngest daughter and the father of the queen of Spain, but of other casualties there were none.—London Stray Stories.

MOVE WHOLE TOWN.

Wisner, Miss., Being Taken Ten Miles Away.

Laurel, Miss.—The town of Wisner, headquarters of the lumber camps of the Eastman-Gardner Lumber company, located in Smith county, is being moved to a point twelve miles west of the present location.

It has a mayor and board of aldermen and a complete set of ordinances. It will probably be several weeks before the name of the postoffice will be changed, although the moving is practically complete.

The present town of Wisner contains 800 citizens and boasts one of the finest Y. M. C. A. organizations in the country, a postoffice, general store, drug store, meat market, barber shop, electric light plant and many other conveniences of an ordinary city.

SEEK NAMES OF RETIRED MEN.

Navy Wants to Register All Available Supernumerary Officers.

As a part of the program of preparedness for war, the navy department has instituted, through the bureau of navigation, an inquiry regarding the commissioned personnel on the naval retired list to ascertain how many retired officers would be available in time of need either to take duty on warships or in navy yards and stations. The inquiry includes the retired officers of the Marine corps as well as of the navy.

Hereafter the bureau of navigation will keep two lists of officers available for duty in time of war. On one list will appear the names of those of the active list, and on the other the names of those who have been retired. It is understood that this classification does not apply to those officers who have been retired for age. The inquiry goes out to officers who have retired voluntarily, who have been "plucked," or who have been retired for some physical disability which might not stand in the way of performing some special line of duty required somewhere in the naval establishment in time of hostilities.

CLEAN MINDS; CLEAN CITIES

People Must Be Educated to the Necessity of Proper Appearance of Municipality.

"I'm as good as you are," said the dirty man to the well-dressed gentleman in the street car who had drawn away from him a bit.

"You may be right," answered the clean one, "but you certainly don't smell as good."

"Lord!" exclaimed a visitor to one of the most populous sections of Boston. "What smells there are here."

"Yes," agreed the social worker of the party, "we've got to clean out a lot of minds before we'll get rid of this dirt."

"You have to clean minds!"

"Surely. Dirty minds make dirty people, and dirty people make a dirty town. The idea of cleanliness must be put in the minds of those whose present standards of cleanliness are elemental.

"The woman who will tolerate cobwebs in the corner of her ceiling has cobwebs in the corners of her mind. Disorder in a home is evidence of the presence of minds that are disorderly. Our surroundings always reflect what we are within. To make these streets clean we must create in the people who live here a desire for clean streets."

"Do you mean to say that the people here are content with all this dirt around them?" the visitor asked with surprise.

"The majority of them are. What the majority really and truly wants, the majority can have." The speaker was silent for a few moments. When they reached the next corner, he said, "If there was on this street one man or woman who wanted more than anything else to have this street cleaned and made sweet-smelling, the work would be done."

"The old story of Sodom and Gomorrah, eh!" observed the cynic.—Ford Hall Folks.

ADDS TO CITY'S APPEARANCE

Form of Street Lamp That Is Coming Into General Use Throughout the Country.

Besides forming a very attractive support for a street lamp, this re-enforced concrete post also offers a convenient place for displaying street signs. At the top of the pole is a 12-inch frosted-glass globe in which there is a high-candlepower electric lamp. Surrounding the globe is a square framework in which four strips of blue glass, carrying the street names in white letters, are held. During either the day or night, the name of the street and its intersecting thoroughfare are thus plainly visible when the pole is placed at a corner.—Popular Mechanics.

Making the Rock Garden.

The rock garden, to be successful, must be along the lines approved by nature. It must not, in any point, resemble a piece of masonry or other formal construction, says a writer in the Minneapolis Journal. The most satisfactory location for it is at the foot of a gentle slope, where it can climb the declivity and the rocks be given the appearance of jutting out from the hillside. But very excellent results may be achieved on flat surfaces if it is remembered to let the rocks appear to crop out on the surface rather than appear to be placed there for a purpose. The rock garden should have its highest point or beginning at some natural or artificial boundary—a wall, or better still, a clump of trees and shrubbery which will serve to mark its origin.

Reservists Leave to Join Their Country's Colors

Ten Italian reservists will answer the call of their mother country and depart from Fulton tomorrow. The ten men, none of whom leave behind relatives dependent upon them for support, will be escorted to the N. Y. C. station by a large crowd of friends and will depart for Syracuse on the 10:10 train.

The Italian Consul, permanently located in Rochester, will meet the group at 3 p. m. in Syracuse to make arrangements for their passage to Italy.

Of the ten men, three have been employed at the woolen mills, one at the chocolate works, one at Massaro's macaroni factory; another is an employe of the O. & W. railroad. The remainder of the group are laborers.

The men sail from New York Saturday noon on the Italian line steamship Stampalia, which will carry several hundred Italian reserves to take their place in the Italian army.

EQUAL VOTES CAMPAIGN ON

Western Women in Fulton This Morning Outlining Plans for County Campaign

The first gun in the pre-election campaign for "Votes for Women" will be fired tonight at 8:30 when Miss Sarah Theodosia Muir, of Lincoln, Nebraska, addresses a crowd in the Gem theatre in Oswego. Miss Muir has been in conference all day with an assemblage of suffrage workers at the home of Dr. Doane in So. 3rd st. A representation of women from Fulton, Hannibal and other near by towns spent the day in the doctor's office outlining plans for the coming campaign and tomorrow they will again gather to make final arrangements.

Mrs. Fred Lockwood and Mrs. J. S. Stevenson represented Hannibal. Mrs. Stevenson is the Acting County Chairman and is taking the place of Mrs. Luther Mott, wife of Congressman Mott. Miss Muir has been appointed County Organizer. The western woman arrived here Monday and will remain in this vicinity until election day. Miss Muir is a high school teacher in Lincoln and came east on a two months' leave of absence to assist the New York State workers. She came directly here from Schoharie and Montgomery counties, where she rendered valuable assistance to the women there in mapping out the plan of campaign.

Miss Muir will work from Oswego where headquarters for the county have been established. The work now being outlined is a part of the whirlwind campaign planned, and the purpose is to touch every small hamlet and town in the county.

The climax of the campaign will be reached in this city when a monster mass meeting will be held probably in the East Side Park. The purpose of Miss Muir's visit is chiefly to arouse interest in the mass meeting and to give the affair publicity. Miss Mabel Currie, the Chautauqua speaker from the West, is to be the principal speaker at the meeting.

Miss Muir has at her disposal the use of an automobile, which has been gaily decorated with the colors of the "Votes for Women" league. The automobile is attracting considerable attention about town.

Farmers Have Privilege of Land Bank Tomorrow

The operation of the Land Bank of New York State will begin tomorrow, when new facilities for raising money in times of stress will be placed in the hands of American farmers.

After tomorrow a farmer who desires to raise money to move crops, to meet a mortgage or help in any kind of a contingency can resort to the Land Bank.

Tomorrow $250,000 raised by the sale of debenture bonds will be available for lending. The money is to be distributed among the savings and loan associations that are members of the Land Bank.

George W. Thomas of Rochester, a director of the land bank, explains the land bank scheme as follows:

"Few people are familiar with the workings of the Land Bank and its purpose. It has grown to be a large venture. The savings and loan associations enjoy great privileges under their charters from the State of New York. They are safe-guarded by the Banking Department of the state, certified as worthy of public confidence, protected from unfair and unworthy competition, and fostered by every proper device or law.

"There has been a pressure brought to bear on the savings and loan associations, by public opinion, to make their business state-wide, to include within the area of their activities the rural as well as the suburban and urban fields. To do this it is necessary that the scource from which the funds are obtained shall have the widest possible range, without altering in any manner the scope and area and condition for making investments. The Land Bank is designed to increase the facilities of every association that affiliates with the central body.

May Issue Debenture Bonds.

"That this may be accomplished the state has permitted the Land Bank to issue debenture bonds, secured by first mortgages of the association members One banking law provides that the shares of the central institution can be subscribed and owned only by saving and loan associations. Its minimum capital is $100,000, and at least ten associations whose aggregate resources are more than $5,000,000, must be its incorporators.

"The Land Bank was incorporated with sixty associations as members. There are now nearly 100 associations affiliated with it, and the total capital invested is about $40,000,000. There are 250 saving and loan societies in this state, and they have 152,000 members and $65,000,000 of capital invested in co-operative land mortgages. I expect that in time every association in the state will affiliate with the central body.

Benefits to Associations.

"Members in the Land Bank will not interfere with the present manner of doing business in the savings and loan associations; they will not be called upon to change a single feature of their business methods. It will give greater power and prestige to the associations. It will bring to them part of their funds at a lower rate of dividend than is now paid, and will secure that part for a long, definite period, whereas now all funds are payable on demand.

"The Land Bank is not a bank of deposit. It will not take deposits, even from its own member associations. Its single purpose is to make mortgage investments liquid. It will receive from its member associations their first mortgages on land, and, using these mortgages as a basis of security, will issue bonds and sell those to the investing public, and delixer the proceeds to the member association, whose mortgages have been made the basis for the bonds. The member associations will use this money for further investment in mortgages in their own locality.

"The Land Bank will not deal with individual borrowers. It will handle only such mortgages as its member associations bring to it. All the mortgages the Land Bank will deal in, therefore, must come to it with the approval of the community in which the land is a banking institution.

"The Land Bank restores the business of the saving and loan associations to its original sound and economically true position. It swings us away from our apparent approach to the proper field of the savings bank. We are not, never were, intended to be savings banks, as they are known in New York State, yet we must have money, and great sums of money, to carry on our business of promoting the industries of and ownership of land, including especially that of the home-owning. Land mortgages are primarily investments, and it is, therefore, the soundest and truest economy that we should use investment money."

NO WAY TO KEEP ROOMS CLOSED SUNDAYS

Rochester.—No law prohibits the opening of billiard and pool rooms on Sunday in Rochester and the city ordinance under which those places have been closed on the first day of the week is of no effect. In substance that was what Justice Gillette said in police court when he discharged a man who was arrested last Sunday for having permitted pool and billiards to be played. It is expected that most of the room sin the city will be open next Sunday.

Commissioner Hamilton, of the Department of Public Safety, was chagrined over the outcome of the police court case. He had confidently expected the upholding of his department in the arrest of the offender. The department is now powerless to stop them if the billiard room proprietors make their announced move of a general opening on Sundays.

HOLD THEIR PEACHES FOR BETTER PRICES

Rochester.—"The peach crop of Western New York is being held back, according to what I hear," remarked S. J. Kearns, superintendent of the Rochester Division of the New York Central Railroad, yesterday. "The crops of Connecticut, Michigan and the Hudson Valley are marketed. Practically, the only peaches left are the ones in this part of the state. The orchard owners feel that they will be able to get higher prices if they hold their fruit a few days."

BUSINESS READJUSTED TO WAR CONDITIONS

New York.—Reports of commercial failures show that "business has pretty well adjusted itself to the new conditions imposed by the war, and that the weak spots a year ago have been largely eliminated," according to the monthly letter on business conditions issued by the Traders' National Bank.

Another pointed declaration in the letter is this: "Politics is less a factor in the business situation than a year ago. Business men are being left to do many things which a few years ago Congress was being implored to take up. As a consequence, the country is getting more bills of lading and fewer bills of legislation."

WADSWORTH OWNS ONLY RANCH IN THE STATE

Avon.—Avon has what is perhaps New York State's only "ranch." It is owned by ex-Congressman James Wadsworth, of Genesee, and conducted by Lieutenant James W. Wadsworth, Jr., of Troop M, United States Senator from New York. This "ranch" consists of 2,500 acres, and stretches both sides of the Scottsville road, a distance of two miles from the hills that fringe the west side of the Genesee valley to the river, itself.

Every year Senator Wadsworth brings up from his Texas ranch, which is as long one way as from Avon to Buffalo, 66 miles, and as long the other as from Genesee to Rochester, 30 miles, all enclosed with wire fence, a train load of young steers, which are fattened and then shipped to the Chicago market, and the Senator finds after several years' experience that these steers do better here than they do on the home ranch. At the present time, besides the hundreds of dairy cows and horses on the "Street" farm, there are 527 big 3 and 4-year-old steers, weighing anywhere from 1,200 to 1,600 pounds, and worth anywhere from sixty to seventy thousand dollars.

INVESTIGATIONS IN ARDMORE DISASTER

Ardmore, Okla., Sept. 29.—Having counted forty-four dead and appraised the property damage at more than a half million dollars, the citizens of Ardmore today set about placing responsibility for the terrific explosion of gasoline and dynamite which almost wiped the town out of existence.

Russell Brown, City Attorney, issued a statement that officers of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad Company may be held for criminal negligence and that court actions for the lives lost and the property destroyed may lie against the company.

OUR WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENCE

News Mostly of a Political Nature From the Nation's Seat of Government for Times' Readers.

Washington.—(Special Correspondence.)—Whether the United States can hope to hold its place as the leading export nation of the world, is a problem now receiving the attention of the business men of America. It was the European war that gave the United States its present pre-eminence. What will happen when the war shall close is the great question which very properly causes anxiety among men who are financially interested in the continuance of that partially restored prosperity now prevailing in some sections of the country.

Men who are accustomed to dealing with conditions, rather than theories, and who build on reasonable certainties, rather than on possibilities, do not overlook the fact that in July, 1914, just before the outbreak of the European war, there was a very alarming balance of trade against the United States. They will not forget that the balance of trade against us soon after the "tariff-for-revenue-only" policy was decided upon by the election of a Democratic administration and that it was only the conditions developed by the European war which turned the tide in our favor.

Will the balance of trade turn against us again when the cause which turned it in our favor has been removed? Most business men are answering this question in the affirmative, believing that since it was "war orders" that formed the basis of a favorable trade balance, that balance can continue only so long as the war shall remain a factor in international commerce.

There are several facts which no one disputes;

First, the call of millions of men in Europe from industrial activity to military operations decreased production on that continent.

Second, the war not only decreased production abroad, but destroyed many products already manufactured, and created new and enormous markets.

Third, the only large producing nation ready to supply the commodities most in demand by reason of the war was the United States; hence this country received a greater part of the war orders.

Fourth, as soon as the armies of Europe are disbanded, those millions of men will return to manufacturing and other productive enterprise.

Fifth, European nations will be impoverished, and the United States, as a result of its large favorable trade balance, will be the only country in a position to buy extensively.

Sixth, as a consequence of high prices paid by buyers of war equipment, wages in many American industries have been increasing, and when European producers again begin activity the American producer will be thrown into competition with factories paying the lowest scale of wages, while American mills pay the highest.

The foregoing facts present a situation which the business men of America must meet, and they are now giving it most careful thought. It is a situation which will confront not merely large manufacturers of the country, but every farmer, merchant, mechanic and laborer who depends for a livelihood upon the general prosperity of the nation.

SYNOPSIS

Old Cyrus Martin, the head of the American soap trust, makes a bet of $30,000 with a friend, John Clark, a rival soapmaker, that his (Martin's) son Rodney would be making more money at the end of a year than Clark's son Ellery.

Martin takes his pretty secretary, Mary Grayson, into his confidence and enlists her co-operation. Rodney has been a spendthrift, and the father wants to make him reform and go to work.

Mary meets Rodney, and the son proposes marriage to her. Rodney tells his father about his proposal, and the old man pretends great anger. He tells Mary he will disinherit Rodney.

Rodney defies his father, and Mary is deeply touched at the lad's genuine affection for her. Mary makes a financial bargain with Martin to encourage the son to go to work.

Ambrose Peale, press agent, meets Rodney and agrees to go into business with the lad on a salary basis. Rodney has resolved to go into the soap industry and buck the trust.

Rodney, Peale and Mary go into the soap trade together. Rodney then endeavors to borrow $10,000 as capital for his newly formed company.

The offices of the "13 Soap company" are opened, and they advertise it as "the most expensive soap in the world." Peale talks advertising continually.

The 13 Soap company finds its expenses very heavy, and financial rocks loom ahead. Their chief business seems to have been to spend money for advertising under Peale's directions.

An alleged countess, who has appeared on the scene, desires to purchase the French rights for the sale of "13 Soap" and produces a draft for $30,000, which she desires to have cashed.

The "countess" is shown to be an impostor and despair settles over the 13 Soap company. The firm introduces her, however, to Ellery Clark. Father Martin visits the offices.

Martin, fearing rumors that the new company would injure his business and might break the trust, offers to buy out the firm for $100,000 and give Rodney, Peale and Mary good positions. Then he learns that the company is "dead broke."

Suddenly out of a clear sky comes an order for 50,000 cakes of 13 Soap from the great firm of Brown & James of Chicago. "The tide has turned," the trio now declare.

The 13 Soap company having no factory cannot deliver. The trio endeavor to buy the cakes from branch offices of the Martin trust. They fail to get the necessary number, but send 5,000 cakes.

Mary, in despair, calls on old Martin. Rodney also appears. There they both learn that the father caused the sending of the telegram from Brown & James. Naturally they are amazed and mortified.

Peale arrives. He discourses at length to old Martin on the value of advertising and explains that the money spent on booming 13 Soap was not wasted. Martin is unconvinced.

At last the partial shipment of 13 Soap, which had been sent to Chicago, begins to sell. Brown & James send a man to the Martin home to announce that the 5,000 cakes were gone at $1 apiece. They want more.

Chicago river. It might help the drainage canal."

"But you didn't give our advertising a chance," objected Rodney.

"Yes," said Peale eagerly. "We only finished a great big advertising campaign in Chicago two days ago."

"I know the soap would have made good," insisted Rodney, "with that trademark."

"If your trademark was so marvelous," said Martin, "somebody besides your poor old father would have bought your soap."

In the meantime Peale had grown more and more discouraged.

"Oh, what's the use? He doesn't believe in advertising," he said pathetically.

"Oh, yes, I do," Mr. Martin objected; "sound conservative advertising, but not the crazy, sensational stuff you go in for."

Mary decided she would try another tack.

"Oh, you're just mad because the soap trust didn't think of 13 Soap itself," she said, half mischievously.

"Why, we wouldn't touch a fool thing like that," said Mr. Martin. "If you deliver the goods your goods will advertise you; that's always been our policy."

This was an unfortunate lead for the old soap king to have made. To doubt the efficiency of his ads. was to strike at the vitals of Ambrose Peale, to challenge him and draw his fire every time. And now Rodney was his enthusiastic squire and second.

Both boys drew good long breaths and began on their favorite themes. Poor Mary felt that she, too, was being swept along with them in the flood of Peale's enthusiasm.

"I'm sorry, father," Rodney led off, "but you are too old fashioned to know the modern way of advertising. Why, do you know the Federal Biscuit company was on the verge of failing until they hit on a catchy name for crackers?"

Mary took a hand too.

"And since then they have had over 400 lawsuits to protect it," quoted Mary.

"Their trademark made 'em," Rodney went on. "They value that trademark now as $6,000,000."

Peale had listened with grim satisfaction.

"Great stuff," he echoed.

"And did you ever hear of the Wilkins safety razor?" asked Mary. "Tell him about it, Rodney."

"It costs you $5," said Rodney. "Don't you know there's a mighty good safety razor for a quarter and dozens at a dollar? But you use the Wilkins because Wilkins was there first. You buy his razor at a high price simply because of its trademark."

"Advertising," said Mary, with a gesture she had learned from Rodney.

"Absolutely," said Rodney, with a word he had learned from Peale.

Peale himself went on:

"And Andover soap in the magazines alone used $450,000 worth of space in 1913, and at 3 cents a cake wholesale that represents 15,000,000 cakes for magazine articles alone."

"I don't believe it," old Martin interrupted.

"Yes," said Peale irreverently, "and a lot of other guys didn't believe that iron ships would float, or that machines heavier than air would fly, or that you could talk to Chicago on a wire, or send a message across the Atlantic without a wire. Pardon me, sir, but you want to get on to yourself."

"Yes, father, you certainly do," said Rodney.

"And you'd better hurry up," added Mary.

Mr. Martin laughed grimly.

"You've got a fine lot of theories, but what have you done for those 5,000 cakes of 13 Soap out at Brown & James'?"

"Why, we haven't really spent enough money advertising," said Peale, true to his faith. "That's the trouble."

"That's true," Rodney agreed. "Every time the Miller Tobacco company puts out a new cigarette they start off by appropriating $200,000 to boom it."

"And I suppose they are a lot of boobs," put in Peale.

"And think what other firms spend," said Rodney. "I've gone into this thing, father. Think what national advertising is accomplishing. It sells automobiles, vacuum cleaners, talking machines, rubber heels, cameras, washing machines, foods, clothes, shoes, paints, houses, plumbing, electric irons, fireless cookers, mostly to a lot of people who'd never even hear of 'em if it weren't for advertisements."

CHAPTER XVI.

Ambrose Peale.

PEALE took up the refrain next and talked to Mr. Martin about advertising.

"But nowadays it isn't only people who have stoves to sell or toothbrushes that are spending money on publicity," he began. "Banks are advertising for money, nations for immigrants, colleges for students, cities for citizens and churches for congregations, and you sit there thinking it doesn't pay to advertise."

"Six hundred and sixteen million dollars were spent last year in magazines and newspapers, billboards and electric signs," recited Mary.

"Bringing education and comfort and fun and luxury to the people of the United States," said Rodney. "It's romance, father, the romance of printing presses, of steel rails, of the wireless, of trains and competition, the romance of modern business, and it's all built on advertising. Why, advertising is the biggest thing in this country, and it's only just begun."

"Well," said Mr. Martin, "when you boys get through talking and you're flat broke and down and out come around and see me. I'll show you an old business that has a lot of money, that isn't radical and that manages to keep going without wasting a fortune in fool advertising."

"Then you won't let us get any soap?" asked Rodney.

"Risk my business reputation on a silly scheme like dollar soap? I should say not. You may be crazy, but I'm not."

"Yes, you are," said Mary, beginning to lose her temper.

"Oh, come on," said Peale impatiently. "What's the use of talking to a man whose brain is deaf?"

The old soap king only laughed.

And so to the accompaniment of his scornful chuckles the three dejectedly walked out. Poor Mary's mission had failed. In the street outside she could not help pouting a little, especially for Rodney's benefit, and she scolded Peale outright. She was sure she could have managed the old gentleman if she had been allowed to do it in her own intuitive woman's way, and she told both the boys so flatly. What was the use of spouting all those statistics? What they wanted was 45,000 cakes of soap, not 5,000 words of advertising talk. What impression had they made on the soap king? Not the slightest.

"Now, don't you be too sure," interrupted Ambrose. "Just let it sink in and rankle a bit and we'll see."

"Nonsense!" said Mary crossly.

Poor Ambrose! He wouldn't have admitted it to anybody in the world, but for once in his life he was downcast and discouraged. His unfailing good nature was cloaked and veiled a little and no mistake. He was blue.

What was worse his blues lasted, off and on, this time for almost two weeks.

As the criminal returns to the scene of his crime so Ambrose's spirit was drawn back to his old haunts of the show world again.

"Hello, Mr. Pe-e-ele!"

He turned to see the "countess." They were in front of the City Square hotel, and she was headed for the revolving doors on Forty-second street. Peale gravitated at once to her side and jumped into the whirling compartment behind her.

"Well, cutie," he said as they dropped down together on a lounge in the crowded corridor, "what are you up to?"

"You're a grand little guy," said the countess agreeably; "I like you."

But all the time her eyes roved about the place as if she were looking for another man.

"How are you getting along now?" she went on. "As far as I'm concerned, trim everybody you can. You're there, Ambrose, you're there."

"But we're on the level," Peale assured her.

"So am I," said the countess.

"If you were I'd give you a job," laughed Peale.

"Me work on a job!" cried the countess. "There's no excitement in that. Why, now every time I meet a cop I get a thrill."

"I know—I know; the dull life is dull," Peale agreed. "I wonder if I ought to marry you and reform you?"

"No, Ambrose," said the countess quite sincerely, "I wouldn't do such a thing to you as marry you. I could talk to you about your needing a loving, faithful wife, and maybe you do at that. But the trouble with me is I'd rather trim a guy out of a hundred than earn a thousand. So leave me lay, kid, leave me lay"—

At this moment Peale, following her gaze, saw what she was looking for, and apparently "it" was Ellery Clark. Ellery, in full evening war paint, was wandering up and down evidently looking for her.

"Shall I bring him over?" asked Peale.

"No," said the countess; "wait a moment. I want to talk to you a second about Ellery. He's kind of stuck on me," she added shyly.

"Say, I'm for you," broke in Peale, "but if you're aiming to trim Ellery I can't help you there; it'd be too easy."

"Easy! You don't know Ellery! He's wise all right," she protested.

"Say, I don't like Ellery," said Peale quickly, "but if you're planning to

"Do tell him I'm a real French dame."

maxixe down the bridal path with him I won't stand for it."

"Oh, I wouldn't hitch up. No, Ambrose, you got me wrong," said the countess plaintively.

"What is the graft, then?"

The countess looked at him with a great show of diginity.

"Say, Mr. Peale," she said, "don't you think I got some sense of decency? And, anyhow, I wouldn't go after Ellery. He'd be wise in a minute. No, sir, I stack up against men of my own size—ducks who think they're wise guys, like you and your young partner."

"Well, what is the idea with Ellery, then?" Peale asked uncomfortably.

"You may not like him," the countess began. "He does seem kind of a stuck up chap, but when you get to

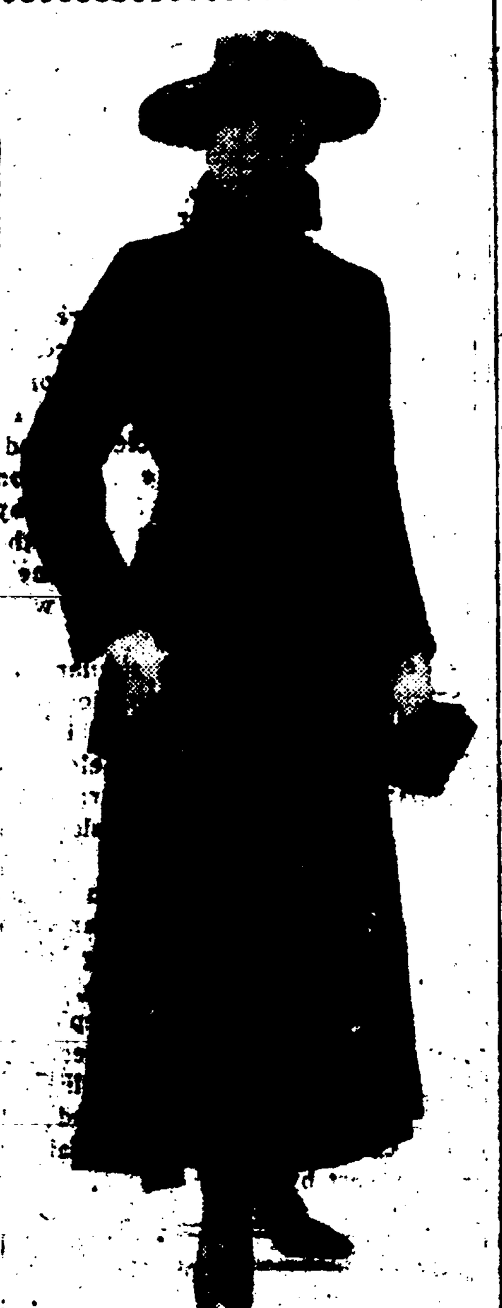
SMART TAILLEUR.

Belted Effect Makes Chic Suit For the Girl.



The belted effect in misses' suit styles holds quite an important place among the autumn season's smart models. Here it is featured in navy mohair, with belt confining narrow plaits that show above and below the waist line. The high roll collar with metal embroidery lends a military note, and the [illegible] metal buttons afford a [illegible]. Deep cuffs and an odd shaped yoke are interesting features. The flare skirt just escapes high button boots, and the [illegible] sailor is very girlish.

MIDSUMMER CLOTHES.

Autumn Presses Closely Upon the Heels of Summer.

Midsummer is usually the signal for changes and modifications in the summer fashions. Spring clothes begin to show wear, and to demand renewal, and our fickle minds begin to look for something different.

Does it not seem strange that American men should not have adopted long since a more suitable August attire than blue serge and tan shoes? However, if men persist in conservatism in this respect, women make up for it, for no woman in the world indulges in summer clothes to the same extent as the American woman.

The women of other nations from reasons connected with climate or temperament, or an inborn sense of economy, may wear silks or thin wool, but we insist upon our ephemeral materials, and every year produces new ones for us. This, of course, is a taffeta season, and we are all wearing it accordingly. In order to cater to both parties we combine it with net, lawn, muslin and organdie in the form of colored basques, coatees and the sleeveless jackets, which it is now possible to buy separately in the department stores. What are called "porch frocks" are sold in great variety.

It is a good thing for one of the principal products of our own country that we so generally adopt the cotton fabrics for summer wear. But regard we this, as the French say. Some months ago an active cotton crusade to "help the south" was inaugurated with great blowing of trumpets. It was demonstrated to us how many varied articles were made of cotton, and endless were the surprises of finding, for example, that one's white "London ivory" comb was really made of southern cotton.

We were urged to give up linen bed coverings and take to the less frigid cotton ones; even the superior lightness and washableness of cotton blankets were pointed out to us. Ardent crusaders implored us to relinquish the silk petticoats, which widened skirts had just caused us to adopt, and take to cotton substitutes. Everybody talked cotton for a few weeks, and then the whole subject died a natural death until the Parisian designers, who know nothing about the south and care less, suddenly revived it with the decree of two washable petticoats under the summer's flounced gowns.

Care of the Stove.

To prevent your gas stove from rusting inside of your oven or outside surface use a few drops of linseed oil on a cloth and rub over thoroughly. This can also be used on coal ranges or other style iron stoves, after which you use stove paste to which a few drops of black coffee are added to moisten paste, and then brush over. It will polish up quickly and reward you with brilliant luster.

Metal Polish.

A high polish for metals is made by mixing two ounces of prepared chalk, three-quarters of an ounce of pipeclay, [illegible] of white lead, a [illegible] of carbonate of magnesia and a [illegible]

LONGFELLOW'S HOME.

Craigie House Is to Be Preserved For Use of the Public.

Longfellow's home, Craigie House, in Cambridge, is to be preserved for the public. Several months ago, says the Boston Transcript, it was learned from the filing of the will of Mrs. Richard Henry Dana (Edith Longfellow Dana), daughter of the poet, the surviving heirs agreed to intrust the house to three trustees, together with a sum of money for upkeep, for a triple purpose: (1) "As a specimen of the best colonial architecture of the eighteenth century;" (2) "As a historical monument of the occupation of the house by George Washington during the siege of Boston in the Revolutionary war;" (3) "As a memorial to Henry Wordsworth Longfellow."

Longfellow heirs may live in the house by paying rent. When the time comes that no surviving heir wishes to do that the mansion is to be managed solely as a memorial "for the benefit of the public." Thus, definitely and without further action, Craigie House is placed forever among the state's public monuments to art and patriotism and to celebrate equally one who pleaded for justice, humanity and, particularly, the beautiful.

War and Trade.

Pessimists predict that when the war is over the great increase in the foreign trade of the United States will not continue, but not so does history teach. A lap lost in the race of national progress is lost forever. When Spain fell back after the Armada and the Netherlands forged ahead the Netherlands stayed, and when Cromwell crippled the Dutch 100 years later and England forged ahead England stayed ahead. If the United States does not keep the vantage ground gained during this war it will be a new phenomenon in history.—World's Work.

Street Car Seat Reform.

The new subway cars in New York city are equipped with seats specially designed to sustain the body in a comfortable and healthful sitting posture. The seat has the additional advantage, for feminine users, that "the head can be held upright in moderate sized hats and is not thrust forward when one leans back in the seat." The seats have the approval of the American Posture league, an organization formed to promote the use of hygienic seating appliances in schools, vehicles, etc.

Alaskan Forest Divided.

The area of the Chugach national forest, Alaska, which is to be crossed by the railroad that the government is building from Seward to Fairbanks, is reduced nearly one-half by a proclamation signed by President Wilson returning approximately 5,000,000 acres to the public domain. This action follows classification of the land by the forest service, showing that the areas involved are not of high enough timber value to warrant government protection.

Demand For Better Carton.

The Scientific American calls for the invention of a carton for containing foods and other merchandise, saying that any one who will devise a carton "better structurally, more effectually sealed against moisture or other atmospheric conditions, of a distinctive shape or as equally satisfactory in important respects and cheaper than the cartons now used, will find a demand almost beyond imagination."

Bullets In Their Flight.

A writer in Popular Mechanics tells of seeing in their flight bullets traveling at the rate of 2,700 feet per second. A dark background was necessary and a sun at right angles to the course. The flying missiles made a silvery flash as vivid as if of lightning.

OUR OLD LIBERTY BELL.

Text From Which the Inscription It Bears Was Taken.

For fifty years after that July day in 1776, when the old bell rang out its memorable message, it continued to be rung on every festival and anniversary. It was rung on Feb. 22, 1832, in honor of the centennial of the birth of Washington. While being tolled on the morning of July 8, 1835, in memory of Chief Justice Marshall, who had died two days before, the old relic suddenly cracked. On Washington's birthday, 1845, an attempt was made to ring it, but the bell has since been mute.

Finally it was removed from its position in the tower to a lower story, and later it was placed on its original timbers in the vestibule of the statehouse in a prominent position immediately beneath where a larger bell, presented to Philadelphia in 1866, now proclaims the passing hours.

To Isaac Norris, the speaker of the colonial assembly, is ascribed the honor of having originally suggested the prophetic words from Leviticus xxv, 10, "Proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof," which were cast on the bell. The reason for the selection of this text at a time when there was not the slightest thought of a break with the mother country has been a subject of much conjecture, but the true reason is apparent when the full text is read, "And ye shall hallow the fiftieth year and proclaim liberty throughout the land and to all the inhabitants thereof." In selecting the text the Quakers had in mind the arrival of William Penn and their forefathers in America.—[illegible] Herald.

Easy & Practical Home Dress Making Lessons

Prepared Especially For This Newspaper by Pictorial Review

WHOLLY PLEASING IS THIS FROCK.

A charming little frock in blue indestructible voile, trimmed with silk braid and accordion pleated taffeta frills.

Decidedly chic and serviceable is this frock of blue indestructible voile, trimmed with vest, collar and revers of white satin, although any other color may be substituted. There are two ways of developing the front of the waist, however, for instead of rolling back, the revers may be turned forward and fastened in pointed effect across the bust with a button or other ornament. The four-piece skirt is pleated and closes at the left side front. The vest is part of an underbody with high neck, but without sleeves. Outlining the lower fronts, the belt and the peplum is narrow silk braid. To make the dress, in average size, requires 3⅜ yards 54-inch material, with ⅞ yard silk 36 inches wide for underbody front and back, and ¾ yard 2-inch belting for stay.

The underbody front and back are cut from a single width of the 36-inch material, but in cutting out the skirt and overblouse of the dress the 54-inch voile will have to be folded to be used to best advantage. One-half fold of material is required for all except the front and back gores of the skirt, which are cut from ¼ fold of 54-inch voile.

The back, collar and belt sections are laid along a lengthwise fold of the goods so that they will be seamless. The side gore is cut on a lengthwise thread of the voile so that the two sides are cut at once, insuring uniformity. The sleeve and overblouse front are placed on a lengthwise thread of material, opposite the back, collar and belt sections. Next to the overblouse front is the cuff, and following the cuff is the piecing for the side gores, the piecing being laid along the selvage edge.

In cutting the back and front gores of the skirt from a quarter fold of material be sure that the selvages meet; then see that the sections for these gores are laid along the lengthwise fold. Reference to the cutting guide will show just how this must be arranged.

The neckline can be changed to any desired shape, but the "V" and standing collar effects are most popular.

Wants Land For Peasants.

A demand that the Porto Rico government put its peasants on the land is made by A. F. of L. Organizer Iglesias in the official newspaper of the Federation of Labor. The trade unionist says absentee property owners and foreign corporations have grown rich through agriculture and the [illegible] offered by modern conditions. Industrial depression and speculation are at their height, and rents, interest rates and living costs have risen proportionately.

LABOR SAVING.

Various Devices That Assist the Housekeeper.

How efficient is your home? How well does it perform its functions? There are problems to be solved therein every whit as engrossing as the business of the wage earning head of the family. But, thanks to modern devices, it is not impossible to solve them. For instance, take the vacuum cleaner. It will do the work of a maid in a very small percentage of the time it would take her to perform the same work. Of course its first cost is rather large, at least $25, but the saving in the long run is so great that no woman who ever has the tiniest bit of money to spend on making her home comfortable should resist buying one.

If the woman does much of her work herself—if she is one of the domestic women for whom happiness lies in doing the work of the house well—there are electric devices that will take the load of heavy work from her shoulders and yet give her the satisfaction of knowing that she has done her work herself. Electric fans are considered necessities by many business men. Surely if this is so electric motors to run the sewing machine and the washing machine and the dishwashing machine are necessities for the housewife. If you do your housework yourself, why don't you look into this matter of labor saving devices for the home?

There is one other necessity to efficient labor—comfortable shoes. The time has come when every young college girl or professional woman throws appearances to the winds and walks forth in low heels and roomy toes. Her feet may not be as beautiful as formerly, but her general appearance, the swing and grace caused by being comfortably shod, makes up for it. The shoes she wears cost $5 and may be had in all leathers and [illegible], from kid to Russian calf.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Open Air Exercise.

"Walk, walk, walk!" urged Benjamin Franklin. The United States public health service gives the same advice in a bulletin addressed particularly to persons who are more than forty years old. "Take daily exercise," says the bulletin. "Have a hobby that gets you out of doors. Walk to your business or to your dressmaker. Walk just for the sake of walking. Join a walking club and keep your weekly score of miles. Keep chickens, make a garden, play golf—anything to get two hours of outdoor exercise every day." The advice is not new, but it is sound and useful.

TRIED TO BE POLITE.

And Now He Vows That He Will Never Again Beg Pardon.

Jones had just trod on the toe of an old gentleman, after getting into the street car.

"I beg your pardon," he said.

"Hey? Speak louder. I'm a trifle deaf."

"I beg your pardon," repeated Jones.

"H'm! Peggy starving? Well, I'm sorry. Who's Peggy?"

Jones was red in the face now, and the other passengers began to take notice.

"You misunderstand, sir!" he shouted.

"Hey?"

"You misunderstood!"

"Miss Underwood, is she? Peggy, who is starving, is Miss Underwood? Well?"

"I didn't say anything about Miss Underwood!" screamed Jones. "I begged your pardon, and you misunderstood."

"Oh, now I see!" said the old man sympathetically. "It is your Aunt Peggy who is starving Miss Underwood. Well, why don't you report the case at once to the police?"—Pearson's Weekly.

The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

SOME RELISHES.

SWEET GHERKINS.—Fill a tub with salt water strong enough to bear up an egg. Put gherkins not over a finger long in this and let them stand nine days. Take them out and harden them by letting them stand in fresh cold water for several hours; then spread them out on a folded tablecloth to free them of moisture. Pack them in glass quart jars, fill with cold vinegar and set them aside for three weeks in a cool place; then open the jars, drain off the vinegar and to that of each jar add one cupful of sugar, one-half teaspoonful of extract of mace and the same of extract of cloves and cinnamon and cayenne pepper to taste. Stir until the sugar is dissolved, pour the liquid over the pickles, close the jars and set in a cool place.

Pickled Beets That Will Keep.—Six beets, two ounces of whole peppers, two pints of vinegar, one blade of mace, one-half ounce of whole ginger and twelve cloves. Wash beets carefully, taking care not to break the fiber or they will bleed and lose their color. Boil them in plenty of boiling salted water for one hour and a half. Take them up, peel and cut them in slices an eighth of an inch thick and put them in a jar. Boil one pint of the vinegar with the whole peppers, mace, cloves and ginger and when boiled for five minutes add to it the other pint of cold vinegar.

Mango Pepper Relish.—Seven large [illegible] peppers (five green, two red), one fine grained (large) cabbage, one-third cupful of salt, one cupful of sugar, two heaping tablespoonfuls whole white mustard seed, vinegar enough to cover. Run peppers through meat grinder, using finest gauge. Squeeze out the juice from the chopped peppers and put them into a porcelain or granite pan. Grind cabbage, mix all together thoroughly. Barely cover with vinegar.

Apple Pickle.—Cut sweet apples, after paring, into pieces the right size to go into cans. Cook in water until tender, then put into cans and keep warm while the pickle is heating. Boil together two pounds of sugar, one pint of vinegar, one-half ounce each of cinnamon bark and cloves. Put the spice in a bag. Turn over the cooked apples in the cans while hot and seal. [illegible] more [illegible] if [illegible] and [illegible] not to cook too long.

"THE WISHING RING," QUIRK ATTRACTION

Today's offering at The Quirk includes Vivian Martin in a Shubert feature, "The Wishing Ring." This photoplay in five acts tells of the daughter of the parson of a poor church. The daughter had artistic instincts. She wanted flowers to adorn the church. In order to get them she invaded a garden against the owner's commands. The gardener became annoyed at the disappearance of flowers and in a quarrel with a servant the latter slapped the florist over the face with an apron.

The parson's daughter continues her raids and is caught in a theft by a young college student who is employed temporarily by the gardener. The student takes pity upon her and soon a friendship results. In one of their walks they meet a gypsy who tells the girl she will marry a nobleman and ... girl believes the coincidence a reply to her wishes. Here the story assumes the character of a real "Peg o' My Heart."

NAILS PENNANT TO PHIL MAST

Alexander Nearly Invincible Against Braves---Quakers Account for Long Wallops When They Are Needed.

Boston.—Philadelphia today won the National League championship for 1915, with Alexander pitching a one-hit game against the present titleholding Braves. The score was 5 to 0. The defeat of the Braves makes it possible for the league leaders to lose all the remaining games and still have a clear title to first place.

Among the spectators were some of the Boston American players, the probable competitors of Philadelphia in the World's Series. Manager Carrigan, of the Red Sox, watched the play carefully. "It seems to be a well-rounded combination, but I'm sure we can beat them," he remarked.

It was "Patsy Moran Day" at the Braves' field, and several thousand persons turned out especially to honor the visiting manager. Most of them came from Fitchburg, his home town. Governor David I. Walsh presented Moran with a great floral horse shoe.

ST. LOUIS HAS BEST FED CHANCE

With the Federal League pennant race only four more days to run, the position of the three leaders is so close that Pittsburgh has only five points of an advantage in the percentage column over St. Louis, which was crowded into third place by losing yesterday to Kansas City while Chicago defeated Pittsburgh. So close are the leaders today that the game today may upset all three positions. If Pittsburgh should lose and the other two teams win, Chicago would lead and St. Louis would resume second place. On the other hand, If Pittsburgh and St. Louis should win and Chicago lose, Chicago would be a poor third. With Pittsburgh and Chicago fighting each other, St. Louis apparently should have the best opportunity for victory, as it has already won more games than the others and has fewer to play.

JOHN WARD PROVED TO BE A GOOD BOXER

John Ward, of this city, has returned from a summer's tour of the eastern states with a carnival company. Mr. Ward managed an athletic show, which included boxing and wrestling exhibitions and, according to the press notices given the show, it went big with the yokels in New England. Mr. Ward took on several aspirants to fistic prowess and in the majority of instances, easily won the forfeit purse posted by the show. Mr. Ward is arranging ... carnival ... next year.

AUTO DRIVER SHOWED HIS IRON NERVE

Vanderbilt Cup Winner showed the iron nerve of which he is possessed, when, regardless of the fact that his body was enveloped in flames and his flesh was being seared, he manipulated his racer with accuracy and precision when the oil burst into a blaze as Grant was speeding at a 100-mile clip on the Sheepshead Bay auto speedway Monday. The fire in Grant's machine broke out while he was on the second circuit around the speedway in the Aster Cup elimination races. The speeding car was near the top of the bank, which is twenty-seven feet high at the highest point, when there was a back fire from the machine. Flames sprung up just behind Grant, tongues of fire flapping over his legs. Had he thrown on the emergency brakes, the car with Grant and his mechaniciian would have leaped down the twenty-seven foot incline and both he and his mechanician would have been killed. Onlookers expected to see this very thing happen. They were amazed therefore when they saw the flame-swept driver slow up gradually and bring his car little by little down the slope to the apron at the foot where he was safe. Earl Cooper, seeing Grant's flight, flew around the course in his big racer with the roar of a thousand machine guns. He picked Grant up and with the same speed shot out of the grounds and down Ocean Parkway to the Coney Island hospital, where Grant is hovering between life and death. Grant's action not only saved the life of his mechanician but the lives of the many other auto races who had followed Grant in his circuit around the course.

Telephone Messages Sent from Coast to Coast With No Wires to Carry Sound

"Yesterday afternoon the human voice traveled across the continent from the Atlantic to the Pacific withoue the aid of wires, by means of apparatus and methods developed by the engineers of the Bell system," said W. J. O'Mea, of Rochester, district manager of the New York Telephone Company, last night.

"President T. N. Vail, of the American Telephone and Telegraph company, sitting in the offices of the company, New York, spoke into a Bell telephone connetted by wires of the Bell system with the wireless tower at Arlington, Va., and his words were transmitted by wireless telephony to Mare Island, near San Francisco. This latest and most remarkable triumph of the telephone art was under the direct supervision of John J. Carty, chief engineer of the American Telephone and Telegraph company, who has been in San Francisco for several weeks. He received President Vail's messages at Mare Island and repeated them back to Arlington by wire.

"The demonstration was held by permission of the navy authorities at the radio station and the experiments were witnessed and verified by them. After President Vail's messages, U. N. Bethell, senior vice-president, and J. I. Waterbury, a director of the American Telephone and Telegraph company, and Bancroft Gherardie, the engineer of the plant, also talked into the telephone, were heard at Mare Island and their words were repeated back to Mr. Carty.

"The transcontinental wireless telephone employs radically new ideas in wireless workings, which have been invented and developed by the general engineering staff of the American Telephone and Telegraph company under the direction of President Vail. It is interesting to note that in starting this first message on its flight through the ether to the Pacific Coast President Vail used a Bell Telephone designed for wire working.

"At 12:48 o'clock, eastern time, the President picked up a Bell transmitter and called into it; 'Hello, Carty, this is Mr. Vall.' In spite of the fact that the words went by wire to Arlington and then leaped through the air to the Pacific Coast, Engineer Carty's reply came back almost instantly. 'This is fine! This is wonderful!'

"And the group of men gathered together on opposite sides of the continent knew that wireless transcontinental telephony would henceforth be numbered among the miracles of modern sciences. After a conversation with Mr. Carty, Mr. Vail followed by others present and in all cases the talkers were informed by the listeners at Mare Island that their voices were distinct and recognizable.

"Eerlier in the day a similar and equally successful demonstration took place at Arlington. Engineers of the American Telephone and Telegraph company and officers of the army and navy talked direct to Mare Island by wireless.

"The Bell's wireless system is not yet fully installed at Mare Island, the receiving apparatus only being in position there. It was impossible, therefore, for messages to be telephoned back by wireless, but all the messages sent from or by the way of Arlington were recorded at Mare Island and were confiremed by the officials in their report by wire."

JEWISH SYNAGOGUE ORGANIZED IN CITY

Movement the Outcome of a Desire to Build Up Fulton for Fulton People---Fifty Jewish Families Live Here and Most of Them Place Stamp of Approval Upon Merchants' Suggestion.

Tentative plans were made last night at a meeting of more than fifty Jewish residents for the organization of a Jewish synagogue in Fulton. Sunday night another meeting will be held, at which the final plans for the new church will be discussed. Last night's gathering was at the home of Samuel Waldhorn, corner of Oneida and 4th sts. Included in the group were Mr. and Mrs. I. Alderman, Mr. and Mrs. A. Alderman and family, and the families of the Messrs. Shapiro, Prowda, Rosenbloom, Katz, Fox and two families from Oswego, Weiner and Cohen.

The interested ones were present at Mr. Waldhorn's invitation to celebrate the feast of Zimhastorah, which event is in direct contrast to Yum Kippur, a solemn observence, when Hebrews fast for twenty-four hours and abstain from all pleasures. As a part of the ceremonies last night all the children present formed in line, carrying special flags, upon the staffs of which were perched candles, and paraded about the rooms.

The suggestion to form a local synagogue met with hearty approval from all present and before the evening's celebration was terminated practically each man present had explicitly stated what assistance he would render. One man promised to pay for the heating of the house of worship, another volunteered to purchase the necessary paraphernalia for the equipment of the pulpit, and so on. The guests were addressed on the subject by each man present. Only recently the Jews in Oswego formed a synagogue, thus doing away with the necessity of going to Syracuse to worship. During the holidays of a week or so ago and for years past the Jewish residents of Fulton went to Syracuse to attend services.

Defeated Turkish Troops Fleeing Toward Bagdad by Road and River

London.—The British forces operating in Mesopotamia have reached a point ninety miles from Bagdad and continue in pursuit of the retreating Turks, according to a statement issued last night by Mr. J. Austin Chamberlain, Secretary of India.

British cavalry entered Kut-el-Amara, ninety miles southeast of Bagdad on the Tigris river, on Wednesday, the report states. The town was found to be deserted by the Turks in flight toward Bagdad by road and river. Along the river gunboats and steamships with an Indian brigade aboard started in pursuit. An aeroplane dropped bombs on one of the Turkish vessels.

"The total prisoners captured aggregate 1,650," Mr. Chamberlain said, "and more are coming in. The Turkish force, which is commanded by Nereddin Pacha, is estimated at 8,000 regular troops who are assisted by a considerable number of tribesmen.

"The captured positions showed the trenches had been constructed with remarkable thoroughness, having communication trenches extending for miles and a system of contact mines."

MOVING PICTURE TRUST DISSOLVED BY COURT

District Court today decided the anti-trust dissolution suit against the Motion Picture Patents Company in favor of the government.

The Motion Picture Patents Company is a holding concern. The government charged that it controlled almost all of theh motion picture patents in the United States and also had a large interest in the American rights in foreign patents.

The suit was heard more than a year ago by Judge Oliver B. Dicwinson, whose decision is a sweeping victory for the United States Department of Justice.

The government charged that the Motion Picture Patents Company and other defendants were engaged in interstate and foreign commerce in motion pictures, films, cameras, exhibiting machines and other articles and apparatus used in the motion picture art, in violation of the anti-trust law.

The property loss in the stricken territory will reach more than $5,000,000 and appeals for help are coming in from many places. The storm today was central over the upper Ohio valley and was moving eastward with diminished intensity and an accompaniment of heavy rain.

SECOND MOTOR CYCLE FAVORED BY FIRE AND POLICE BOARD; 32 ARRESTS

Thirty-six arrests during the past month were reported last night to the Fire and Police Board by Chief of Police Edward Dyer. This record for the maintenance of good order in the city has never been surpassed.

As usual, the arrests for intoxication were numerous, totaling 28; assault in third degree, 1; petit larceny, 1; violations of excise law, 2. Fines amounting to $92 were imposed and almost all of this amount was collected.

A report of the activity of the motorcycle police was made and from the conversation last evening the commissioners may deem it advisable to purchase another machine. For hurry calls, and patrol duty, the motor has proven itself invaluable, and one officer is able to cover unlimited territory in a short time. Only one arrest for auto speeding has been reported since the purchase of the machine. The cost of maintaining it is very small.

Chief Waugh of the Fire Department reported three fires during the past month, only one of which resulted in a material loss. The question of pressure at the fire hydrants has also been taken up, and the activity of the water department in repairing costly leaks in water mains has resulted in greatly improved pressure at fires.

The commissioner discussed the purchase of an automobile fire truck, but the present state of the city's finances will not permit of the purchase of the apparatus at present.

LOSS OF SECOND LINE FATAL TO TWO GENERALS

French Say Nothing Can Save Crown Prince and von Heeringen---Battlefields Worst Scenes of Destruction in History.

Paris.—Tornadoes of shells continue ceaselessly to sweep the German second line of defense in Champagne. General Joffre is all the time feeling for weak spots at which to throw the blue waves of his legions. Already the French detachments have taken firm foothold in some advanced trenches in this second line which, like the first, consists of a series of entrenchments forming underground forts.

The French have made entrenched gains north of Massiges and Mesnil and along the road from Ville-sur-Tourbe to Cernay-en-Dormois. They hold the commanding height known as hill No. 190.

General Joffre's troops are not far from the railway lines which have been used for supplying the Germans in the Argonne.

The Germans admit the loss of hill No. 190, although claiming that the French detachments were exterminated after breaking through the second German line.

Disaster for Germans

It is true sometimes the French waves are swept back, but they are as irresistible as an oncoming tide. Military critics say that once this line is carried there is no third position which could save Germany from a great disaster, affecting particularly the Crown Prince's army in the Argonne and von Heeringen's north of Rheims.

A glance at the map, in fact, will reveal clearly that once the German line has been crumpled up toward Vouzlers the Crown Prince's troops around Verdum, and von Heeringen, at Laon, will be exposed to a convergent fire and will be obliged to retreat.

The Champagne battlefield immediately after the great advance of the week-end, I am told by a responsible eye witness, was a spectacle of such slaughter, destruction and desolation as to strike cold the hearts even of men who have [illegible] witnessed the worst horrors of this war.

Today, however, owing to tremendous improvement in the organization of the Red Cross and the Sanitary Departments, the shambles has been completely cleaned up with amazing speed and efficiency.

This is in striking contrast to the battle of the Marne, a year ago, when thousands of bodies of men and horses lay rotting in the hot sunshine for days. Health Minister Goddard himself superintended the cleaning up of the battlefield, speeding from point to point in an automobile, encouraging the stretchers [illegible] and pressing into service every [illegible] number of German prisoners.

GERMAN ARMY FAILS TO CHECK BRITISH RUSH

French Troops Push Forward Along Broad Front---Fighting the Most Desperate Since Battle of Artois---London Very Hopeful

London.—Not since theh battle of Artois last June has the western theatre seen fighting of such desperate and sanguinary character as that now in progress in Champagne, where the French, with a heroism the soldiers of the republic have never exceeded, are battering back the German front. Little less furious is the conflict in the western end of the line. Both the French and British are faced by strong German reinforcements, but in spite of this they are ploughing their way, foot by foot, toward the important communication lines in the German rear that support the entire Germany army, from Lille to Noyon.

Hill No. 191, north of Massiges, was stormed and captured yesterday by the French in connection with another general advance from the Suippes to theh Argonne forest. At places the advance was slow. Everywhere it was fiercely contested. But the big thing is that General Joffre's sturdy troops, as well as those of Field Marshal French, moved forward. At several points the French gained a footing in the second line, and at more than one spot they went right through the third chain of defenses. Here, however, the detachments in the van found themselves, inadequately supported, confronted by the German reserves, and they were compelled to fall back in alignment with the remainder of the battle front.

The battle for Hill No. 191 continued without ceasing for nearly forty-eight hours. The French on Monday gained the lower slopes of the height in their push north from Massigis. The Germans were well protected on the top, however, and withstood a most violent bombardment and repeated assaults. After every assault, however, the French dug themselves in on theh slope of the hill a little closer to the crest. Yesterday the men were ordered out on what proved to be the final charge. With a wild cheer they dashed up the hill, breasted a veritable hailstorm of rifle and machine gun bullets, threw themselves over thhe paranets of the German earthworks and, after a hand to hand fight in the trenches, were in full possession of thhe eminence.

There is a distinct feeling in London that the comparative brevity of the official reports yesterday conceals greater victories than have been announced. I learn on what I regard as the highest possible authority that theh truth of the great offensive has not been half told.

London.—The sailing vessel Helen Beyon has been sunk. Her crew was saved. The Helen Beyon is not mentioned in maratime records.

FARMERS SLOW, SAYS DAIRYMAN

Produce Grower Thinks Chamber of Commerce Should Come to Farmers' Aid---Canestota Man Buys Land Cheaper Here Than In Home Town---Modern Methods Would Make Fulton Famous

"The farmers must have assistance from the city, and as far as Fulton and its rural section is concerned, my first suggestion is that the Chamber of Commerce interest itself in maintaining a department of that body which would comprise all the farmers within a reasonable distance of the town." This is the declaration of Fred Vogelsang, one of the largest cultivators of muck land in this vicinity. "The possibilities of the undeveloped lands, especially the muck lands, are enormous," he continued, "but the farmers lack interest to realize all the possibilities of their farms. I mean by this, we have undoubtedly the best muck land to be found anywhere, still it can be bought for $50 an acre, and even lower, while at Canastota, inferior muck land brings $100 an acre. To enforce my argument that the Canastota land is surpassed by ours, I cite the instance of James Murphy, a large grower of Canastota, who is negotiating for the purchase of 60 acres of muck land in this vicinity. Mr. Murphy has made the statement that a change to this region would be to his advantage."

Interviews with other farmers bring forth similar opinions. Organization of the farmers will also compel a number of the "old timers" to adopt modern methods of cultivation. It is well known that by liberal use of fertilizer, a large yield can be had; still, the "old timers" will not listen to suggestions by their sons and the younger farm hands to change the old methods.

"With proper attention no better lettuce or celery than ours can be grown anywhere in the country," said a farmer who is an advocate of modern methods of cultivation, and who is himself a graduate of the agricultural college at Cornell. "The few efforts made to exhibit our muck land products have brought complete success. At several agricultural exhibitions Fulton lettuce has taken first prize. At the last New York State Fair for instance, most of the prizes went to Massachusetts and Canada growers—simply because no Fulton lettuce was shown. To spread about the country the motto, "Grown in Fulton," would advertise the town, and the idea of the Chamber of Commerce looking after the farmers is as important as promoting the welfare of the city. Why, six years ago at Cornell, one of our growers took every prize on potatoes.

Thousands of acres of muck land are still to be developed in this county and the land can be bought for a "song."

"A. W. Wiltsie heads a department already established in the Chamber of Commerce which is intended to bring about better rural conditions, and I suggest that Mr. Wiltsie consult with members of the Grange, who are in hearty accord with the idea of a large organization within the Chamber of Commerce for the benefit of the farmer. We should have a city market and we shall have one if concerted effort will bring it about.

Bulgarian Troops Marching on Serbia; Teutons Add to Forces

Athens.—The cities of Athens and Pireans and the Macedonia districts of Salonica, Florina, Seres and Kavala are under martial law today by action of the Greek Parliament.

The government's action in ordering a general mobilization has been ratified and Parliament has authorized a loan of 150,000 drachmin ($30,000,000) to cover expenses for the mobilization. A bill also was passed providing relief for families of soldiers in case of war.

Premier Venizelos was enthusiastically received on his arrival at the building and later when he entered the Chamber.

"In spite of these explanations, the situation remains grave," the premier warned his hearers. "The state affairs brought about by the mobilization cannot continue indefinitely, the more so as it is known that Bulgaria no longer accepts the situation as established by treaty between herself and her neighbors.

"The Greek people are prepared to defend the integrity of Greek territory and to withstand the effort of any other nation to make itself predominant in the Balkans."

The massing of Teutonic troops on the Serbian frontier Orsova continues. It is estimated that there are 500,000 Austro-German troops already concentrated, of whom 350,000 are Germans.

The Bulgarians also are moving troops toward Serbia. One hundred thousand men already are on the frontier, while a dozen military trains loaded with troops and material pass through Philipoplis daily. Bulgarian agents in Greece and Turkey recently have been purchasing all the horses available. Four German submarines are said to have arrived at Varna, Bulgarian port on the Black Sea.

An authority on the cotton trade, the Cotton Gazette of Liverpool, points out that the exports of American cotton to a certain group of north Europe neutral countries increased the last cotton year over the preceding 1,253,[illegible] bales. The figures show increase from 80,360 bales to 1,333,360 bales. The question at issue is whether this increase directly or indirectly benefited one group of belligerents to the detriment of the other group. Sweden, Holland, Norway and Denmark were the countries benefited, in this order, Sweden importing 710,080 bales against [illegible] the year before and Holland [illegible],820 against 34,130 the year before. The big increase may be due to shrewd speculation, for it is conceivable that the commodity might be cheap in the United States, yet be scarce and very dear when wanted over there. Again, these countries may now manufacture the home consumption goods formerly bought abroad, and may even be selling in markets formerly absorbed by countries now at war. The problem seems too big to be solved justly through ex parte proceedings by one interest involved.

The majority of the people of this country have long stood for a firm [illegible] policy and for small armament. When the present crisis is passed opinion may revert with greater force than ever to old ideals. The lesson of the world war serves to emphasize war's horrors and the blessings of peace. Theoretically the civilized world stood for peace up to 1914. Now England, France and Russia are preparing to fight to the bitter end, and Italy frankly avows that she fights for territory. It is not likely that the Teutons will inaugurate and head a peace movement, so the world is practically committed to the policy of strife. In recasting our thought as to armament it is well to take into account the world's reactionary trend today and whether our geographical isolation is a guaranty of immunity.

The drift from country to town continues, and that alarmingly in some of the older states. The call of the shop and factory with work and a pay envelope for father, mother and boys and girls has much to do with the hegiras, although country dullness must be taken into account. The telephone, auto and machine music have done much to [illegible], but there is yet room for improvement in making country life more attractive. A few widely separated railroads and good wagon roads show what communications will do for the inland regions. Good roads will people the solitudes, but no roads will leave even garden lands uninhabited. Roadbuilding philanthropy would not be a waste of money.

Very often people wonder where our slang phrases or expressions originate. In many instances they may be traced to the classics. For example, "Nobody home," a passing favorite, is a [illegible] extract from the [illegible] of Alexander Pope, one of the greatest of English [illegible]:

You beat your pate and fancy wit will come;
Knock as you please, there's nobody at home.

What might have been had the big war found Russia and England prepared is a favorite theme for speculation and [illegible]. But it should not be overlooked that one or both might have used up their preparedness in fruitless preliminary wars and perhaps be worse off than at present.

It speaks well for the agricultural industry of this country that 60 per cent of the farms are worked by their owners, that [illegible] per cent of the farms owned are free from encumbrance and [illegible] per cent are unencumbered.

THE ARKANSAS WAY

Mr. F. D. Van Amburgh, in the October number of the "Silent Partner," says, "Just because you happen to slip on a cake of soap while taking a bath, don't give up the soap altogether."

If it were within the province of this newspaper to advise instead of making suggestions, Mr. Van Amburgh's thought would be addressed to the Agricultural Division of the Chamber of Commerce, but in order that no room shall be left for a charge of presumptuous conduct, the thought is left with the reader to soak in, at the same time passing on to a subject which should be near and dear to the hearts of the men who comprise the Division.

This same column has contained for several days articles bearing upon the self-help sought by the people of Texas, that they may be extricated from a forlorn condition due to raising one crop only and being compelled to buy the necessities of life—flesh food, vegetables, etc. Continuing in the same strain of argument for diversity of crops, The Evening Times is prepared to furnish new facts that throw light upon the methods pursued by the men of Arkansas who found it necessary to turn from the old to the new order of things. There the cotton market forced the necessity of immediate action upon farmer, merchant and banker. The governor of the state called a meeting and numerous suggestions were made for relief, one of which was to reduce the cotton production by law. The conference also favored Federal aid for the cotton growers, but U. S. Senator Clark said there was no use asking Washington to help relieve the situation, as the problem was one for the people of the state to handle. The advice was accepted and a state-wide agricultural campaign was directed by the Little Rock Chamber of Commerce and other interests. The purpose of the campaign was to impress upon the people of Arkansas the necessity of making farms feed the state's people; to grow cattle, hogs, poultry and to have a garden for every home; to have good schools; good roads; and a million new people to occupy the farms and cities of Arkansas.

The big campaign was carried on for a period of 35 days, and not once did the business men of the towns and cities ask the farmers to come to town to hear the lectures, but in 500 different communities in the territory covered, campaign committees were organized and automobiles and buggies were donated by the people to carry the speakers into the country to HOLD MEETINGS ON THE FARMS. The campaign was carried to the people, the people were not asked to come to the campaign.

Owing to its geographical location, Arkansas might be accused of slipping on the cake of soap, yet such does not appear to be the case. The lesson comes right home to us, if we want to feel the exhilarating effects of the bath we must not mind the fall we had last time we stepped on the cake of soap. There have been many falls in our efforts to make neighbors of the farmers, but sharp contact with the hard substances ought to remind us that the only way we can accomplish anything is to go out and dig—dig for the neighborly spirit; meet the farmer at his work and give him the message which we have been expecting him to come into the town to receive.

Is not the Arkansas way the way you want to be treated?

HOMEMADE

Can you tell me why it is that men will go out of their way to patronize out-of-town industries? These men are nationally patriotic, locally home-loving, and will contribute any reasonable sum to any rational cause in the interests of civic pride or progress.

But they will insist on buying things made of town.

They want to see business better at home. They will spend much money and a lot of time toward any honest effort to bring business to town, but after it gets located in town, and really deserves success, they start sending for things made in the big cities. They start to make the cities larger, and the towns smaller. This is exactly what they do.

The real amount of their purchases may not make or may not break the local institution, but it is unquestionably a mighty poor plan to buy a fine horse, put him in the stable and fail to feed him.

By and by the horse develops the prehistoric disposition in him—proves to be a mule, and just when you want him to work he balks, strikes and kicks. And her uns away, over into the next town, where the local folks feed better.—The Silent Partner.

Mayor Mitchel's Economy.

A triumph in economy has been scored by the Mitchell administration. The salary of the court stenographer in Manhattan and the Bronx has been cut from $3,000 to $2,940 a year. The incumbent, David A. Veitch, has been in city employ for 49 years.

Reward for 49 years' faithful service: A cut in salary of $60.

The administration is preparing to spend $30,000,000 for a marginal railroad, $6,000,000 for a garbage disposal plant, $20,000,000 for a court house. Tens of thousands are spent for red automobiles for swaggering officials.

But $60 cut from a stenographer's pay after a lifetime of service is offered as an evidence of devotion to economy.

Of course, it is humbug, buncombe, hypocritical pretense. But did ever anything quite so contemptibly petty ever emanate from the executive officials of a great city—N. Y. American.

Better Tax Laws.

The tax amendment to the constitution ought to receive the support of citizens who are in favor of a fair distribution of the burden of government. The proposition will enable the state to correct many abuses and will bring about equity in assessment. There are rural communities chuckling over a supposed advantage; so many counties have this idea that the mere number rather proves that the supposed advantage is a delusion. It is quite time that assessments were uniform and that property owners in all sections of the state had confidence in the fairness of the assessment. By common consent property devoted to industry is not taxed as heavily as other property. The new constitution will permit the enactment of statutes to place industry in a class entitled to favors, but with equality as between one factory and another in different localities. There is a case in this state of a corporation testifying before a congressional committee that it had an investment of $5,000,000 in a certain tax unit, yet the corporation paid taxes on only $500,000. The three assessors of the town worked for the corporation. It will not be denied that this abuse needs correction. The assessors should be the servants of the people, not of the corporation. The new constitution will afford the legislature an opportunity to enact remedial legislation along this line. There are many things in the tax laws needing correction which cannot be reformed until the tax provision of the new constitution is adopted.—Watertown Standard.

A Transaction in Votes.

The length to which corrupt politicians in Indianapolis were willing to plunge, in their desperate attempts to control the city and county in the interests of "invisible government," is shown by evidence just brought out in the trial of the mayor of the city, on the charge of conspiracy. One of the indicted officials, who has pleaded guilty and has turned state's evidence, testified that a block of eight votes was purchased outright by the agents of a powerful political and financial syndicate for 80 cents, or 10 cents each.

Just what means were adopted by the syndicate to finance the vote-getting proposition was not clearly set forth by the witness. Whether participants in the pool were given bonds bearing 5 per cent. interest, and allowed to stipulate that the proceeds should be expended in dry or wet goods dealt in by the capitalists, has not transpired.. But men who are endowed with the financial ability to pur chase the vote of an American citizen for a dime may be depended upon for in some manner recouping for themselves the greater portion of the bribe money.

It must not be understood that this particular transaction fixes definitely the price or free and independent voters of Indianapolis. Mayor Bell is only one of a large number of city and county officials under indictment at Indianapolis, and there are others who are clamoring for the opportunity to aid the state and, incidentally, to lessen their own punishment. Hence it is well within the range of possibilities that, in some of the safer wards of the city and towns of the country, voters were bunched like radishes and sold at wholesale at the rate of five for a nickel.—Rochester Express.

WITH THE SUFFRAGISTS

The hobble skirt proved conclusively to the wife of the vice-president of the United States that women ought not to vote, but the men who were hampered most in their business by the hobble skirt, the street car conductors, disagree with Mrs. Marshall. The Amalgamated Association of Street and Railway employes of American in its recent 14th biennial convention came out unanimously in favor of woman suffrage.

* * *

A canvass of the members of the House of Representatives made by the suffragists has shown that 206 is the minimum number sure to vote, for the woman suffrage amendment. This shows an increase of thirty-six votes over the 174 votes cast for suffrage in that body last January. This ought to diminish the ardor with which Alice Hill Chittenden, president of the New York anti-suffragists, announces to her audiences that woman suffrage is "going not coming."

* * *

That with or without thev ote, woman is in politics to stay is shown by the appointment of a woman, Mrs. Ladd, of Sturbridge, as member of the Massachusetts Board of Agriculture.

* * *

Unheralded and unsung woman suffrage has been found to have existed for a quarter of a century in the Jewish cities of Palestine which now number forty. A more interesting discovery is that it came without a battle or even a question. It was assumed in the beginning that women were people with the same interest in public affairs as men.

* * *

In reference to a recentr uling by a North Carolina Justice to the effect that a woman could not be a notary public because it was a public office and must be held by a voter, the Ashville News says:

The women certainly seem to "have the goods on the court for, if the court's ruling that a notary is an officer holds good, a great deal of confusion may arise with regard to legal documents attested by notaries who held two offices at the same time when the holding of one precluded the holding of the other."

Men should be very careful that their zeal to shut women out from the political peached plum does not raise the bars on themselves as well.

* * *

"It is time other states stopped pointing their fingers at Colorado and begin to think of following her example," said Senator Helen Ring Robinson in a New York interview, "The last Colorado Legislature passed an Industrial Disputes Act which has already prevented one strike that threatened Denver. It is the most advanced industrial legislation now in force in any state in the Union."

PROGRESSIVES TO USE NEWSPAPER SPACE

New York.—The question of increasing the enrollment of the Progressive party in this state and the attitude of the party toward the new constitution occupied discussion at the annual meeting of the Progressive county chairmen held here. No definite action was taken on either subject, but among suggestions made on the enrollment proposition was one that the chairman should resort to newspaper advertising on an extensive scale. Opinions in the matter of the Constitution were diversified and it was finally decided to tabe the matter until the subject could be given further study and then have the state chairman call a meeting for the purpose of putting the party on record.

LIQUOR LICENSES COST MORE AFTER TODAY

Albany.—The law increasing the cost of retail liquor licenses 25 per cent. became operative today. As a result of the additional charge the number of applications for renewals received at the State Department of Excise was considerably less than in former years. The term of William W. Farley of Binghamton as state excise commissioner expired today.

Strangle Education With Scholarship

By A. E. Winship, Editor of Journal of Education, Boston, Mass.

Standards are as essential as laws, and as vital as books of pedigree.

The significant feature of standardization is knowing what is significant in standardization. There is no education that is not standardized; but overstandardization leads to collapse as surely as does overtraining for a college crew; and false standardization leads to disgrace and crime as definitely and in much the same way as buncoing weak, rich women into paying tens of thousands of dollars for de luxe books merely worth dollars on the promise that they can resell them at a fabulous advance.

The danger, and it is a great danger, is that men who are standardizing, with millions behind them, are trying to strangle education with scholarship. These men have never seen that scholarship is no more education than a manikin is a man.

Education is a thing of life and scholarship is lifeless. Scholarship deals only with what has been; education deals wholly with what is and is to be. Scholarship faces our grandfathers; education faces our grandchildren.

These modern standardizers are afraid of education because it is alive. It may be uncomfortable. They do not like life because there are all sorts of dangers in anything alive. For instance, a manikin never has blood poison, fever, pneumonia or any other ailment. It can be kept in a closet without danger of petrifaction. It is a beautiful thing to look at, illustrates delightfully, lasts forever.

Scholarship is standardized to death because it deals with the dead. Standardizers have opposed every new idea, and they always will. Standardizers tried to prevent anyone's believing that the earth rotated.

They crucified Jesus, imprisoned Paul, and they drove Semmelweis to insanity in Vienna less than sixty years ago because he reduced the death rate in childbirth from 12 in 100 to 3 in 100 by insisting that the physician should wash his hands before he attended the patient. Standardized physicians insisted that this was a reflection upon the standardization.

They positively refused to do so simple a thing as that because it was new. Semmelweis and his school reduced the death rate so low that they persecuted him to insanity. There was nothing in their scholarship that suggested clean hands.

They fought Pasteur like fiends incarnate because he was conquering hydrophobia, and they fiercely assailed Lister because his theory of treatment was not of their standards.

But all the standardizers of the past were harmless as compared with those of today, because they merely had the gravitation of human nature and inherited prejudice to overcome, while today limitless millions are put in the hands of men for use in strangling every new idea that breathes in an educational institution.

A professor who prefers education to scholarship realizes that the almshouse threatens him while a luxurious old age might await him. An institution that prefers live education to dead scholarship sees its doom.

The standardization of today is a wolf in sheep's clothing. It is using every art and device of bribery to deceive the public. Under the pretense that they are protecting the public from youthful inconstancy the advocates of standardization are infusing germs of senility.

To standardize in the right direction, standardize nothing backward, but standardize everything forward and upward.

Neighborhood of Your Advertising

By HERBERT KAUFMAN

Author of "Do Something! Be Something!"

CIRCULATION is a commodity which must be bought with the same common sense used in selecting potatoes, cloth and real estate. It can be measured and weighed—it is merchandise with a probable value. It varies just as much as the grocer's green stuff, the tailor's fabrics and the lots of the real estate man.

Your cook refuses to accept green and rotten tomatoes at the price of perfect ones. She does not calculate the number of vegetables that are delivered to her, but those that she can use. When your wife selects a piece of cloth she first makes sure that it will serve the purpose she has in view. When you buy a piece of property you consider the neighborhood as well as the ground. Just so when you buy advertising you must find out how much of the circulation you can use. You must judge the neighborhoods where your copy will be read, with the same thoughtfulness that you devoted to selecting the spot where your goods are sold.

A dealer in precious stones would be foolish to open up in a tenement district, and equally short-sighted, to tell about his jewelry in a newspaper largely distributed there. Out of a thousand men and women who might see what he had to say not ten of them could afford to buy his goods. These thousand readers would be mass without muscle. He could make them willing to do business with him, but their incomes wouldn't let them become customers.

One of the greatest mistakes in publicity is to drop your lines where the fish can't take your bait.

Circulation is, as you see, a very interesting subject, but very few people know anything about it. It would surprise you to know that this ignorance often extends to the business offices of newspapers. I have known publishers to continually mistake the class of their readers and have met hundreds of them who had the most fantastic ideas upon the figures of their circulation.

While I would not be so harsh as to accuse them of anything more than being mistaken, none the less their tendency to infect others with this misinformation renders it extremely advisable for you to become a member of the Missouri society—and "be shown."

MEXICAN WOMEN PLEAD FOR BREAD

"Shoot Us!" They Cry—Ordered From Food Line.

DESPERATE LIFE STRUGGLE.

"Death Must Come, but Don't Let Us Starve; the Bullet Is More Merciful." Meanwhile Mexican Bandits, Bolder Than Ever, Are Sparing Neither Rich Nor Poor.

Torreon, Mexico.—Starvation conditions in Mexico City are fairly typical of central northern, northeastern and northwestern Mexico.

Northern Mexico has long since forgotten the principles of the revolution, the political, agricultural, financial and social "reforms" which were the slogans of Villa and Carranza. To the great mass of Mexicans those principles never were more than campaign talk. They understand that the military leaders are merely playing politics with guns instead of speeches, processions and votes.

To make matters worse, the Mexican bandits never were bolder or busier than they are now. With the always chaotic government of Mexico more chaotic than ever, the bandit raiders are sparing neither the poor nor the rich. They are mercilessly plying their trade.

In Torreon eggs sell for 1½ pesos each; chickens, 25 to 35 pesos each; milk, a peso for half a liter; cigarettes (as much an article of food to a Mexican as bread), 2½ and 3 pesos for a package of ten. A silver peso is worth about 13 cents in United States money and a paper peso about 7 cents. Practically there is no meat here, though the hotels occasionally are allotted a little by the government.

Torreon always has a bread line. It is a long, patient, black robed line of women with bowed heads. Ablebodied men have either been killed or wounded in the fighting or are in conscript service or in hiding. So women and children stand in the bread line in front of the panaderia, or municipal bakery.

While the supply lasts each is given a pittance of cornmeal, sometimes a mere handful. When the supply is gone some turn away to forage in the garbage cans of more prosperous citizens. Others just wait in the bread line. Sometimes they faint before the doors open; sometimes they drop dead, and their bodies lie in the street. There are several of these panaderias, and a line averages 250 persons all the time. Some buy bread instead of taking flour. A tiny loaf of bread, hardly larger than a roll, sells for 50 centavos.

At one of the larger panaderias the crowd waited thirty-six hours. Then gendarmes appeared and ordered the women to leave. They did not refuse to disperse; they simply didn't go. The gendarmes repeated the order loudly and fired pistols in the air. A torrent of Spanish broke out from the women.

"Shoot us!" they cried. "Death must come. Shoot us, but don't let us starve to death. The bullet is more merciful."

Torreon is full of Villa troops, mostly elderly men or young boys. The flower of his army is dead or disabled, principally dead. The army of today is not well uniformed, spick and span, as it was a year ago when Villa was triumphant and his treasury was full of money. Villa's forces are thin, hardened, morose, the result of many battles and a succession of defeats. All that prevents mutiny is fear of the big brown man with the bushy mustache and the blazing eyes—Villa.

The army is sober. So is the civilian population. Knowing that sotol, tequila, mescal and the whole line of native strong drink tend to inflame men and make them ugly, Villa has enforced prohibition.

Northern Mexico is full of wounded men. In the hospitals and on the streets of Torreon and Chihuahua City are about 12,000.

The Blow of a Wave.

There is an instrument of English invention which is employed to determine the measure of the blow of a wave. This instrument was used to measure the wave blow off the Skerryvore rock, Scotland. There the waves sweep in from the wide Atlantic. In summer a force of over 600 pounds to the square foot was recorded. In winter as high as a ton to the square foot was attained. These figures give some idea as to what ships, lighthouses and other similar structures have to contend with during stress of foul weather.

WAR THREATENS RUIN TO SWISS HOTEL MEN

Appeal Made to Government For Aid by Mortgages.

Geneva.—Bereft of tourist patronage by the war, the Swiss hotel keepers in convention assembled have appealed to the government for relief. They want a state system of mortgages on furniture in inns and a delay of two years after the end of hostilities for the payment of interest on the mortgages.

There are about 4,000 tourist hotels in Switzerland, employing 43,000 people, with a yearly wage list of $5,600,000, and $227,000,000 capital is invested in the business.

More than $100,000,000 was spent by tourists in Switzerland in 1913, of which $1,000,000 went for postage stamps and souvenir cards, $400,000 was spent for telegrams and phone talks, $4,000,000 was taken by the railroads for fare and freight, and the balance, less a comparatively small amount for customs duties, was got by the hotels and shops in the proportion of eight to two.

These estimates are the official ones made public at the national exposition at Berne.

English, French, German and American travelers make 60 per cent of the Swiss tourist trade. The war came early enough in the summer of 1914 to reduce the hotel receipts 40 per cent.

This season there has been practically no business.

FINDS BOY LOST YEARS.

Was Located in Company of Strange Man in Texas.

Fort Worth, Tex.—A four-year search through the United States and Canada for her eight-year-old son was ended here by Mrs. Julia Delo of Quebec, Canada, who identified the boy held by authorities here since the arrest of E. S. Carroll on March 5 as her son.

Carroll had been arrested on a charge of assault. He had been traveling around the country with the boy. Both told conflicting stories and were ordered held. Carroll, officials said, probably will be charged with abduction.

The boy recognized his mother immediately, although he was only four when he disappeared from home. Carroll's attorney filed a habeas corpus petition to regain possession of the child.

Marries Five Hundred Couples.

Rome, Ga.—Rev. T. R. Hanson, who resides five miles from Cave Spring, in this county, has reported to Ordinary Johnson that he had just solemnized the five hundredth marriage during his residence here.

FOR HUMANITY.

The labor movement is the force for humanity which was made necessary by the economic interests that sacrificed everything to profits and glorified material achievement.

It is a great progress of people moving steadily, irresistibly toward freedom, a march whose beginning is lost in the distance of the past, whose sturdy tramp, tramp, reverberates down the ages and keeps steadily on. It seeks to gather into its ranks men, women and children. It would protect the weary and the heartsick, those whose bodies and souls are scarred and maimed by injustice, those whose very bones bear the marks of the cruelty of industrial greed.—Samuel Gompers.

GREAT UNION PLANNED.

Movement on Foot to Amalgamate All Workers on Railroads.

The movement of New England railroad engineers and firemen to gather all the union men into a powerful labor organization to be known as the Industrial Labor union may be extended throughout the country. Labor leaders are discussing the agitation for the co-operation of all the railroad workers of the country within the confines of one organization.

Not only was the announcement of the New England plan received favorably, but officials of railroad unions referred to a speech made by a union leader in Denver recently wherein were outlined the plans for uniting all of the divisions of the unions of the western railroads.

George H. Sines, vice president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen said the suggestion for federated action on the part of the railroad unions is being spread broadcast. He said the idea of federated action has been proved successful—that is, all the different unions of railroad workmen in one locality have united on one general proposition and invariably have been able to put through their plan to a triumphant conclusion.

The demand for co-operation of all the unions in the west is reported by labor leaders to be more emphatic than in the east. The western leaders are quoted as criticising the awards made to the workers by the various arbitration boards.

Because of this widespread dissatisfaction the scheme of federation among the different unions is said to be gaining daily in favor in the west and there seems to be little doubt that the amalgamation of the east and the western groups will be effected easily.

EMPLOYER MUST PAY.

Compensation Law Puts Increased Responsibility on Master.

The increased responsibility of the master for injuries to his servant where compensation laws have been enacted, is illustrated in a recent case in which a workman passed by a fellow workman who, "in a spirit of play swung his arm around, either to knock off decedent's hat or to strike him, whereupon the decedent, in dodging the attack, slipped on the descending concrete floor, fell and sustained injuries which caused his death."

The ruling was:

"It is a matter of no consequence whether or not the workman, at the time he made the attack, was acting within the scope of his authority. In the case under consideration it appears that the defendant employed young men and boys. It is but natural to expect them to deport themselves as young men and boys replete with life and health. For workmen of that age or even of maturer years to indulge in a moment's diversion from work to joke with or play a prank upon a fellow workman is a matter of common knowledge to every one who employs labor. At any rate, it cannot be said that the attack made upon the decedent was so disconnected from the decedent's employment as to take it out of the class of risks reasonably incident to the employment of labor."

The Arctic Sea Cow.

The arctic sea cow, an enormous kind of walrus, used to herd in large numbers on Bering island. But in 1742 it was discovered by a passing ship and hunted with harpoons. Other ships arrived after this, and the startled sea monsters were pursued and speared with such persistency that in thirty-eight years there was not one left.

HOME TOWN HELPS

PROPER CARE OF THE LAWN

Grass Plot Must Never Be Neglected If Home Is to Have a Proper Appearance.

One of the most important duties on the home place during the summer is the care of the lawn. There is nothing about a place that makes so much for general attractiveness as a well cared for lawn.

Many people make the mistake of keeping the lawn cut too close. In that case the grass roots are exposed to hot sun and drying winds during the summer. Cut the lawn frequently, but do not set the machine too close. To keep the lawn looking clean at all times have a grass-catcher attachment on the mower. A careful watch for weeds on the lawn should be kept. Cut them out well below the surface with an old knife as soon as they are large enough to be seen.

A roller on the lawn is advisable, but it should be used with care. Lawns that have been rolled for a long time are likely to become over-rolled; there is surface cohesion or close packing of the top soil, which prevents the admission of air and healthy root development. The remedy is the use of the spiked tamper. A home-made one may be made by taking a piece of two-inch plank, some 12x12-inch timber and inserting four-inch spikes an inch and a half or two inches apart. Bore holes a little smaller than the spikes before driving them in, to prevent splitting the wood. Perforate the whole surface thoroughly with this, give a top dressing, lightly rake it in and water the whole thoroughly late in the afternoon.

HAVE TOP SASH SCREENED

May Be Considered Small Matter, But Is Always Advisable—Advice for Prospective Builder.

Don't forget that you may at some time want to open the top sash of the window, and that flies and mosquitoes are not particular as to through which sash they enter; therefore have the screen run from top to bottom of the window; to do this, side springs will be necessary in the screen frames, but they will cost little more than a screen which can be used only from the bottom sash and which is little better than no screen at all.

Don't forget that there will never be a better time to build than the present; materials of all kinds are cheaper than they have been for several years, and as soon as the European war is over there is sure to be a sharp advance in prices.

Don't say you can't build now because you have not enough money; if you have a little, the co-operative banks and building associations will loan you the balance needed upon terms under which you can pay for the house in monthly installments which would be no more than you would ordinarily be paying for rent.—Exchange.

The City Beautiful.

A one-time mayor of New York, George B. McClellan, said: "In a self-governing community, the ultimate object of the government is the happiness of the governed. Something more is needed to make the happy city than health and wealth and wisdom. The city healthy, the city wealthy, and the city wise, may excite satisfaction, complaisance and pride, but it is the city beautiful that compels and retains the love of people." When last the tree men of the South met at Riverside, in the music room of the famous Glenwood Mission inn, an illuminated sign stretched across the stage, which said: "Make your city beautiful and you will learn to love it."

PLAN SUPPER FOR CHARITY

The Delta Alpha Class of the Congregational Church to Hold Harvest Supper.

The Delta Alpha class of the Congregational church will hold a harvest supper Saturday night between the hours of 5 and 8 at the church. The receipts from the affair will go to charity. Mrs. Harry Nichols, who was appointed chairman for the supper has been suddenly called to Providence, R. I., and her place taken by Mrs. Lester Todd. Before leaving for Providence Mrs. Nichols had practically completed all arrangements and yesterday the regular work committee was busy at the church adding the finishing touches to the preparations. The work committee holds office for a year and is comprised of five women, Mrs. Charles Morris, Mrs. Geo. Althouse, Mrs. Hudson, Mrs. Harry Alexander and Mrs. George Simons.

Mrs. George Chubb is president of the class, Mrs. Lester Todd, vice-president, and Miss Clara Belts, the treasurer. The other offices are held by Mrs. George Dingles, secretary; Mrs. Hazel Alexander, corresponding secretary; Miss Pearl Park, class historian, and Mrs. Nellie Jones, water carrier.

At the last meeting of the class arrangements were made to send a barrel of clothing to a missionary agency at Jopa, Alabama. Part of the proceeds of Saturday night's affair will also go for this purpose. The next meeting will be held Friday night at the home of Mrs. George Greenwood, in West 1st st.

VIEW POINTS ON WEATHER DO DIFFER

"The chestnut yield this year will be light," said Chas. P. Bradford, at whose place of business hundreds of bushels of chestnuts are sold each season, and when asked the reason, he replied, "dry season, drought." A large potato grower just outside of Fulton, when interviewed in regard to the reported shortage of potatoes a few minutes afterwards volunteered this information: "The potato crop in Oswego county will be very light. Most of the spuds have rotted away and the quality which will be harvested will be very poor. The reason, we had too much rain!"

HONK! HONK! WATCH YOUR STEP IN BIG CITY

Edmond LaPorte, for the past six months city reporter and advertising agent of The Evening Times, will sever his connection with this paper today and will leave tonight for New York City, where he has accepted a lucrative position in the advertising department of a manufacturing company there.

During his stay in this city Mr. La Porte resided with his uncle, James W. Bogue, of South First st.

EUCHRE PARTY PLANNED BY C. R. AND B. A. COUNCIL

At a meeting of Council 100, C. R. and B. A., announcement was made that instead of a meeting next Thursday night a public euchre party will be held, the playing to start at 8:30 sharp. Members are advised that no meeting will be held next week, but thereafter meetings will be held weekly instead of every two weeks as has been the case during the summer.

MRS. ALICE SUTTON.

The death of Mrs. Alice Sutton, 63, wife of Addison Sutton, occurred early this morning at the family home, 122 Oak st. Surviving are the husband and five married daughters, Mrs. Norah Johnson and Mrs. Clara Chesbro, both of Pennellville, and Mrs. Maud Jarvis, Mrs. Madge Sherman and Mrs. Nellie Jones, all of this city. Also one brother, Charles Pickard, of Canon City, Col.

The funeral will be held Sunday at 12 o'clock from the home; services at the Pennellville Methodist church at 2 o'clock, and burial will be made in the Pennellvilel cemetery. Rev. Chas. Olmstead of Fulton will officiate.

JOHN HAMMOND.

John Hammond, formerly of Fulton, died this morning at Ogdensburg. The body will be brought to Fulton and burial made at Mt. Adnah. The funeral will take place at 2 o'clock on Sunday afternoon. Undertaker Cole is in charge of the arrangements.

WEATHER FORECAST

Rain tonight and probably Saturday; fresh north to northeast winds.

ACTIVITY IN CAMP OF SUFFRAGE WORKERS

With the equal suffrage campaign successfully started in Oswego last night, when Miss Sarah Muir, of Lincoln, Nebraska, addressed a crowd at the Gem Theatre, a whirlwind campaign will be under way before the end of the week, and before election day every nook and corner in Oswego county will have been visited. Today Miss Muir and Dr. Doane are arranging the details of the campaign, also for two street meetings to be held tomorrow night. Mexico and Pulaski are the objective points, and both of these towns will be visited in the same evening. At 7 o'clock Miss Muir will address a street meeting in Mexico and at 8 o'clock in Pulaski. Miss Muir has at her disposal an automobile with which hurried trips can be made from place to place. The first of next week will see active work started in Fulton in preparation for the monster mass meeting to be held here in the near future.

ONYX BOWLING ALLEYS OPEN UNDER POWELL

Manager Powell announces the opening of the Onyx bowling alleys tomorrow. During the vacation period the alleys have been given a thorough renovation and refinishing by the Brunswick-Collendar company's experts.

It is the aim of Manager Powell to organize for the 1915-16 season a much stronger city league than obtained last year. He will also organize a strong amateur league. That he may accomplish his desires he is anxious to receive the co-operation of every bowler in the city, particularly the captains of last year's teams. Mr. Powell's work in this line should be comparatively easy, for the reason that there are many young bowlers forging to the front, and who should make the older men hustle to keep up with the pace.

H. P. ALLEN TO SUCCED HIMSELF ON COMMITTEE

The new Republican county committee will meet in Oswego at the Hotel Danio Monday afternoon. There are few changes in the personnel of the committee and as far as this section is concerned the same committeemen will act. W. Lawson Woodbury, Harry C. Webb, H. Putnam Allen and Myron Stranahan of this city will represent this city at the meeting.

It is very probable that Mr. Allen will be re-elected to the office of secretary, and William C. Richards of Parish, as chairman, although it is reported that Mr. Richards intends to offer his resignation. In that event it is considered likely that a Fulton committeeman will be elected to the chairmanship.

CITY ENGINEER'S WIFE UNDERGOES OPERATION

Mrs. G. Clayton Hill of 50 West 5th st., underwent an operation for acute appendicitis at the Lee Memorial hospital yesterday. Dr. Wallace performed the operation, and it was reported this morning that the patient had shown no ill effects thus far, and indications point to her speedy recovery.

HUNTERS REPORT GAME AS BEING PLENTIFUL

The season for duck, rabbit, partridge and deer opened in this county this morning and before sunrise several Fulton sportsmen were out in the fields. Reports from those who returned to the cityt before noon today indicate that the game is plentiful this year and several lage bags were reported.

BOYS' FARM CLUBS AND TRAINING IN ROTATION

The success of boys' corn clubs and pig clubs in the South has led those in charge of the work in this section to plan for the extension of the movement through the formation of boys' farm clubs. In these clubs the boys who have already learned in the former organizations how to produce large yields of corn and the value of live stock will be taught the elementary principles of crop rotation, the economical feeding of live stock, and the upbuilding of the soil.

Without some system of rotation members of the corn clubs who have obtained large yields on their acre one year cannot repeat their performances the following season. The farm clubs, therefore, are designed to teach the boys best to use this acre the year after they have grown their corn. Each one of the members should own, or have the care of, at least one farm animal which should be carried on the acre, returning a profit to its owner and fertilizing the soil. The third year the acre is to be sown to corn again.

In this way the boys' clubs now provide a practical three years' course in the principles of sound agriculture. The importance of the movement is shown by the fact that nearly 75,000 boys are now enrolled in the corn clubs of the South, and several thousand more in pig clubs, not only learning thmselves, but furnishing an invaluable object lesson to the grown farmers around them.

Boys Are Careful.

The exact rotation that is followed in these farm clubs is, of course, determined by individual conditions. In some sections the acre should be sown to a cover crop for grazing and turning under in the spring. After this treatment, cowpeas, soy beans, or peanuts may be sown and prizes given for theg reatest yield. Elsewhere such crops as rye and crimson clover, rye and bur clover, or vetch and oats may be sown together. Excellent results have already been obtained by many boys with crimson clover, one reason being that they take more pains with inoculation than the average farmer.

For the smaller boys in the first years of their membership in the clubs one acre is probably enough to handle. The corn they require for their live stock may be obtained in exchange for small grain, hay, cowpeas, clover seed, or some other products of their acre, or else the average boy, by helping his father on a farm, may receive sufficient feed of corn in return for his labor. Older boys may, of course, find two acres none too much, putting one acre in corn and the other in the smaller grains and legumes.

In order to stimulate interest, the authorities in charge of this demonstration work are recommending that prizes be offered for legumes and for the small grain grown by the club members as well as for corn. If a boy uses his gain crop for grazing or turning under, he can compete for prizes on such crops as peanuts, beans, peas and lespedeza. It is also an excellent opportunity for valuable demonstration in the best methods of harvesting the seed of the clovers, vetch, etc.

After a year of this work, preparation should be made to plant the acre to corn again. The boy will then know much more about corn production and farming in general than when he first entered the club. At the end of the third year most of the club members will probably be compelled, for one reason or another, to leave the club. It is recommended that certificates signed by the highest authorities of the colleges and states should be given to every boy after three years' work of the character outlined.

FIRST WIRELESS TALK SURPASSED LATER

New York.—That wireless telephone communication from the Atlantic seaboard to Hawaii, a distance of 4,600 miles, is now an accomplished fact was announced to day at the offices of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company.

Exceeding even in success the transmission of the human voice from Arlington to Mare Island, Cal., a distance of 2,500 miles, accomplished last night, it was stated that subsequent experiments had resulted in successful telephone communication between Arlington, and the naval radio station at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii.

The distance over which this wireless communication was held is greater than the distance from New York to London, Paris, Berlin or Rome. The voice had to travel over the whole of the United States, a distance of 2,500 miles, before it encountered the more simple wireless conditions which exist over large bodies of water.

J. D. JR. TO SUBMIT NEW PLANS TO MINERS

Denver.—An industrial plan which John D. Rockefeller, Jr., characterized as "broader and more democratic than unionism" will be submitted to officers and employes of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Company at Pueblo on Saturday.

At the conference, besides Mr. Rockefeller, will be the principal operating officials of the company, all the mine superintendents and the grievance representatives of the various Colorado camps. Between fifty and sixty men are expected to attend.

In discussing the meeting Mr. Rockefeller declined to makep ublic in advance any details of the industrial plan which has been worked out by himself and W. L. Mackenzie King, in collaboration with President J. F. Welborn and other officers of the company. He said, however, that it was in no sense an attack upon union labor.

CLAIMS CITY DID NOT ENFORCE LAWS

Geneva.—Failure by the city to enforce the ordinance which prohibits the riding of bicycles on the sidewalks of streets which are paved, may result in the city being held liable for the injuries sustained by 5-year-old Evelyn King, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Calvin King of Pulteney st. The child was run down late Tuesday afternoon on the sidewalk in front of her home by Edward Stein, who was riding a bicycle. She received a fracture of the collar bone, numerous bruises and is still hysterical as a result of the accident.

NOT ONE BUT BOTH HEADLIGHTS REQUIRED

Motorists who apparently are unaware that to use one headlight on their machines is to set at defiance the state mandate.

To another car at night an automobile with one light takes on the appearance of a motorcycle until a few feet away, and if it happens to be the right headlight of the auto that is disabled it is a very easy matter for two cars to collide through no fault of the driver meeting the car with one headlight.

Most of the automobiles are now equipped with electric headlights. Frequently these lamps burn out and the motorist finds he is not supplied with an extra lamp or he decides that he will wait until he gets home before he fixes the light. And another cause of one of the lights going out is frequently from a loose connection caused by vibration. When a light goes out at night, it should be remedied at once, if the motorist believes in safety first methods and does not want to fracture the state highway law. He is laying himself open to arrest at any time when driving with but one headlight.

In reference to lights the State Motor Vehicle Law, under section 286, reads:

" * * * display at least two lighted lamps on the front and one on the rear of each vehicle, which shall also display a red light visible from the rear. * * The light of the front lamps shall be visible at least two hundred feet in the direction in which the motor vehicle is proceeding."

Oftentimes a motorist allows his batteries to run so low that there is not sufficient power in them to furnish him with an adequate light for his own safety, let alone the warning to others of his presence.

SYNOPSIS

Old Cyrus Martin, the head of the American soap trust, makes a bet of $20,000 with a friend, John Clark, a rival soapmaker, that his (Martin's) son Rodney would be making more money at the end of a year than Clark's son Ellery.

Martin takes his pretty secretary, Mary Grayson, into his confidence and enlists her co-operation. Rodney has been a spendthrift, and the father wants to make him reform and go to work.

Mary meets Rodney, and the son proposes marriage to her. Rodney tells his father about his proposal, and the old man pretends great anger. He tells Mary he will disinherit Rodney.

Rodney defies his father, and Mary is deeply touched at the lad's genuine affection for her. Mary makes a financial bargain with Martin to encourage the son to go to work.

Ambrose Peale, press agent, meets Rodney and agrees to go into business with the lad on a salary basis. Rodney has resolved to go into the soap industry and buck the trust.

Rodney, Peale and Mary go into the soap trade together. Rodney then endeavors to borrow $10,000 as capital for his newly formed company.

The offices of the "13 Soap company" are opened, and they advertise it as "the most expensive soap in the world." Peale talks advertising continually.

The 13 Soap company finds its expenses very heavy, and financial rocks loom ahead. Their chief business seems to have been to spend money for advertising under Peale's directions.

An alleged countess, who has appeared on the scene, desires to purchase the French rights for the sale of "13 Soap" and produces a draft for $15,000, which she desires to have cashed.

The "countess" is shown to be an impostor and [illegible] settles over the 13 Soap company. The firm introduces her, however, to Ellery Clark. Father Martin visits the offices.

Martin, fearing rumors that the new company would injure his business and might break the trust, offers to buy out the firm for $100,000 and give Rodney, Peale and Mary good positions. Then he learns that the company is "dead broke."

Suddenly out of a clear sky comes an order for 50,000 cakes of 13 Soap from the great firm of Brown & James of Chicago. "The tide has turned," the trio now declare.

The 13 Soap company having no factory cannot deliver. The trio endeavor to buy the cakes from branch offices of the Martin trust. They fail to get the necessary number, but send 5,000 cakes.

Mary, in despair, calls on old Martin. Rodney also appears. There they both learn that the father caused the sending of the telegram from Brown & James. Naturally they are amazed and mortified.

Peale arrives. He discourses at length to old Martin on the value of advertising and explains that the money spent on boosting 13 Soap was not wasted. Martin is unconvinced.

At last the partial shipment of 13 Soap, which had been sent to Chicago, begins to sell. Brown & James send a man to the Martin home to announce that the 5,000 cakes were gone at $1 apiece. They want more.

know him he's a nice kid. He's got a car, he loves to go to shows, he slips the head waiter $5, says, 'Bring us a good dinner and two bottles of 149;' he can sign checks anywhere and he's a grand little companion for a lonely dame like me. He looks forward to seeing me. He phones me every morning and just sticks around. He don't even try to hold my hand."

"Well, where do I come in?" Peale insisted.

"You're going to see him now," the countess said. "Just don't slip it to him I'm a grafter, will you? It'd bust up the whole thing. I'll play straight with him—just pals. You don't know how hard it is for girls like me. I never had a show. I ran away from home when I was a kid. I've been pretty up against it sometimes, and now this boy comes along and treats me fine. Is what I've done to other guys to butt in and queer me? Oh, Ambrose, don't bowl me out with Ellery!"

"Nix, nix!" said Peale, pulling out his handkerchief.

"Give me a chance to be on the square," went on the countess. "It ain't easy for a girl to fight it out just by herself, when she's all alone, no money, no friends and she's got to live—live on $5 a week in a back room lookin' out on a brick wall and cook over the gas. Food and clothes and live on $5 per: You got a lot for a good time, haven't you? That's what I had to do. Say, I was lonely sometimes. You've got to be pretty smart to steer straight. But I've done it—I've done it!"

With that she broke down and began to snivel.

"Now, see here, countess," said Peale kindly, patting her on the back. "Don't do that—don't, don't"— Then after a pause he added:

"Oh, quit it. Keep it for some poor boob who'll fall for it."

"Oh, Ambrose, don't talk like that," said the countess tearfully.

"Say, honest, it's foolish wasting it on me, kid," said Peale.

"Well, it's always worth trying once," said the girl, completely changing to a radiant smile.

"Sure it is" said Peale genially. "Why, you had me winging for a minute. But when you pulled that five a week gag I knew it was the antique phoney stuff."

"I learned it from a play. Great, isn't it? It always goes. But at that I'm on the level about Ellery. I just couldn't keep from drifting into dramatics. Do tell him I'm a real French dame."

"Absolutely," said Peale. "Hello, Peter Piccadilly," he added, as Ellery at last discovered them; "what brings you to the haunts of pleasure?"

He didn't wait for Ellery's answer, but promptly vacated the place at the girl's side and left them to each other and their fates.

In his present mood the meeting and the talk for all his chaff only strengthened the wings of his black butterflies. The sight of Ellery Clark completed his distaste with the whole sorry scheme of things, making him itch to remold it nearer to his heart's desire. Ellery Clark, that pinhead, went round with girls who trimmed him like the "countess," supplied with plenty of money by his doting father, while Rodney and Mary had to slave and worry.

CHAPTER XVII.

The Busy Countess.

IT was all wrong, unnatural. Something must be the matter between old Rodney and his father, Ambrose Peale reasoned, and he believed he knew what it was. He would go up and see old Mr. Martin at once, tonight, before it was too late. No, not tonight, tomorrow morning, Saturday, when the soap magnate would be home and the coast clear. No, Saturday afternoon after lunch, when people were more apt to feel gay and good natured.

That was how, as a consequence of this mood and various meetings and reflections, Ambrose Peale came to give his name to Johnson at the soap king's house next day.

Meanwhile in far away Chicago something of importance to the little company had taken place. The soap had begun to sell. One demand after another had come in and finally made an impression. It was as if a stone had been dropped in the puddle and the circles had widened out and out. The last ripple reached New York and Mr. Martin when Johnson came one day to the library and announced:

"I beg pardon. A gentleman to see you, sir," handing his master a card on a silver tray.

"Mr. Charles Bronson," read Martin. "What's he want?"

"He says he's from Brown & James, Chicago," said Johnson.

"Oh, a kick, I suppose. Send him in."

He had to confess, however, that Mr. Bronson of Chicago did not look like a kick when he came in, though his first words were ominous. He seemed very full of business, and his business, it seemed, was about 13 Soap.

"Well, what about it?" Mr. Martin demanded, not too graciously.

Mr. Bronson took his cue and was off. While of course they understand that the 13 Soap was made by Mr. Martin's son, Mr. Rodney Martin, at the same time, as he wired he would be responsible for that order, Brown & James felt that some one should first see him in the matter. They realized, of course, that Mr. Martin was backing his son.

"Well, why shouldn't I back him?" interrupted Martin gruffly.

"Of course, of course," Bronson agreed. "That is why we'd like to place our order through you."

Mr. Martin paused with his cigar in midair.

"Place your what?" he repeated in amazement as he beheld Mr. Bronson snap back the elastic from his russet leather order pad and hold his pencil over it.

"Through some error we received only 5,000 cakes," explained Bronson, "instead of 50,000. But that's all gone."

"All gone? What happened to it?"

"We've sold it."

Mr. Martin could not believe his ears.

"Sold it!" he ejaculated.

"Yes, and we want the balance of the original order you were kind enough to throw our way and as much more soap as we can get," went on Mr. Bronson briskly.

Mr. Martin could not understand it.

"But only the other day I had a letter from Brown & James saying they hadn't sold a cake," he said, puzzled.

Mr. Bronson laughed.

"I know, I know," he said. "We felt at first that of course there could be no popular market for a dollar soap—we weren't as farsighted as you were."

Mr. Martin cleared his throat.

"But of course when those extraordinary advertisements appeared, so different from your usual conservative publicity, well, the sales began immediately; we sold the 5,000 cakes in two days."

"And the advertising did it?" Mr. Martin ventured to inquire.

"Of course. What else?" said Bronson. He proceeded with further explanations. "Now we want to handle your goods exclusively in the west, with extensive immediate deliveries. Can that be arranged?"

The soap king paused a moment to reflect.

"It ought to be. What do you offer?" he said.

"I dare say we could contract for a quarter of a million cakes of soap," began Bronson glibly.

"A quarter of a million!" repeated Martin in an astonishment which Mr. Bronson evidently misunderstoood, for he added:

"Of course we might do a little better if we could settle the matter at once."

"I should have to consult my son first," said Mr. Martin at last, quite truthfully.

"Oh, then, perhaps I ought to go see him," said Mr. Bronson, rising. Mr. Martin rose also.

"Not at all—not at all. I'll attend to it," he said.

"But we thought that you would have full power," began Bronson, puzzled.

"As a matter of courtesy," Mr. Martin explained, "I should like to talk things over with my own boy."

"But you control the product?"

"Mr. Bronson, you can trust me to handle this thing."

"Of course, of course! When can I see you again?"

"In half an hour," Mr. Martin answered.

"Very well," said Mr. Bronson. "I've some matters to attend to. I'll be back in half an hour. It's a wonderful soap, Mr. Martin," he vouchsafed as he went out.

"Oh, wonderful," agreed Mr. Martin, dryly, watching Mr. Bronson go.

A wonderful soap, indeed; plain pink castile. But he would have to get in on this. He stepped hastily to the telephone.

"1313, Worth—Hello, is this the 13 Soap company?" he shouted in the receiver. "Just a minute. Is Mr. Rodney Martin in? No? Never mind who I am. Goodby. Johnson," he added as the butler appeared again, "call up my son's office every ten minutes and let me know the minute he comes in. Don't tell 'em who's calling."

"Yes, sir," said Johnson decicely.

"And when Mr. Bronson comes back be sure to have him wait for me."

"Yes, sir," said Johnson. "There's a lady to see you, sir. She speaks English now."

"She does, eh?" said Mr. Martin. "That's unusual, isn't it?"

"I mean, sir," said Johnson, "when she was here two months ago she could only talk French."

"Indeed. Well, I'm not interested in the languages she speaks. Who is she? What does she want?"

"She wishes to see you about the French rights of the 13 Soap," said Johnson.

"The what?" echoed Mr. Martin.

"The French right," repeated Johnson.

"Yes, sir."

He went out immediately and re-entered, followed by the countess gowned as usual in a charming frock and very fluent in her line of talk.

"The Countess de Bowreen," said Johnson.

Paris and Chicago met that afternoon in the library.

"How do you do?" began the clever countess, still at her games.

"How do you do?" said Mr. Martin politely.

"I am the Countess de Beaurien. Your son have told you of me?"

"No."

"I bet he have not. He is a cheat. He trick me."

"Well, well," thought Rodney's father, "this is serious."

"Now, my dear lady," he began.

"Attendez, you listen to me," the countess rattled on. "Two months ago I buy the French rights for the 13 Soap. I pay him $15,000, and now I cannot get any soap."

"You will have to see my son," said Martin, rather disgusted.

"But I have seen him," shrieked the countess, "and he give me no satisfaction. If I cannot get any soap I must have my money, one or the other, or I put him in the jail. He is a cheat. I have here se contract. I sue him in the court."

"My dear lady, you mustn't feel that way," said Martin, trying to soothe her.

"Feel! Ah, mon dieu," she cried. "I trick no one. I play fair. I am an honest woman." And she went off into a long speech in French, at the end of which she took out an alleged contract and waved it at him frantically.

"THE GALLOPER" A REMARKABLE PICTURE

FIRST RELEASE IN NEW GOLD ROOSTER SERIES SCORES BIG SUCCESS.

CLIFTON CRAWFORD HAS LEAD

Broadway Favorite Realizes Success in Photoplay Debut—Comedy With Dramatic Situations.

"The Galloper", the first of Pathe's new Gold Rooster Plays to be released, is worthy of the honor thus given to it. Richard Harding Davis, the author, is too well known both as author and dramatist to require any comment, therefore let it suffice to say that "The Galloper" is written in his best style and enjoyed a fine run on the stage. George Brackett Seitz adapted it for a five reel comedy-drama.

Two things in particular strike the observer as he views this fine production—first, the excellent direction—apparent in every scene—of Donald Mackenzie, the producer, and secondly, the really brilliant work done by Clifton Crawford, the famous comedian, in the title role. A character not in the original play, that of "The Unknown", has been inserted by Mr. Mackenzie, with excellent results. "The Unknown" is a Turkish spy, and he adds wonderfully to the humor of the play. He was Mr. Mackenzie's own conception and forms merely one of a number of examples of the producer's care and ability. Clifton Crawford proves himself to be an artist of the first rank and worth the very large salary which it is understood he received for appearing in this, his first picture. Without detracting from the fine ability shown by the rest of this really excellent cast, second honors go to Melville Stewart and Jessie Ralph, the first mentioned playing the part of a much married correspondent and the latter as a rich and unlovely widow with matrimonial designs. Fania Marinoff, Rhye Alexander and Sam Ryan give worthy support.

The story deals with a divorced war correspondent who divides his time between dodging alimony hunting divorced wives and various creditors. As a means of relief from his financial troubles he makes love to a brewer's widow, proposes and is accepted. War breaks out between Turkey and Greece, and he seizes the opportunity to dodge his troubles and a fiancee who does not appeal to him by going out as a war correspondent to Greece. It happens that a young American millionaire at the same time is sailing for Africa to hunt big game. On the same steamer are two charming girls who are going to the front as Red Cross nurses. One of them turns out to be the war correspondent's last wife; the millionaire immediately falls in love with the other. Arriving in Greece, the war correspondent finds dodging his former wife too strenuous and resigns his position. The millionaire offers to take his name and act as correspondent for him. From then on there are all sorts of comical misunderstandings, and situations. Scene after scene is a riot of laughter up to the very end where misunderstandings are cleared up, the millionaire is accepted by the Red Cross nurse, and the war correspondent re-united with his former wife.

Despite the fact that "The Galloper" is primarily a comedy, there is plenty of drama and much thrill to it. Pathe is to be congratulated on its first Gold Rooster Play, and Donald Mackenzie upon such a sterling production.

PATHE PITCHER SIGNED BY FEDS

Harry Crandall, Jr., crack pitcher on the Pathe baseball team, has been grabbed by the Federal League for next season. Manager Stallings of the Boston Braves was after him, but the Feds offered better inducements. Young Crandall has been combining working in Pathe pictures with pitching on the movie concern's baseball team, and has made a success of both. For the last four or five weeks he has been letting down opposing teams, which have been the strongest semi-pro organizations around New York, with two or three hits a game.

PEARL WHITE

"THE DIRECTOR WHO CROSSED MY PATH AT EVERY TURN IN CAREER—MR. THEODORE WHARTON."

By Pearl White—The Pathe Star.

Miss Pearl White, the famous moving picture star, can hardly be called superstitious, but she feels that Theodore Wharton, the Pathe producer, is her guiding star, and when he advises anything she can be depended upon to follow the advice without any question. She explains this feeling as follows:

"About five years ago I was leading woman of a stock company playing near New York, and was just about played out. I'd had no vacation in a long time, and my voice needed a rest. Mrs. O. A. Miller joined the company one week and suggested that I go into moving pictures. 'Sure! I'm willing,' said I, 'but where can I get a job?' She gave me a list of film companies, so the next morning I dressed in my best, went to the theatre, rehearsed my next week's play until noon, and then caught a train for New York. It was January, the thermometer was below zero, and there was several feet of snow on the ground. Oh, yes, be sure I remember it very well!

"Arriving in New York I set out on foot to a film studio in 19th Street. You see money was scarce with me then and I wanted to save that nickel. I asked to see the man who engaged the players and was asked to wait. After a while a man walked out and said, 'I am Mr. Wharton, the director, and the man who engages people.' I was very young and very small, and he seemed about eight feet tall. I asked him for a job and, as he afterwards admitted, he took me for a young thing from the country with a stage bee buzzing in her bonnet. So, in a very fatherly way he gave me a lot of advice, told me it was hard to get an engagement in pictures, and still harder to keep it—that if I had a job of any sort to stick to it. He said he had no opening for me at that time but later if I was in New York permanently, he might be able to use me once in a while.

"I went back to my show somewhat disappointed but still determined. The next week I came again to New York and saw the second name on my list. There the director took me more seriously, and offered me an engagement beginning with the next week. I stayed with that company for one year, and then determined to try a bigger concern. So I went over to Jersey to the Pathe Studio and asked to see a director. In a couple of minutes I was in the presence of Theodore Wharton again. This time he was more encouraging and recommended me to a fellow director. I was engaged and remained with Pathe for some years, but Theodore Wharton left the company the day after I joined and I didn't meet him again until my affairs again took a turn.

"I had just finished 'The Perils of Pauline' and my contract was nearly over with Pathe. I was undecided whether to stay in pictures or go back to the dramatic stage or into vaudeville. The Pathe people informed me that they wanted me to play in a new serial to be produced by some new directors. I was asked to meet them. I walked into the office and there was Theodore Wharton again! My mind was at once made up. I said to Mr. Wharton 'Every time my career takes a turn you cross my path first and it has always meant more success for me. I will play Elaine!'"

LEHIGH VALLEY R. R. GIVES BEST TRAIN FOR PATHE PICTURE.

The Whartons, who make motion pictures for Pathe, succeeded recently in securing the most remarkable concession ever obtained from a railroad. In filming the first episode of "Wallingford" it was necessary to show the private car in which that famous high financier dazzles the inhabitants of the little "tank" towns. The Lehigh Valley R. R. not only permitted the Whartons to attach a big steel flat car, properly equipped, to their best train, "The Black Diamond" Express, but stopped the train twice to allow for the taking of scenes. The special car had to be sent all the way from Buffalo for the purpose, but the railroad supplied that also, fixing it up specially according to the Whartons' instructions.

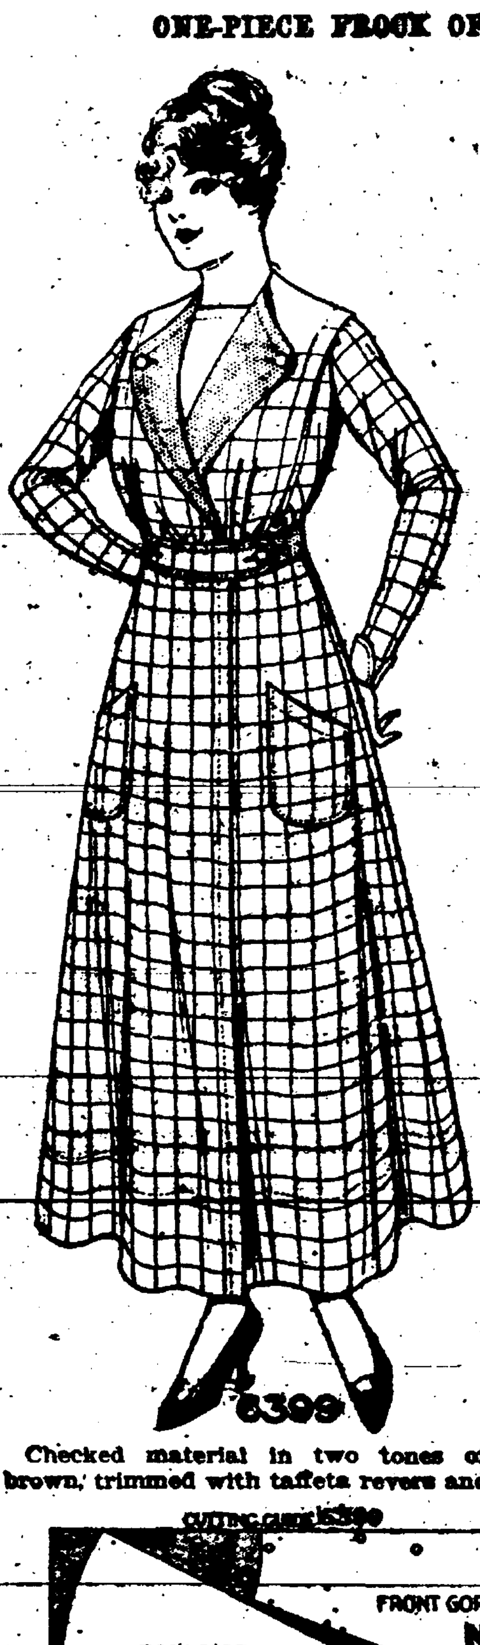
ONE-PIECE FROCK OF DIGNIFIED DESIGN.



Checked material in two tones of brown, trimmed with taffeta revers and organdy vest. Pockets and buttons are also used to advantage in the decoration of the design.

While there are a few extreme styles shown among the collection of one-piece frocks for Autumn, the majority of them are made along dignified lines. Checks continue fashionable and are used effectively for informal frocks. The model shown here is in two tones of brown, trimmed with revers of plain brown taffeta and a vest of white organdy. The upper edge of the vest is hemstitched.

To reproduce the model in medium size requires 3¼ yards 54-inch material, with ⅝ yard organdy or all-over lace for the vest and ½ yard taffeta for the revers.

Much sewing of seams is saved by the proper arrangement of the pattern on the goods before cutting. For instance, the back gore of the skirt is laid into position first, on a fold of the material. This is followed by the round collar, in case a high neck finish is preferred, and the belt sections. The last section to be laid on the fold of the goods is the back of the waist.

Next, taking the skirt, arrange the front gore on a lengthwise thread, placing the upper edge of the pattern as near to the back gore as possible. Next to the front gore is the sleeve; then follow the front of the waist and the pockets.

The single small "o" perforations on the shield indicate the two styles of neckline now fashionable, so that by cutting along either line the home dressmaker will be able to select the finish that best suits her.

Serge, gabardine, voile, chiffon poplin and whipcord are admirably suited to the development of this model.

Frock lines are particularly pleasing for the Fall and Winter Seasons. Semi-fitted lines of all kinds are good and are more in evidence than ever before.

Every woman who makes any pretensions to being "well-dressed" must have in her wardrobe nowadays a cloth or serviceable silk frock that can be worn for many occasions. Usually it is a one-piece frock.

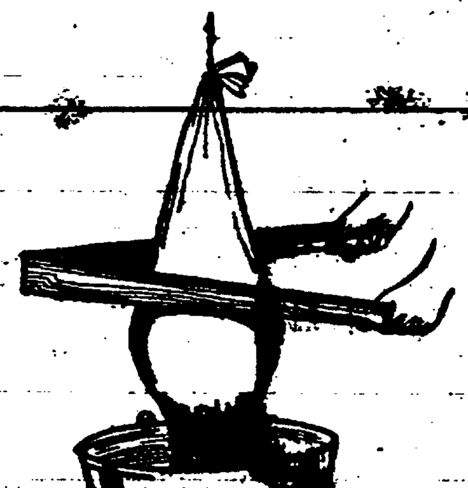
HELPFUL HINTS FOR HOUSEWIVES

Handy Contrivance For Pressing Jelly Bags.



The simple, handy contrivance here illustrated for busy jelly making days consists of two pieces of wood fifteen inches in length, joined at the larger ends with a stout hinge, says Farm and Fireside.

When the fruit is steamed and the juice ready to come off dump the whole of it into a bag, suspended by a string or hook on the draining rack, and slip under it a bowl or stewpan. Get the jelly sticks, and with a handle in each hand you may have the juice pressed out and on the stove again in a minute without the loss of temperature.

Fried Oysters.

Select the largest oysters, rinse quickly and lay carefully on a colander to drain. Dry quickly and gently with a soft cloth, handling as little as possible. Take a steel fork and catch it in the eye of the oyster, dip in egg and then in fine cracker dust back and forth, being careful not to use too much cracker dust, as that tends to disguise the flavor of the oyster. Use two eggs for a dozen and a half of oysters. Beat them up together, add a pinch of salt and a tablespoonful of boiling water. Have ready a frying pan, not too deep, with plenty of smoking hot olive oil or sweet lard to which add a little butter to aid in making the oysters crisp and brown. Put in only enough oysters to cover the bottom without crowding. When brown on one side turn over.

Grape Jelly.

For making jelly the grapes should not be overripe. Pick the grapes from the stems, wash and put over the fire with just enough water to prevent burning. Cook until very soft. Remove from the fire, strain through a fine sieve, then through a jelly bag to extract all the juice. Strain once more through cheesecloth. Now measure the juice and add to it an equal amount of hot sugar. Place over the fire, stirring well until thoroughly mixed; then let boil for fifteen minutes, skimming frequently. Pour into jelly glasses, and when cool seal with paraffin.

Pumpkin Custards.

Cook the pumpkin as for pumpkin pies. Press through a colander. Beat three eggs without separating, add to them two cupfuls of milk and one cupful of the pumpkin pulp. Season with one-half cupful of sugar and spices to taste. A teaspoonful of ground cloves, cinnamon and ginger mixed is nice. Mix all together thoroughly; then pour into teacups or individual pudding molds. Place these in a pan partly filled with warm water and bake until the custards are firm. Serve either hot or cold.

Baked Apples With Nuts.

Select apples of uniform size. Wash, dry and core them. Arrange in a baking dish. Fill the cavities with sugar, with which have been mixed finely chopped nut meats in the proportion of one-half cupful of the nuts to each cupful of the sugar. Bake until tender. Remove the apples carefully and place in a deep serving dish. Boil the sirup in the pan for five minutes; then pour over and around the apples. Serve cold.

Maryland Oyster Stew.

Take one quart oysters. Put one pint water in a saucepan and let it simmer, then rub the yolks of three hard boiled eggs and one spoonful of flour together and stir in. Put in also one-fourth pound butter in small pieces, one-half teaspoonful whole allspice, the juice of a lemon, salt and pepper. Let it simmer ten minutes, then add the oysters and serve immediately.

Grape Ketchup.

Wash and stew five pounds of grapes over a slow fire until soft. Strain through a sieve and add to the pulp two and one-half pounds of sugar, one tablespoonful each of ground cinnamon and allspice, one-half tablespoonful of ground cloves, one tablespoonful of black pepper, one-half tablespoonful of salt and one pint of vinegar. Boil until thick; then bottle and seal.

Autumn Hats on Fashion's Lines

Sailor shapes, oblong or boat shaped turbans and tricornes are the leading small hats, with variation of trimming. Fabric and plush covered shapes are in great variety. Dark colors generally prevail, but the combinations of two materials, of two colors and of two shades of one color, are seen in many of the shapes, both trimmed and untrimmed.

Many of the hat trimmings are put on in the form of applique—that is, they are plastered as flat as possible on the crown or on the brim or overlapping the edges either of the crown or of the brim. When not appliqued or flattened on to the hat the garnitures or ornaments are placed almost at right angles to the brim or to the crown.

Among novelties in trimming for between seasons and early fall are conventional floral motifs. They are unusual in coloring and fantastic in outline. The variety of ornaments in beaded effects is almost endless. There is a wonderful assortment of beaded bands for edging brims of wide sailors or of toques. There is also a wide assortment of small ornaments in the shape of birds, lizards, frogs, butterflies and other insects, small animals, etc., which are ready to sew on a covered shape. When properly attached they look as if embroidered by hand. There are also buckles made from beads and many beaded novelties made of cup beads and paillettes or spangles. The huge jet paillette is smart.

The most fashionable fall plumage trimming is an immense wing or pair of wings intended to trim broad brimmed hats and extending from the top of the crown across both sides of the brim. Smaller wings are used in sets of four or six and are very effective on large hats of felt, velvet or piece silk.

Ostrich pompons and jaunty little stickup effects of ostrich are used with crown bands or brim finishes of ostrich fringe or small ostrich tips. Owl heads are a popular trimming on dress and tailored hats. Sometimes they are used with two or more quills shooting from either side, or they may be posed over the joining of an ostrich plume or form the center knot of a ribbon bow.

Hand painted ostrich plumes are a novelty. Particularly interesting are the pompons or cockades of ostrich, designed to be used singly or in garlands or bands on large hats. Small ornaments in the form of mounted pompons, mounted on long stems of stripped ostrich, are seen in a variety of styles. Two harmonizing or two contrasting shades are used together on one hat.

When flowers are used as a trimming they are chosen to harmonize in color with some part of the fabric or material used in the shape or trimming. For instance, metal brocades in color are trimmed with a single blossom which repeats the color of the fabric. A single large flat rose is also used in the same manner as a buckle for centering ribbon loop bows. In this case the flower is in contrast with the ribbon. Grapes in pure white, in silver, in steel color and in the natural colors are used with novelties.

Worsted or crewel embroideries are another form of millinery ornaments, especially for misses and children's hats. Hats of velvet and silk have their brims decorated with fancy stitches done in heavy silk or worsted. This embroidery may be merely a very simple geometrical design in simple long and short stitch or it may be very intricate needlework. Brim edges finished in buttonhole stitch are smart, as are trimming bands cut out in round scallops, Vandyck points or tabs and buttonholed along the edges. Tassels of all sorts are among the popular fancies, drooping from brim edges or from the center of crowns.

Children's hats for fall are divided between two lines, those for very young children and those for young girls. The poke and the mushroom are the two popular shapes for very young children, while the simple toque and the sailor are the leading shapes for schoolgirls.

The hats for young children, while not of an elaborate character, are dressy, being in light colored velvets or with illuminating shades in trimming. Many little poke hats are faced with delicate pink or blue, and the floral trimmings are usually in the form of small bouquets set in applique fashion to the brims or crowns and are in the same delicate colorings.

Some very pretty hats have trimmings of silk soutache and silk tassels in contrasting color. For instance, a navy blue velvet with high crown and narrow, rolling brim has a trimming of soutache braiding in French blue and a dangling silk tassel of the same shade. Among the novelties in misses' hats are the sailors with slashed brims and the toques with pointed trimmings.

For Motorists.

Patent bottles, food jars, carafes and accessories are now regarded as necessaries by many, especially many who have automobiles. There are any number of new automobile luncheon sets, most of which are high grade in every particular, and the best are fitted out with the new vacuum butter jars, bottles and food boxes. There are usually two boxes, one in which to keep things hot and one in which to keep things cold. The sets are fully equipped with plates, knives, forks, spoons, napkins, sugar or preserve jars, salt and pepper shakers and nested drinking cups.

Boil for half an hour. When cold bottle and seal.

Plum Ketchup. — Four quarts of plums, one pound of sugar, one-half teaspoonful each of cloves, allspice and pepper and one teaspoonful of cinnamon. Add one quart of water to plums until fruit is tender; then press through a coarse sieve and return to kettle. Add the other ingredients and cook until thick, as desired. Bottle while hot.

Pickled Cauliflower.—Two cauliflowers, cut up; one pint small onions, three medium sized red peppers. Dissolve half a pint of salt in water enough to cover the vegetables and let stand overnight. Drain in the morning. Heat two quarts of vinegar with four tablespoonfuls of mustard until it boils. Add the vegetables and boil for about fifteen minutes or until a fork can be stuck through the cauliflower.

Green Grape Chutney.—Mix two quarts of seeded grapes, two quarts of pared and chopped apples, two cupfuls of raisins, one pint of sugar, one cupful of lemon juice, one cupful of vinegar, tablespoonful of salt, teaspoonful paprika and an ounce each of mustard and ginger. Let stand overnight in an earthenware dish. Cook slowly three hours in double boiler and bottle while hot. This is delicious with game or cold meat of any kind.

Hot Spice.—This is excellent to add to sauces and gravies. Take three drams each of ground ginger, black pepper, cinnamon, seven cloves, a half ounce of mace, a quarter ounce of cayenne pepper, one ounce of grated nutmeg and one and a half ounces of white pepper. Pound the ingredients and mix them thoroughly together, and when blended put them into a wide mouthed, clean, dry bottle and cork it tightly.

FERTILIZERS FOR CABBAGE

Ithaca.—A. E. Wilkinson, of the department of vegetable gardening of the New York State College of Agriculture at Cornell, will visit several farms in Monroe county to arrange for demonstrations of the right sort of fertilizer for cabbage growing. The college will furnish the fertilizer and farmers will lay out the plots and furnish the ground and labor.

Mr. Wilkinson will visit the farms several times in the season in company with any persons who wish to note the progress of the demonstrations. Farmers will furnish strips of land twenty-five feet wide and 300 feet long, prferably where no artificial fertilizer has been applied and where manure has not been used. If the latter has been used, however, it is said that it will make only a trifling difference in the demonstration. The farmer who owns the ground will furnish the cabbage plants for the area, will cultivate and look after them, will permit meetings of his neighbors to note the progress of the plots, and will harvest the crop in the presence of a member of the department of vegetable gardening of Cornell university.

Treatment of Plats.

The tract of ground will be divided into twelve plats, each twenty-five feet square and capable of growing eight rows of cabbage. The two ends and the middle plats will be used as checks, and will receive no treatment. The plats will receive the following amounts of fertilizer: Plat No. 2, 3.6 pounds of nitrate of soda; plat No. 3, 7.15 pounds of acid phosphate; plat No. 4, 3 pounds of muriate of potash; plat No. 5, 57.13 pounds of lime; plat No 7, 428 1-2 pounds of manure; plat No 8, 3.6 pounds of nitrate of soda and 3 pounds of muriate of potash; plat No. 9, 3.6 pounds of nitrate of soda and 7.15 pounds of acid phosphate; plat No. 10, 7.15 pounds of acid phosphate and 3 pounds of muriate of potash; plat No. 11, 3.6 pounds of nitrate of soda, 7.15 pounds of acid phosphate and 3 pounds of muriate of potash.

It will be seen that plat No. 11 will receive a combination of the three elements of fertilizer which are originally used. The whole experiment is based on the application of 1,000 lbs. to the acre of a "4-8-10 mixture."

MUSICAL EXTRAVANGAZA ALL NEXT WEEK

Manager Darleigh looks forward to a record-breaking week with the Billy Allen Musical Comedy Company which opens next Monday. The Billy Allen company is the favorite over all week-stand attractions. There is good reason for this, for each year the Billy Allen company returns larger, better and brighter than ever. Reports received from places where the show has been playing proclaim it to be the best ever offered at popular prices. The company consists of 35 people, and two baggage cars are required to transport the scenery, costumes and effects from town to town. All are well known productions commanding high royalties. Mr. Allen will play the leading comedy roles, supported by a large company of talented singers and dancers, including the famous Billy Allen Beauty Chorus. Monday's bill will be "Hot Old Time." Matinee Tuesday.

IT TOOK PHILLIES 32 YEARS TO GET THERE

Thirty-two years ago the Phillies started on the road that led to a National League pennant. They arrived Wednesday, just at dusk, after one of the longest trips ever taken, writes Grantland Rice in the New York Tribune. In that time they might have circled the world 200 times, or they might have visited the North and the South poles until they got dizzy. But after thirty-two years of wandering—after a journey that began in 1883—Alexander hauled them into port at last, using his great right arm for the purpose.

In all these thirty-two years the Phillies have finished second but three times—in 1887, under Harry Wright; in 1901, under Bill Shettsline, and in 1913, under Charlie Dooin. It remained for a new manager, with a collection of cast-offs, in the main, to end the long tour under the shadow of the olive and the laurel. It was also a worthy climax that Alexander should pack away what he had already gathered—the National League flag.

Chicago set the mark first when she rang u pfour world's series within five years. At that time the Cook county citadel was charged with having a monopoly on the big show. But that record, which ran from 1906 through 1910, with but one gap, is now retired by Philadelphia. With the exception of 1912, Philadelphia fanatics has enjoyed local world series thrills since 1910. In one of the last six years Philadelphia has had, or will have had, one section of the Big Stuff displayed before her popalace.

The total world series count, including 1915, stands as follows: Philadelphia, 6; Chicago, 4; New York, 4; Boston, 4; Detroit, 3; Pittsburgh, 2.

ELEVENS CLASH ON GRIDIRONS

Rain Makes Soggy Fields Here and at East Syracuse Where High Runs Up Against Strong Opposition—Team Changes Made

The fearless warriors of the Pre-Academic high school are opposing a junior football team from the high school on the playgrounds this afternoon, with a large crowd of admirers on hand. The Academics suffered a severe defeat at the hands of the high school team in the first game of the season and the younger boys after bolstering up weak spots and training hard are after the scalps of their heavier opponents today. The teams average 95 and 85 pounds, respectively, but the grammar school boys will make up for the discrepancy in weight by fast playing. "Buck" Green, coach, has supplied his men with a few plays which have been mastered and will no doubt bewilder their opponents.

The teams from the State street school, Phillips street, and Oak street, are requested to meet the manager of the Erie street team to arrange for games during the season. The manager of the Erie street school team makes the statement that weight will not be considered. The boys want games, and in order to play football, do not care particularly whom they oppose.

Mangeot, Judd and Lawton Play Against East Syracuse

The local high school football team opposes this afternoon the East Syracuse high school eleven in that town. The game is the first one of the season for the Fulton boys. A line on this year's material could not be gained before today's game, so that while the regular lineup has been announced, it is more than likely that several of the subs, among whom are Mangeot, Judd, and Lawton, will be given a chance to get in the game and perhaps displace one of the other men for the remainder of the season. The probable lineup in today's game will be: La Point, right end; Holly, right tackle; Gillespie, right guard; Richardson, center; Keans, left guard; M. Frawley, left tackle (Capt.); Barnes, left end; D. O'Brien, quarterback; Calkins, right half; E. Frawley, fullback; Johnson, left half.

GERMANS FAIL TO TURN TIDE OF BATTLE; MAKE COUNTER ATTACKS

Furious counter attacks and an extension of the active zone of battle were resorted to by the Germans yesterday in an effort to control the great Franso-British offensive. The counter attacks were particularly vicious against the French in the vicinity of Maison de Champagne, and the British north of Loos and east of Ypres. Obviously for the purpose of distracting French attention, a bombardment of unusual violence was directed against the French positions along the Aisne from Soissons to Souper, a distance of about sixteen miles. The activity of the artillery, however, was not followed by infantry work, although every preparation had been made to receive another German onslaught in this section, which, since the first of the year, has been a pet operation of the German command.

The reinforcements which have arrived behind the German lines in great number, especially in Artois, have been thrown into this hand to hand fighting apparently with an utter disregard of losses. Most of these fresh troops have been sent against tthe British who are holding the Hulluch quarries and Hill No. 70. The recovery of this latter position, dominating the city of Lens and the communication routes to the north, is of vital importance to the Germans, and much of their energy has been expended on it. Sir John French telegraphed from British headquarters last night, however, that every attack here as well as at Hulluch had been repulsed and that the only British loss during the day was a part of a trench near the Ypres-Menin road, which had been occupied by the Germans after a mine explosion.

In Champagne the German attacks are directed through Maison de Champagne toward Hill No. 191, which the French captured on Wednesday night after a desperate engagement. The hill dominates Cernay and its radiating highways. The French positions, well organized on the northern slopes of the height along the Perthes-Cernay road, have resisted every assault. In the meantime the French have continued to press their front further north from the Navarian farm and Hill No. 185 to Somme-Py and the Grand Pre railway. Somme-Py last night was less than one and three-quarter miles from the advanced French positions. The Germans are opposing this advance from the Butte de Tahure, the highest point in the vicinity, with all the force of their artillery and machine guns, but the French progress has not been checked for an instant.

London observers of the situation at the front have been anticipating a German counter offensive [illegible] drive by the Crown Prince in the Argonne collapsed on Monday. It has been expected either east of Soissons or on the plain between the Aisne and the Oise at the "Crook of the Elbow." It is too early to predict the scope of the German plans indicated by yesterday's bombardment on the Aisne, military writers say, but they are confident nothing the Germans can do here will gain them a foot of ground. The same is true of the Tracy le Mont sector south of Noyon, where the French have been ready since last spring to meet an offensive.

TOSS OF A COIN DECIDES IMPORTANT ISSUE TODAY

New York.—All the details of the coming world's series between the Boston Americans and the Philadelphia Nationals will be arranged at a meeting of the National Commission to be held in this city today. On the toss of a coin will depend tthe selection of the city in which the opening game will be played; but there appears to be more interest in the date of the opening contest than inn the location of the initial battle for the championship of 1915.

Whether the series will begin on Friday, October 8th, or on Saturday, October 9th, is causing much discussion among followers of baseball. Many express the belief that the American League interests will endeavor to have the play begin on Friday, October 8th, the day after the close of the league season. This would preclude the possibility of the Phillies sending their star pitcher, Grover Cleveland Alevander, to the mound in three of the first four games played as might easily be done should the series start on Saturday, October 9th. Under the latter schedule Alexander could be worked Saturday, Monday and Wednesday, which in the opinion of many close followers of baseball would be decidedly advantageous to the National League champions.

A point made by those in favor of beginning the series on Friday is that it would be am uch more convenient date for those fans who desire to witness all the games of the series. Under such a schedule no matter which city was selected for the opening games, the visiting spectators would have Sunday in which to make the trip to the other city. Many believe that the National Commission will take this fact into consideration in assigning the dates of play which are expected to call for two games in one city; two in the other, to be followed by alternating games until the close of the series.

Other matters to come up for consideration will include the price and handling of tickets, the assigning of umpires and numerous minor details requiring considerable discussion, and the meeting may develop into a protracted session.

LOCAL SPORTSMEN HAD BIG DAY IN OPEN

Quite a number of local sportsmen took advantage of the opening of the hunting season yesterday and went out bright and early yesterday morning to their favorite hunting grounds.

Charles Ralph bagged three rabbits, Gordon Mace a partridge, and in addition to these, the following were reported:

Charles Stewart, fire and police commissioner, and George Nichols, a fine bag of woodcock; B. J O'Grady, and Fred Weise secured partridge, and the Doctors Schlappi and Kellar several fine ducks The Messrs. Wilson, Brown and Humens, also met with success

The state Law permitted hunting before yesterday, but the Federal law, which had to be followed, does not coincide with the date set by the State. The difference in the dates of the hunting season brought forth considerable comment from sportsmen all over the State.

COMMITTEEMEN TO STAND BY LEWIS

Real Work to Begin After Wednesday's Meeting—H. Putnam Allen Remains in Harness as Chairman of City Organization

The Republican City Committee met in the offices of H. P. Allen last night, Mr. Allen acting as chairman of the meeting. An informal discussion was held touching on the plans for the coming campaign, with the result that the committeemen signified their intention of supporting Victor C. Lewis, the Republican nominee for mayor, and the rest of the city ticket. The chief purpose of the gathering was to elect officers.

H. Putnam Allen was elected chairman; Chas. E. Stewart, vice chairman; W. L. Woodbury, treasurer; and Harry L. Webb, secretary. The executive committee consists of J. W. Stevenson, C. H. Hulett, W. H. Osborne, C. R. Dines, Fred Wolcott, Frank Rumsey, Clayton Brewer and Fred Wolcott.

No real action was taken last night towards commencing the campaign. The first meeting of the committee will be held Wednesday night when the first steps will be taken towards the campaign.

LOAN TAKEN UP IN 72 HOURS

Applications Sufficient to Cover Entire $500,000,000—West and South May Swell Total to First Request.

New York.—Applications received by [illegible] for membership in the syndicate to underwrite the $500,000,000 Franco-British loan were sufficient, bankers announce to cover the entire sum. In other words, about seventy-two hours after the announcement of the completion of the negotiations for the loan the entire amount of the bonds to be issued under it had been contracted for or virtuallyp sold.

The amount of money pledged was all the more astonishing, it was said, in view of the fact that the subscriptions so far have come almost entirely from this city and its immediate vicinity. The Middle West, the Pacific coast and the South are yet to be heard from. Reports from those sections, bankers believe will increase the amount of the pledges to $750,000,000 and may approach the amount originally mentioned by the Allies' commissioners when they arrived here; namely, $1,000,000,000.

The Small Investor's Chance

In the event of the loan being oversubscribed, the syndicate managers will make pro rata allotments to the subscribers. In these allotments the small investor will be considered first. All subscribers for $100 and $500 bonds will receive the full amount for which they have applied, while subscriptions of the larger applicants will be scaled down.

Attention was drawn to the fact that this was the first time in the history of Wall street the smal investor had been permitted to enter an underwriting syndicate on tthe same terms as the banking institutions and large capitalists. In this case a man with $100 can obtain a bond at the same price, per cent, as that which the largest capitalist will have to pay, namely, 96¼. To accomplish that, however, he must advise one of the syndicate managers of the amount of the participation in the underwriting syndicate he desires to take. Bonds will be sold to him at 98 per cent: but after the close of the syndicate, in sixty days, he will receive a check for 1¾ per cent of the par value of his purchase. That means the net ccost of a $100 bond to him will be $96.25. The syndicate obtains the bonds at 96 per cent; but the managers deduct ¼ of 1-

DEATHS REACH 300; SHIPS LOST

Vast Ruin Spread by Gulf Hurricane; Property Loss Appalling; Towns Swept Away in Mississippi.

New Orleans.—Reports late today from stricken sections of the area in Louisiana and the Mississippi Gulf coast swept by hurricane give 149 known dead, 106 reported dead and 105 missing. Hundreds of persons along the Mississippi River and interior points are marooned in flooded sections.

The property damage isc estimated at approximately $100,000,000.

The known dead in Louisiana include:— New Orleans and environs, twenty-four; Rigolets, twenty-one; Lake Catherine, twenty-two, and Neaf Frenier, twenty-six. Eight persons were drowned when the packet Hazel sank near Grand Isle. A sole survivor of the nine passengers and crew arrived here today. The vessel capsized and was dashed to pieces. The survivor, George Linden, floated fifteen miles on a piece of timber and was exhausted when picked up by a passing vessel.

Five of the crew and a white woman aboard the steamship F. M. Owens, which sank near Lockport are missing.

Only meagre reports have been received from the delta section south and southwest of New Orleans. A wireless message received from a staff correspondent of a New Orleans newspaper said:—

"Whole country between Poydras and Buas inundated. Levees gone, property loss appalling. Life toll probably heavy. Conditions worse than ever before. Relief needed."

Reports from Chief Menner, directly south of this city, indicated that a tidal wave from nine to twelve feet high struck that section.

Boat passengers arriving today fro Empire, near the Doulloth Canal, about fifty miles down the Mississippi reported that only four large houses sttill stood at Empire and that about twenty persons were marooned in them. The State Conservation Commission has started a rescue vessel for that point. Many inhabitants of the flooded sections were reported marooned and some were said to be clinging to tree tops.

Bay St. Louis, Miss., on the Mississippi Gulf coast reported one dead and heavy property loss.

Fifteen negroes and one white man were reported dead at Shell Beach and twenty-two white persons at De La Croix Island, both small settlements south of here.

Dunbar, La., near the Mississippi State line, was virtually swept away, a survivor said. He could give no estimate of the number of dead there. The railroad drawbridge at Rigolets was wrecked, he said.

FOR HUMANITY.

The labor movement is the force for humanity which was made necessary by the economic interests that sacrificed everything to profits and glorified material achievement.

It is a great progress of people moving steadily, irresistibly toward freedom, a march whose beginning is lost in the distance of the past, whose sturdy tramp, tramp, reverberates down the ages and keeps steadily on. It seeks to gather into its ranks men, women and children. It would protect the weary and the heartsick, those whose bodies and souls are scarred and maimed by injustice, those whose very bones bear the marks of the cruelty of industrial greed.—Samuel Gompers.

GREAT UNION PLANNED.

Movement on Foot to Amalgamate All Workers on Railroads.

The movement of New England railroad engineers and firemen to gather all the union men into a powerful labor organization to be known as the Industrial Labor union may be extended throughout the country. Labor leaders are discussing the agitation for the co-operation of all the railroad workers of the country within the confines of one organization.

Not only was the announcement of the New England plan received favorably, but officials of railroad unions referred to a speech made by a union leader in Denver recently wherein were outlined the plans for uniting all of the divisions of the unions of the western railroads.

George H. Sines, vice president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen said the suggestion for federated action on the part of the railroad unions is being spread broadcast. He said the idea of federated action has been proved successful—that is, all the different unions of railroad workmen in one locality have united on one general proposition and invariably have been able to put through their plan to a triumphant conclusion.

The demand for co-operation of all the unions in the west is reported by labor leaders to be more emphatic than in the east. The western leaders are quoted as criticising the awards made to the workers by the various arbitration boards.

Because of this widespread dissatisfaction the scheme of federation among the different unions is said to be gaining daily in favor in the west and there seems to be little doubt that the amalgamation of the east and the western groups will be effected easily.

EMPLOYER MUST PAY.

Compensation Law Puts Increased Responsibility on Master.

The increased responsibility of the master for injuries to his servant, where compensation laws have been enacted, is illustrated in a recent case in which a workman passed by a fellow workman who, "in a spirit of play swung his arm around, either to knock off decedent's hat or to strike him whereupon the decedent, in dodging the attack, slipped on the descending concrete floor, fell and sustained injuries which caused his death."

The ruling was:

"It is a matter of no consequence whether or not the workman, at the time he made the attack, was acting within the scope of his authority. In the case under consideration it appears that the defendant employed young men and boys. It is but natural to expect them to deport themselves as young men and boys replete with life and health. For workmen of that age, or even of maturer years, to indulge in a moment's diversion from work to joke with or play a prank upon a fellow workman is a matter of common knowledge to every one who employs labor. At any rate, it cannot be said that the attack made upon the decedent was so disconnected from the defendant's employment as to take it out of the class of risks reasonably incident to the employment of labor."

FRIVOLITY CONDEMNED

"The Little Talks on Trift" which have appeared in this newspaper, are to be continued by special arrangemenet with a society whose object is to encourage the saving habit in the minds of people. Heretofore no regularity has existed for the publications, but from now on twice each week Mr. S. W. Straus, president of the society, will talk to the readers of The Evening Times.

That the Straus' articles so far published have excited interest is made quite evident by the letters of commendation received at this office. In one of the letters at hand Governor Ralston, of Indiana, is quoted: He said:

"There is a great deal of good citizenship, and good morals, encompassed by the practice of industry and economy anl living within one's means. Many native born Americans might well learn lessons in thrift from the Germans, Scandinavians and other foreigners who have proven so prosperous in this country. If some of our Americans would curb their false pride and would abandon the idea that because they are as good as anybody, therefore they must somehow or other live as expensively as anybody—they would not only prosper in material things, but would become better and more patriotic citizens. A return to the healthy, old fashioned notion that every man is the architect of his own fortune, would be a real blessing to thec ountry: and it is the province of those who have the time and means to lead the way to that work."

The substance of the Governor's remarks is that as a people we are drifting away from the simple life; that we are making a wide departure from the simple life led by the founders of the American Republic. Frivolity and fondness for display have taken such a deep root in so many of us that a return to the simple ways of saving money in a systematic manner at times seems hopeless. On all sides the lessons of snobbery and frivolity appear, and it would be a pity were we not to profit by the calamities that befall those who find themselves stranded at a time in life when they should be enjoying the fruits of systematic saving.

Fulton has three institutions where savings may be left for safe keeping, and the city may have a third—a savings and loan association, which would take care of its stockholders in a different way than is now known, with the one logical result, the city would experience an awakening in the matter of community interest.

LITTLE TALKS ON THRIFT

By S. W. STRAUS

President American Society for Thrift

Above all things else, keep a strict family expense account.

Many young people today are deterred from marrying because the young man, from his viewpoint and from the viewpoint of the young woman does not receive a sufficiently large salary. By that is usually meant enough money to enable them to have all of the necessities of life and many of the luxuries.

We are indebted to Miss Thirmuthis A. Brookman, author and teacher of Berkeley, Cal., for showing us how a man may marry and get ahead on $75 a month provided, he and his wife be thrifty. Miss Brookman follows the fortunes of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Woodward, who were married in Berkeley, Cal., fourteen years ago, when Mr. Woodward was earning $75 a month as a bookkeeper. A certain amount of money was apportioned to household expenses, including rent, light and fuel, food, accident insurance, recreation, clothing and pocket money.

Under the head of savings went the amounts paid for life insurance and that put into thes avings bank. It is interesting that the sums placed in the savings bank nearly always equaled or almost equaled, the amount paid out for rent. The second year of their married life Mr. Woodward's salary was raised $5 a month. After looking over the first year's expenses he and his wife decided to reduce their pocket money. During the third year they endeavored to reduce the cost of food by buying in large quantities and when they found that "the more they had the more they used" they measured out a week's supply and lived within it. They also started a garden.

Mr. and Mrs. Woodward kept such exact accounts that they knew where every single penny went and when they found that they were growing extravagant, they curtailed expenses and cut down every possible item. The San Francisco fire which destroyed the store where Mr. Woodward was employed put them back some months, but by March, 1908, they had saved about $600 and they bought a lot and built a house by contract. Thereafter Mr. and Mrs. Woodward had many of the vicissitudes, including illness, that the ordinary family has, but so scientific were they in their thrift that after fourteen years of married life they virtually owned their own home and were able to educate their three children.

Their "family expense account" contains tables showing all their receipts and expenditures for fourteen years and problems which occur in connection with the home, for the children to solve. The latter offers a suggestion of one way of teaching thrift in the schools.

Another way is the Public School Savings Bank, about which I have spoken before. It was introduced into this country from Europe and at first was looked at askance.

However, since its establishment in many of the public schools in thisc ountry, it has grown so rapidly that the Comptroller of Currency ordered an inquiry recently regarding it. His report is most interesting.

The number of school banks in the whole country is 1925, accommodating 398,540 children who have $1,792,640 on deposit. It would seem from these figures, that the effort to teach our children thrift is bearing fruit.

Opinions

THAT HALF-BILLION

The details surrounding the half-billion loan which the allies have negotiated in this country have been printed. Attention has been drawn to it mainly because it is the greatest foreign loan ever made by the financial interests of this country, and it is the first loan, we believe, that Britain has ever made in this country. Nor does she make this loan of and by her self, for France is equally pledged with her.

It is spoken of generally as a loan, but it is really an extension of credit, and it is necessary because our foreign customers are not at this time producing merchandise and products which they may exchange with us in payment for their purchases in this country. The proceeds of the loan are to be expended in this country in the purchase of produce, either of farms or of manufactories, and thus it is, as weh ave said, not a direct loan of money where the borrower takes his cash and goes wherever he chooses to spend it, but the money is provided to enable the agents of England and France to go into our markets and make their purchases, paying for these with money borrowed from Americans.

The borrowers pay 5 per cent. interest. The banking people get the bonds at 96, thus making the interest rate not far from 6 per cent. It is proposed to sell them to the public at 98, thus making the net interest to those who loan their money 5½ per cent. The, expense of printing the bonds and putting them on the market will be taken out of the 2 cents difference, and theb alance will turn out to be a very handsome profit for the banks. The loan is to run for five years, and is to be a popular one, as some of the bonds will be of denominations of $100, and may be paid for in installments.

The loan will net the borrowers $480,000,000. They will pay $20,000,000 to the lenders in premiums, and for the expenses attendant upon the issue. The interest will amount to $25,000,000 annually, and as the bonds are to run five years, the amount paid in interest alone will amount to $125,000,000. Iti s a handsome revenue, and the interest yield is a very excellent one for what many regard as high-class securities. As to that, however, each person with money to loan must be the judge. Payment upon the bonds is guaranteed by Great Britain and France, and so the securit yappears to be ample, although there will be many who will not care to loan their money in this manner. But the money is provided for. It will be furnished by bankers and clients or customers. How widely the bonds are to be distributed depends wholly upon the favor with which the investment is regarded by the public.—Utica Observer.

The Country's Enormous Fire Loss

Fire Prevention Day will be observed October 9. Observed, not celebrated. The city's record of fire loss is no cause for pride. Seventeen million dollars was the total cost of fires to New York last year. Fire Commissioner Adamson reports that "every man, woman and child in the city has to pay $1.44 each year for fire loss." This does not cover the upkeep of the Fire and Water Departments.

Seventy-five per cent. of fires in the city are due to carelessness; letting rubbish accumulate in cellars and under stairways, throwing away lighted matches, cigars or cigarettes, neglecting chimneys and flues, handling inflammable liquids near burning gas jets. Taking chances in such ways is criminal. Still, year after year, New Yorkers go on doing the same things.

Courts rule that persons can be held responsible for fires caused by culpable carelessness. But save in cases where loss of life attracts the notice of the community, carelessnesso f this sort goes every day unpunished. Personal responsibility in the direction of fire prevention shows scant growth.

"The fire loss per capita in the United States," says the American Year Book, "is still enormous compared with European experience."

In 1913 this per capita loss ranged for the various American municipalities listed in the Insurance Year Book from $0.06 minimum to $40.91 maximum, as compared with $0.03 minimum to only $4,21 maximum for European cities.

InEuropean cities a fire is a crime for which somebody must be punished unless a natural and unavoidable cause can be proved. When New York adopts that attitude toward fires and persons upon whose premises they occur, Fire Prevention Day may celebrate progress instead of annually deploring continued heedlessness and waste.—N. How they Do It in Russia

Two officers of the Russian Army sat with two women at a table in a cafe in Warsaw. They were eating, and drinking, and laughing, and making eyes at one another, all pleasantly and harmlessly enough, for their food was the food of the country, and theirm aking eyes was the custom of the country, and their merriment was the merriment of youth. But what they were drinking was wine.

An officer came into the cafe—an officer tall and thin, more than six feet by several inches, and very erect and military in appearance. He wore a long gray overcoat and wide gold shoulders traps, and at his neck there glittered a cross. His eyes were coldly blue. His pointed beard was streaked with white. He carried a riding crop in his hand and was booted and spurred.

The cafe was full of officers and, as he entered, every one of them rose quickly to his feet and stood rigidly at salute. The two young officers who were sitting with the women jumped up, too, and came to salute. The women sat, rather frightened, in their chairs.

The tall bearded officer with the glittering cross looked about the room keenly and quickly. He returned the salutes. Then he walked to the table where the women sat. He reached down and took oneo f the glasses, holding it to his nose an instant and then threw it to the floor, where it broke to fragments at the feet of one of the young men.

"Vina!" he said sternly.

The two officers, grown gray with fear, trembled as they stood before him. The tall man looked at them with infinite disgust. He reached out, tore off their shoulder straps and threw them on the floor. Then he turned and said a few words in harsh Russian. Some soldiers came forward and surrounded the young men. The tall man made a gesture that meant "Take them away," and the two officers were marched from the room. They were degraded. They were sent to the ranks to serve as private soldiers.

The tall man with the pointed beard streaked with white, the cold blue eye and the glittering cross, was the Grand Duke Nikolai, the commander-in-chief of the Russian Army. By imperial ukase drinking was prohibited in the Russian Empire, owing largely to the demand of the grand duke on the Czar that drinking should be stopped, because of the need for a sober army in the struggle impending. These young men had broken the rule. They had disobeyed not only the ukase of the Czar but also the order of the commander-in-chief. Moreover, they had done their drinking publicly. He found them. Instantly he deprived them of their rank and sent them to the trenches. —By Samuel G. Blythe in Saturday Evening Post.

Home Town Helps

RUIN WILL BENEFIT TOWNS

Destruction by Armies Will Make Necessary the Construction of Whole Communities Anew.

Every town of importance in East Prussia that has suffered at the devastating hand of the Russians has decided to incorporate a municipal garden section in its plans for rebuilding.

Many of the destroyed towns are so completely ruined that it is going to be necessary to rase what little is left and construct the whole community anew. This makes it eminently feasible to apportion off a section that can be devoted to the desirable city garden feature.

Many of the communities also are planning for a series of municipally constructed and owned houses for workmen, single home structures with two, three and four rooms, which ultimately can be purchased by their occupants on the familiar easy-payment plan.

Plans of this character are already well advanced in Gerdauen, Tapiau, Ortelsburg, Lyck and other communities, and additional municipalities are preparing to follow suit.

pany has designed an inexpensive outdoor housing for its meters. This consists of a wooden box divided into two parts, the upper of which incloses the switchboard and fuses, and the lower, the meter. A door gives immediate access to the switches and fuses, while a cover plate securely screwed in place over the second compartment protects the meter, which, however, is visible for reading. The box is supported on a substantial framework several feet from the ground.—Popular Mechanics.

Beautifying the Streets.

Palms lining the downtown sidewalks comprise a unique feature of city beautification in Los Angeles, Cal. The work of installing has just been completed, says the National Real Estate Journal.

Along 50 blocks of the heart of the city have been placed 1,100 splendid specimens of the Chamerops Excelsus palms. The work was done by the county at an expense of some $30,000, as part of a general beautification scheme for California expositions this year. The improvement is designed to be permanent.

Delicate trailing vines and nasturtiums have been planted about the roots of the trees and give a green and flower effect against the brown trunks.

The palms are set in wooden tubs, which in turn are placed in cement boxes. The lowest branches are about eight feet above the sidewalk. The watering is done at night by the city street sprinkling department.

A BUNCH OF BILLY ALLEN CHORISTERS

ALL NEXT WEEK AT THE QUIRK THEATRE

The Billy Allen Musical Comedy Company, recognized as the only organization of its kind on the road, will be seen in Fulton next week at the Quirk Theatre in an entirely new repertoire of musical comedies.

Mr. Allen himself is of course the central figure of the organization, and around him this season is assembled a group of talented and good looking young people who render him excellent support. Among these are many members of last season's company, with the addition of several new and talented players. Thef amous Billy Allen Beauty chorus remains practically intact. All of the young women who made the organization so attractive last season are still members of the company, and with several additions of equally pretty girls the chorus continues to command attention as the prettiest and best drilled group of choristers on the road.

Thec ompany will open next Monday, the opening bill being "Hot Old Time," to be followed by "Beauty Parlor" on Tuesday, and an entirely different bill each day.

WARN CITIES OF TYPHOID SEASON

Declared 200,000 Will Be Stricken With Disease.

FLOURISHES IN THE AUTUMN

Figured That Death Toll Will Reach 18,000—Fifty Per Cent of Victims Will Be Between Ages of Fifteen and Thirty-five Years—Cleanliness Urged as a Preventive.

Washington.—During the year probably 200,000 people in the United States will contract typhoid fever, says a statement issued by the public health service. The average period of invalidism will be more than a month for every case, so that the economic loss, even if recovery does ensue, can be reckoned upon this basis, including the care and attention required.

Of those who contract the disease possibly 18,000 will die.

Fifty per cent of these will be between the ages of fifteen and thirty-five years, the very time of life when the loss is most frightful. Moreover, this is an annual toll and represents the minimum fatality which we have attained.

No sooner is the computation of the 18,000 completed than another series is begun, and so on interminably. True, there is some diminution in the total number, the death rate since 1900 having been diminished by half, while most of our cities show a progressive reduction, but it still remains much higher than that of countries which we are apt to consider less civilized than our own.

Another typhoid season is again at hand. The weather, presence of flies, contamination of food products and the increased liability of infection through changes of residence make it once more necessary for health bodies to sound a warning note. This is becoming an annual custom, but the health officer should not modify his tones on that account. He is indeed a prophet, and the voice of the prophet should be heard.

Typhoid fever is a disease of filths. It can only be contracted by taking into the system the waste products of one previously ill of the disease. These waste products are conveyed from one individual to another usually by means of a third object, such as water, flies or milk.

Even if disease itself were never contracted in this manner we should revolt with abhorrence at the idea of such uncleanliness. For every case of the infection developing some one, either the municipality or the individual, has been careless, and public opinion will soon regard such carelessness as criminal.

For thirty years the causative organism has been known and studied. For nearly twenty years science has been in possession of most delicate blood tests for the recognition of the disease. Knowledge of the dissemination of the disease is consequently exact and definite.

Not content with accomplishments along these lines, the medical profession has even devised methods by which the public may live under insanitary conditions with perfect impunity, so far as this particular disease is concerned. Persons may take into their systems the filth which produces disease and death and yet remain free from harmful effects if the preventive treatment has been received.

In spite of these efforts the frightful mortality continues. A large proportion of the population is ignoring the principles which have been so well established. Further steps toward the prevention of typhoid must be the result of more general enlightenment of the mass of the people.

The avoidance of the infection rests primarily upon community action. The proper protection of water supplies, the eradication of filth and all its accompaniments, the regulation of dairies and the safeguarding of milk are all problems which only communities as a whole can settle. Nevertheless this does not absolve the individual citizen from responsibility, and he can do much for his own protection.

The eradication of filth is in part the duty of every citizen, and each should see that his own surroundings are in a satisfactory condition. He should guard against carelessness in the maintenance and preparation of food and withhold his patronage from those who disregard the rules of cleanliness, remembering that the foods which are most subject to contamination are milk and its products, oysters and vegetables.

TWO TEETH, $7.50 PER.

Judge Fines Man For Knocking Them Out.

Salina, Kan. — According to Judge Dan R. Wagstaff of the Salina police court, a tooth is worth $7.50 in a woman's head, and any one who dislodges one of them must pay that amount.

Anna Conrad caused the arrest of James Barnes on a charge of assault, and when she showed the judge the vacant space in her teeth where two had been removed the judge forthwith assessed a fine of $15 against Barnes, $7.50 per tooth.

Anna objected to playing the part of Fantine unless she received the money, but the judge ordered that the $15 go into the city treasury.

DONALD MACKENZIE

THE LUCKY COIN THAT PROVED A POOR TALISMAN—DONALD MACKENZIE'S STRANGE ADVENTURE.

Donald Mackenzie, the well known Pathe producer, several months ago happened to be sitting at the same table in a Broadway restaurant with a distinguished looking stranger who looked like a Spaniard. Conversation started between the two, and an impromptu friendship was struck up. The stranger had some interesting experiences to relate—he had been for twenty years in South America, had accumulated a fortune, and was now on his way home to Spain after a trip through the United States. He was lonely, very lonely, and Mr. Mackenzie was the first congenial acquaintance he had met since he left Peru. He regretted that on the morrow he would have to sail for home, for he had enjoyed the acquaintance of the senor much. But wait, he would like to leave the senor a slight token of his regard, a coin, a very old coin, which he had dug from the prehistoric ruins of Peru. He had found two of them years ago when he was destitute and discouraged, and they had given him much luck. From that day he has prospered. The senor with that coin must prosper, too.

When the stranger left after a warm handshake, Mr. Mackenzie found in his hand the coin. It was weird enough in looks to be an extraordinary luck bringer, so "Mac" slipped it into his pocket and forgot about it.

A week later he had a letter from an old friend of his in Scotland, saying that he had enlisted to fight for England in the great war and was leaving for the front probably within two or three weeks. "Mac" thought of his lucky coin, and decided his friend needed it to ward off hostile bullets. He sat down at once and wrote him, enclosing the coin, telling his friend that it was "big medicine" and would bring him glory, medals and promotions galore. Thus endeth the first chapter in the tale of the lucky coin.

Last week "Mac" heard from his friend again for the first time since he sent the coin. It was from an army hospital somewhere in France, and ran in part as follows:

"You may have your 'big medicine' coin and welcome. You'll find it enclosed herewith. Here's what it's done for me. We left for the front the next day after I got it and I was sick as a dog all the way over the channel, being the only man on board who was, for it was a remarkably smooth passage. Landing on the dock a rifle accidentally fell on my foot and smashed it. We were at once ordered to the front, and my regiment was stationed in that part of the trenches where the fighting was the hottest, and it's my private belief that I was at the hottest point. I was wounded in the arm almost at once, slightly it's true, but painfully. I stuck it out and about two hours later had a bullet part my hair very neatly, but the hair will never grow again where the bullet cut. Not long after that something hit me a wallop, and I woke up in this hospital bandaged from head to foot—one wound in the head, one in each arm, one in the stomach, and one in my right leg. That wasn't the end of it. I've just heard that my fiancee back in Scotland has married another man. Take back your 'big medicine'—I spurn it."

Somehow, or other, the ocean liner carrying the "lucky" coin back to America escaped being torpedoed, but the captain never knew what an ill-omened token was aboard.

Mr. Mackenzie got this letter while he was directing a scene in Richard Carle's play "Mary's Lamb." He told everybody to wait for a few minutes, and then dashed for the door. He isn't the least bit superstitious, but two minutes later he might be seen making a bee line for the Palisades, on the edge of which are located the Pathe studios. Pausing on the rim of the dizzy cliff, he flung the coin as far from him as he could. As near as he could judge it fell on the West Shore Railroad tracks, two hundred feet below. Now he's afraid the accursed thing will cause a bad train wreck "for", as he says, "you never can tell!"

That's Different.

"When first he was married he used to boast that his wife had a way of her own."

"Well?"

"Now he complains that she has her own way."—Judge.

THREE SCHOOLBOYS WIN PRIZES WITH PIGS

Put $150 in Bank While Still at Lessons.

Washington.—"A year ago the three sons of a dairyman living seven miles out of Macon, Ga., did not have a cent in bank, but had two small thoroughbred Duroc-Jersey pigs," says a statement issued by the department of agriculture. "Two of the boys joined the Bibb County Pig club. Today all three boys belong to the club and have in one of the Macon banks over $150, made while going to school.

"One of the banks in Macon offered a deposit of $1 and a metal savings bank to each of the Bibb County Pig club members who would make good. Making good consisted in exhibiting a pure bred pig at the fair and delivering to the county agent a record of feeds and weights, showing how much it cost per pound to raise it.

"Out of the forty-two boys who made good thirty-two let their dollar deposit remain in the bank. Two of the latter were the dairyman's sons, who won considerable prize money with their boar and sow pigs. This prize money was deposited with the bank and is part of their savings.

"A sow they exhibited had her first litter of seven redheaded pigs at fair time. She is now the mother of a second litter, in which there are twelve, all of them thriving.

"These boys will be exhibitors at the fair this fall, and the bank will have to surrender three more one dollar deposits and three metal savings banks for the three pure bred pigs exhibited and three complete records delivered."

HAS 'EM THINKING.

St. Albans Freak Has Established a Record as Climber.

St. Albans, Vt.—W. L. Plumley of North Clarendon has a freak dog, whose specialty is climbing. The highest climb he ever made was thirty-two feet. Veterinarians and others who have examined the dog's feet are at a loss to understand how he grips a tree trunk in climbing.

His nails are like those of the ordinary dog, though possibly a trifle more pointed, and the fleshy pads of his feet are perhaps a little broader.

So accustomed to height is the dog that he sleeps in tree branches twenty feet above the ground. He is three years old and part pug and part bull.

Hen Hatches Quail Eggs.

Viola, Wis.—A mother quail laid two eggs in the nest which one of William Bender's hens had made in the woods near his farm. The hen hatched them, and they joined themselves to the barnyard flock.

WAR HAS SPREAD CHOLERA.

Greater Prevalence Abroad Affects Quarantine Restrictions Here.

Washington. — The United States public health service has collected all available information regarding health conditions in foreign ports in order that needless restrictions shall not be imposed upon vessels and that active measures may be taken when necessary. In a review of the world distribution of cholera, yellow fever, plague and typhus fever, just issued by the United States public health service, it is pointed out that in the fiscal year ended June 30, 1915, cholera was present in Austria-Hungary, Ceylon, China, Egypt, Dutch East Indies, India, the Philippine Islands, Russia, the Straits Settlements, the Balkan territory, Germany and Indo-China.

The amount of cholera reported in Russia during the six months ended Dec. 25, 1914, and the absence this year of reports from that country, save from Petrograd during the six months following, indicate that the disease has been more or less widely prevalent there. In the six months ended June 25, 1915, cholera was reported to be present in the prison camps in Germany in twenty-three localities, in Silesia, and in Brandenburg, Posen and Zirka, in Germany. In all probability these cases were traceable to the seat of war in the east. The new infection in the Balkan territory may have originated from the constant infection of Austria-Hungary or from Turkey, where cholera was reported prevalent during 1914 and 1915.

New Blood at the Front

The Republican party is to be congratulated upon the nominations for congress made on Tuesday to fill vacancies caused by the deaths of Sereno E. Payne and E. A. Merritt. As successor to the former Norman J. Gould of Seneca Falls was chosen and Bertrand H. Snell of Potsdam will take the place of Mr. Merritt. Both are young business men, clean, conscientious, upright and able. They are the sort of men the Republican party of the coming generation is to depend upon. The day of party hacks, men who have served their party well but have been rewarded as they proceeded, men who live in the past having no vision and whose perspective is narrowed are not to lead the virile youth of the state. In every part of the state there are signs of a rejuvenated Republican party, one which has red blood, like the party's state leader, Governor Whitman. Men of large interests, successful men, are ready to serve the public not to exploit it.

The Standard's special felicitations go out to our neighbor Mr. Snell, who will ably represent his district in the next congress.—Watertown Standard.

WHEN HER BACK ACHES

A Woman Finds All Her Energy and Ambition Slipping Away.

Fulton women know how the aches and pains that often come when the kidneys fail make life a burden. Backache, hip pains, headaches, dizzy spells, distressing urinary troubles, are frequent indications of weak kidneys and should be checked in time. Doan's Kidney Pills are for the kidneys only. They attack kidney diseases by striking at the cause. Here's proof of their merit in a Fulton woman's words:

Mrs. Leland Sherman, 267 S. 7th st., Fulton, says: "I feel justified in recommending Doan's Kidney Pills, for I know from personal experience that they are an excellent kidney and backache medicine. I used them for pains in my back and loins and other kidney annoyances, and they gave me relief."

Price 50c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mrs. Sherman had. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N.Y.

ONEIDA STREET

A Tribute to the Late Miss Daisy E. Loundsbery

Essay Written and Delivered Before a Literary Society in One of the Teachers' Colleges in New York State Friday, Oct. 1, 1915, by an Alumnus of Fulton High School. The Subject of the Essay is: "Sir Walter Scott, Man and Poet."

SIR WALTER SCOTT, MAN AND POET.

In studying the life of a man like Sir Walter Scott, one cannot but recollect the words of the much loved American poet,

"Lives of great men all remind us,
We can make our lives sublime."

But has there ever been a person living or dead, the heart of whom has been thrilled by the charm of his mighty poems, to say nothing of that of his peculiarly inimitable prose writings, who would be averse to hearing the tale of his wonderful life, nay, who would not seek diligently that all absorbing story?

"His life was gentle; and the elements
So mixed in him, that nature might stand up
And say to all the world, 'This was a man!'"

We have heard something of the happy but also, in some respects, the pathetic childhood of Scott; and, in an able manner, have had set before us, as it were, some of the physical and mental proclivities of this bard in the embryo. Naturally, however, we are more interested in his later life, but not in vain have we listened for truly "the child was father to the man!"

Very early in his career, people began to notice his gigantic memory, the rich stores of romantic material with which it was loaded, and above all, that colossal energy and perseverance, supported by concentrative powers of the first magnitude. Apropos of his memory, it has been remarked that it was wont "to sift away what was foreign to his genius and to assimilate what was suited to it."

A further fact of very vital bearing on the character of his poetry and prose, was his strange aversion, even as a lad, to a study of Greek and all that such a study implied. He ever stubbornly insisted that Homer was inferior to Ariosto. Hutton, one of his biographers, is of the opionion that Greek literature would have opend such fields of poetry and art as to daunt, perhaps dishearten his genius, considering his "natural make and temper." Yes, the long and refluent music of Homer, once naturalized in his mind would have discontented him with that sharp, metrical, martial tramp of, his own moss-troopers to which alone his genius as a poet was perfectly suited.

Imbued, as he was, with a love for lively companions, sociability, excitement, and daring boyish exploits, and we must never forget that love for romance, his youth was somewhat wild and boisterous, even in the most feverish hours of an insatiable thrist for knowledge. We prefer to think, however, that his life was well nigh faultless for emphatically there were no vicious instinct in that leonine character, no guile in that big, loving heart.

He studied law in his teens and was admitted to the bar at the age of twenty-one. He never took it very seriously. Unfailingly humorous he intreprets law in some of its phases in a highly delightful way when he desired to show how subtly elastic it was in the hands of a shrewd lawyer. And by no means was Scott a mean lawyer though the world still deplores the years thus spent, and not spent, where his more natural bent lay, on the "primrose paths of literature."

As regards Scott's poems, they are of such a nature, specifically, a hurried frankness of composition, "as to please," as he himself has said in his diary, "soldiers, sailors, and young people of bold and active dispositions." Rather, young and old alike are fascinated by them. His native terseness and vigor are reflected in nearly all his writings; in many, a rousing trumpet note that cannot but thrill even the most casual reader of good literature. All of this we find exemplified, for instance, in his "Marmion," a poem which alone would have made his name immortal.

Some critics assert that the pictures which he drew of his women, either those who had actually existed, or those who were creatures of his own fancy, fall short of even a fair standard of excellence, comparatively speaking. Whether this be true or not, it must not be forgotten that Scott is pre-eminently to be judged by his men, just as Goethe is by his women as in "Herman and Dorothea." Scott's deficiency in his pictures of women should be attributed to his natural chivalry. He was perhaps too romantic in his conception of them, always ill disposed to go deeply into a careful analysis of their character or individuality; as Hutton observes, "he bowed so low before the image of her that he could not go deeply into her heart." Of all the panegyrics written on the sacred greatness of woman, what is more sublime than his burst of chivalric devotion to her than those six lines in "Marmion," which we have heard quoted this morning.

"O woman! in our hours of ease,
Uncertain, coy, and hard to please,
And variable as the shade
By the light quivering aspen made;
When pain and anguish wring the brow,
A ministering angel thou!"

When I reflect how this trait of Scott's appealed to the nature of a noted elocutionist of happy memory, Miss Daisy E. Lounsberry, a [illegible] a personal friend, herself, I say with [illegible] conviction, a perfect embodiment of Scott's own ideal of womanhood, still can I see that radiant face indicative of the lofty mind, still can I hear these lines of Scott's come pealing from her lips in instruction.

"The feast was o'er. Now brimming wine
In lordly cup was seen to shine
Before each eager guest;
And silence filled the crowded hall
As deep as when the herald's call
Thrills in the loyal breast.

Then up arose the noble host,
And, smiling, cried: 'A toast! a toast!
To all our ladies fair.
Here, before all, I pledge the name
Of Stanton's proud and beauteous dame,
The Lady Gundamere!'

Quick to his feet each gallant sprang,
And joyous was the shout that rang,
As Stanley gave the word;
And every cup was raised on high,
Nor ceased the loud and gladsome cry
Till Stanley's voice was heard.

'Enough, enough,' he, smiling, said,
And lowly bent his haughty head;
'That all may have their due,
Now each in turn must play his part
And pledge the lady of his heart,
Like a gallant knight and true.'

Then, one by one, each guest sprang up,
And drained in turn the brimming cup,
And named the loved one's name;
And, each, as hand on high, he raised,
Her lady's grace and beauty praised,
Her constancy and fame.

'Tis now St. Leon's turn to rise;
On him are fixed those countless eyes;
A gallant knight is he;
Envied by some, admired by all,
Far famed in lady's bower and hall,
The flower of chivalry.

St. Leon raised his kindling eye,
And held the sparkling cup on high:
'I drink to one,' he said,
'Whose image never may depart,
Deep graven on this grateful heart,
Till memory be dead;
To one whose love for me shall last
When lighter passions long have passed,
So deep it is, and pure;
Whose love hath longer dwelt, I ween,
Than any yet that pledged hath been
By those brave knights before.'

Each guest upstarted at the word
And laid a hand upon his sword
With fury-flashing eye;
And Stanley said: 'We crave the name,
Proud knight, of this most peerless dame,
Whose love you count so high.'

St. Leon paused, as if he would
Not breathe her name in careless mood
Thus lightly to another;
Then bent his noble head, as though
To give that word the reverence due,
And gently said, 'My mother!'"

We also find this chivalric quality reflected in his "Lady of the Lake", and in his Waverley novels in particular.

Lockhart, his son-in-law, in his voluminous biography of Scott, in speaking of the latter's vein of humor, avers that it is of different quality in relation to different subjects; that he was at times capable of considerable heaviness of hand,—of the Scotch "wut," so called. But while Lockhart regards Scott's letters to his daughter-in-law as models of tender playfulness and pleasantry, Hutton bluntly characterizes them as "decidedly elphantine." However, both are agreed, and the world of literature, past and present, is agreed, that as regards dry humor, and the higher humor which skillfully blends the ludicrous and the pathetic, Scott is a master.

With these few remarks on his writings, regretfully one is forced to limit himself and to pass again to a consideration of Scott, the man.

Soon after he was admitted to the bar, he joined the Tory party, not to become a rabid partisan or not because he looked deeply into the politics of the land but only because the Tory party represented political conservatism, and Scott, by nature, intensely conservative and patriotic, feared the gradual uprooting by the other party of ancient Scottish institutions.

He married a French woman in 1797 and led a comparatively happy married life after his first love affair had culminated in bitter disappointment, the pathos of which, by his own diary, is beyond description.

A sketch of his life, however brief would be incomplete without an account of his financial adversity but one is almost loath to attempt it. The success of his works gained for him a princely fortune. At an enormous outlay, lavish and careless as he always was in the expenditure of money, he purchased land and fitted up a home known now by the immortal name of Abbotsford. "Princes, peers, and poets"—rich and poor alike—were his constant visitors. Failure of his publishers, however, left him heavily in debt and, in his old age, when the crash came, Scott undertook the task of paying up a debt of 120,000 pounds! How his pride revolted at the idea of dying a pauper! But nothing daunted, he set to work unaided to clear it away for the honor of his forefathers and for the honor of his family. For six years he toiled writing books and the colossal effort stands unparallelel on the pages of history.

Many times when sight and hand failed him and he was forced to dictate, screams of anguish escaped his lips, afflicted as he was with stomach cramp. He kept "doggedly" on. But when the enormous debt was all but paid, the strong man, strong in will, never strong in physique, was bowed down and his living honor, genius, and integrity were extinguished by delirium and death.

"About half past one in the afternoon," says Mr. Lockhart, "on the twenty-first day of September, in the year of Our Lord, 1832, Sir Walter Scott breathed his last in the presence of all his children. It was a beautiful day, so warm that every window was wide open—and so perfectly still that the sound of all others most delicious to his ear, the gentle ripple of the Tweed over its pebbles, was distinctly audible as we knelt around his bed, and his eldest son kissed and closed his eyes."

SYNOPSIS

Old Cyrus Martin, the head of the American soap trust, makes a bet of $50,000 with a friend, John Clark, a rival soapmaker, that his (Martin's) son Rodney would be making more money at the end of a year than Clark's son Ellery.

Martin takes his pretty secretary, Mary Grayson, into his confidence and enlists her co-operation. Rodney has been a spendthrift, and the father wants to make him reform and go to work.

Mary meets Rodney, and the son proposes marriage to her. Rodney tells his father about his proposal, and the old man pretends great anger. He tells Mary he will disinherit Rodney.

Rodney defies his father, and Mary is deeply touched at the lad's genuine affection for her. Mary makes a financial bargain with Martin to encourage the son to go to work.

Ambrose Peale, press agent, meets Rodney and agrees to go into business with the lad on a salary basis. Rodney has resolved to go into the soap industry and buck the trust.

Rodney, Peale and Mary go into the soap trade together. Rodney then endeavors to borrow $10,000 as capital for his newly formed company.

The offices of the "13 Soap company" are opened, and they advertise it as "the most expensive soap in the world." Peale talks advertising continually.

The 13 Soap company finds its expenses very heavy, and financial rocks loom ahead. Their chief business seems to have been to spend money for advertising under Peale's directions.

An alleged countess, who has appeared on the scene, desires to purchase the French rights for the sale of "13 Soap" and produces a draft for $30,000, which she desires to have cashed.

The "countess" is shown to be an impostor and despair settles over the 13 Soap company. The firm introduces her, however, to Ellery Clark. Father Martin visits the offices.

Martin, fearing rumors that the new company would injure his business and might break the trust, offers to buy out the firm for $100,000 and give Rodney, Peale and Mary good positions. Then he learns that the company is "dead broke."

Suddenly out of a clear sky comes an order for 50,000 cakes of 13 Soap from the great firm of Brown & James of Chicago. "The tide has turned," the trio now declare.

The 13 Soap company having no factory cannot deliver. The trio endeavor to buy the cakes from branch offices of the Martin trust. They fail to get the necessary number, but send 5,000 cakes.

Mary, in despair, calls on old Martin. Rodney also appears. There they both learn that the father caused the sending of the telegram from Brown & James. Naturally they are amazed and mortified.

Peale arrives. He discourses at length to old Martin on the value of advertising and explains that the money spent on booming 13 Soap was not wasted. Martin is unconvinced.

At last the partial shipment of 13 Soap, which had been sent to Chicago, begins to sell. Brown & James send a man to the Martin home to announce that the 5,000 cakes were gone at $1 apiece. They want more.

CHAPTER XV—Continued.

"But I don't understand French," said Mr. Martin.

"Pardon, monsieur," said the countess; "always when I am excited I speak the French. But if you love your son you pay me back or else he go to jail. What you say?"

"But $15,000 is a lot of money," remonstrated the soap king, too acute of course to give in at once.

"Yes. But it is more to me than it is to you," argued the lady. "You pay me or he go to prison. Now what you say?"

At this crucial moment Ambrose Peale made his entrance, and old Martin for once in his life was glad to read his name on the card in Johnson's tray.

"By George, just the man I want to see!" he said, in great relief, but fortunately not mentioning Peale's name aloud. "Show him right in. Hold on, hold on. Now, duchess, if you don't mind, just step into this room a minute," he added, showing the unwelcome lady of title out through a door on the left.

"Very well," said the lady. "I go. I wait. But in fifteen minutes if I do not get the $15,000 I go to my lawyer's, and your son—poof, he is done!"

Meanwhile Mr. Martin turned to Johnson.

"Did you get my son's office?" he asked.

"Yes, sir. He hasn't come in yet," said Johnson.

"If you reach him while Mr. Peale's here don't mention Rodney's name. Just call him 'that party.' I'll understand."

"Yes, sir."

Peale entered, and he and the soap king struck fire almost at once.

"Now, see here, young man," began Martin, quite indignant at the countess' story.

"Now, one moment, Mr. Martin," Peale began. "I just want to say that I am a man of a few words. This isn't advertising—it's personal. I know you don't like me."

"Why do you say that?" Martin asked curiously.

"Because I'm a pretty wise gink," said Peale.

"Well, you are a bit fresh," Mr. Martin agreed.

"Fresh? Well, I guess that's right too," Peale went on. "But that's me—I'm not your style. Here's the idea. Your son has been immense to me. Great kid, and it struck me the reason you wouldn't back him was because I was mixed up in his business. So I just came to say if that's the situation, why, I'm out, that's all—and you go ahead with him alone."

This was Ambrose's great moment, his big emotional scene. But when it came at last, after all his pondering and planning, it seemed very flat and unimportant. And for the life of him he could not have told how the old magnate was taking it.

"You're not a partner?" the soap king asked him at last.

"I should say not. I'm just a hired hand. He could can me any moment, but he's not the kind of guy who'd do that"—

"If I do not get the $15,000 I go to my lawyer's."

"Then you haven't power to sign—to make a deal"—

"I should say not," said Peale. "Why, he and Miss Grayson do all the signing. If I could have signed contracts I'd have spent $1,000,000 in advertising. And, believe me, you ought to back him, because honest, Mr. Martin, it's a great scheme—the 13 Soap. On the level, if it's handled right and the publicity end is"—

"Now, don't get started on advertising," Martin interposed, holding up his hand.

"That's right, too," said Ambrose lamely. "Well, I guess that's all. I wanted to tell you how I stood about Rodney. That's off my chest, so good afternoon."

Mr. Martin gave a good look at this young man, who was willing to sacrifice himself for Rodney, but outwardly he did not relent.

"Wait a minute," he said presently. "What did you boys mean by trimming that poor countess on the French rights?"

"Jumping Jupiter! Has she been here?" asked Peale, again alert.

Mr. Martin explained that she was here now, that she said she'd put Rodney in jail for fraud unless Mr. Martin made good that $15,000.

"I've got to pay her; can't see the boy disgraced," he concluded.

"Say, if you'd like to save that $15,000, I'll fix it for you," spoke up Peale.

"But she's got a contract," said Mr. Martin.

"I'll get it for you cheap," Peale answered him. "Pardon me, sir, but I know how to handle dames like her."

CHAPTER XVIII.

A Wedding.

MR. MARTIN looked at Peale again. Ambrose's mission had succeeded in a way he did not suspect.

"Mr. Peale, I like you," said old Martin.

"Huh!" said Peale.

"Have a cigar?" asked Martin.

Ambrose took it, feeling better than he had felt for many days.

He wondered idly what that butler guy meant presently when he stuck his head in and announced to his master that he had telephoned that party, who was at his office now. He heard Martin mutter:

"Good, good. Peale, I've got to go out on an important soap deal. Oh, by George, I nearly forgot," he added. "There's another matter I must attend to first. Peale, you'll find the countess in there. Do the best you can. We'll settle the details when I get back. Make yourself at home."

"Sure. This cigar's great company," said Peale. He strutted up and down cockily on the thick rug. He must attend to the countess, he remembered, and no fooling. So he went over to the door behind which she was hiding and threw it open with a flourish of fake French.

"Countess de Bull Run," he rattled on. "De jule—de joie—politern noblesse oblige."

"You ought to take up French, Ambrose," she said sweetly. "Your accent's immense. Well, little sweetheart"—

"Say, what are you doing in these parts?" Peale interrupted her.

"Oh, I came to see Mr. Martin," she said lightly.

"What for?"

"What do you think?"

"See here now, if you're aiming to trim the old man I won't stand for it," protested Ambrose.

"Ambrose, do me another favor," the countess begged.

"What is it?"

"Don't tell old Martin what I tried to do to you boys. He's the kind that would put me in jail. I'll be on the level. I did come here to try to trim him, but I'll cut it out. Honest I will. Oh, Ambrose, I don't like being a grafter."

"Nix, nix," said Peale. "He left me here to settle it. Where is the contract? Come on. Gimme—gimme"—

"You mean you've been on all the time?" cried the countess.

"Sure."

"And you let me sit there a moultin' all over the place again?"

"Gimme—gimme"—

"Oh, I suppose I've got to. Oh, I'm sick of soap anyhow. Thirteen may be lucky for you boys, but it has been a hoodoo for me."

She handed over the contract to him gracefully enough.

"And now, my little hearts of lettuce," Peale chanted, "this concludes your portion of the evening's entertainment."

"You are an 18 carat kid," said the countess. "Ta, ta," she added. "Ring me up some day."

"So long," said Ambrose. "Be good."

And so he assisted at the dismissal of one of Mr. Martin's callers that afternoon. Of the flight of Mr. Bronson of Chicago and his 50,000 cakes, he had not yet heard. Perhaps this was just as well. The mood of Ambrose this Saturday afternoon had grown far too genial anyway.

Into the middle of this mood, just as he was showing the countess to the door, with no intervention by the faithful Johnson, burst Mary, followed by Rodney in a tearing hurry. They stopped abruptly when they saw Ambrose.

"Oh, have you seen father?" Rodney asked. "Is he here?"

"I'm waiting for him now," Peale answered.

"It's most important," said Mary breathlessly.

"You remember the countess," Peale put in cautiously.

They all bowed, embarrassed, and there was an awkward pause, which the countess broke.

"Well, I guess I'm not wanted," she said perspicaciously, looking shrewdly at the trio, "so I'll trot. I'll trot. So long, you 13 soapsuds."

Alas for the inequalities of this world! If for Ambrose Peale these Much history had passed over their heads as well as the company's in the hours leading up to their visit to Mr. Martin's library and their foregathering there with Ambrose and the countess. The order from Brown & James had begun it, and that was really the soap king's fault, since he had waved his monopolistic wand and caused the

SETTLE YOUR HOME.

After Vacation Ends This Task Falls to the Housewife.

Coming home from a vacation is not relished by any worker, but it is particularly hard for the housewife, who must set her home in order immediately upon her return. And this is the lot which awaits most women who have spent the summer in the country and whose houses or apartments have been shut up during the hot weather.

A partially dismantled apartment is a most depressing sight to view upon one's homecoming and the prospect of all the work to be done to put the rooms in order will not add to the gayety of one's spirits. However, the work must be done and done quickly, so it must be accepted with the best grace possible.

If the housewife has been careful about closing up the house before her departure in the early part of summer, her task of reopening the rooms and putting them in order will be considerably lessened at this time of year. All that will be necessary will be to dust, strip off the coverings from furniture and pictures, put down the rugs after the floors have been oiled and hang up the curtains and outer coverings.

In opening up the house for winter occupation begin with the bedrooms, for these will be needed first. It is decidedly unhealthy to sleep even for one night in rooms that have been unaired for several weeks. So throw open the windows the moment you enter the house and let the fresh air clear out the musty odors. Now begin by taking down the bed and going over every crack and crevice carefully, wiping off every particle of dust and washing with gasoline if necessary. Do not use gasoline near fire or open light.

Next tackle the mattress. This should be thoroughly brushed, beaten and aired before being put back on the bed. The same treatment should be accorded the springs. While the bed is thus dismantled, the springs and mattresses having been sent to the roof for an airing if possible, wipe off the walls of the bedroom with a broom wrapped in flannel. This will do away with the chance of microbes remaining in the room from dust which may have collected on the walls.

Now the bed is ready to be made and the rest of the room set in order.

This work will take up probably an entire day, and as it is the most important and necessary work to be done after the housewife's return, she should rest content with her labors and leave the rest of the house for some future time.

It is unwise to try to accomplish too much after the return, for all the benefit of the vacation will be gone if the housewife becomes tired out while putting her house in order.

The Right Place

The ideal place to live would be
A farm with meadows stretching wide,
And right next door a grocery,
And bak'ry on the other side.

A theater across the way,
With all the latest comedies,
And next to that a grandstand, say,
Where one could watch ten inning ties.

The cowbells ringing in the lanes
While taxicabs and cars go by;
A station near with frequent trains;
Neat restaurants and open sky.

An apple tree 'neath which to sit
And view the traffic in the street,
And movies on a screen to fit
While breezes blew from off the wheat.

A brook to cross, a band to sport;
The city sights, a country view;
A rural urban home, in short,
I think a place like that would do.

GERMAN SOLDIERS BUSY MAKING WINTER WEAR.

Thousands of Shoes and Suits of Clothing Turned Out Daily.

Leipsig is busily engaged in preparing winter clothing for German soldiers. Before the war began the military outfitting business there was easily taken care of by a small plant just outside the city, employing not more than 250 men. The few wooden buildings of the plant have been added to until they now cover acres of ground, where some 4,000 men and women are employed. The output has increased to 3,000 shoes, 3,000 coats and several thousands of pairs of trousers a day.

Most of the men employees are of military age and capacity. They wear fatigue uniforms and live under military control in wooden barracks adjoining the plant. Few of them but could on a few hours' notice move out to the fighting front and exchange needles and tools for rifles. Simply they are more valuable as tailors and shoemakers than as infantrymen or artillerymen.

It has been reported that Germany is short of leather and that its supplies of cotton and woolen goods are not as large as they should be, but there is no indication of it at the Leipsig plant.

Leipsig is but one of a large number of German cities that have had to adapt themselves to army needs. Cassel, for instance, has turned over its huge, new and expensive public hall and gathering place to the making of clothing for the army, and in the rooms that once were the scenes of banquets, dances and merrymaking there today are piled thousands upon thousands of uniforms, and in its corridors hundreds of soldiers sit cross legged on tables, busily sewing.

PEACHES GIVEN AWAY FREE.

Doctor's Offer Heads Friends He Never Counted Toward Orchard.

"Come on in; the peaches are fine! Pick 'em!"

This invitation was extended by Dr. S. C. G. Watkins of Wyatebede lodge, North Caldwell, N. J., to all his friends and acquaintances. The doctor has a big orchard, and after gathering all the fruit he needed for his own use he did the neighborly thing.

The response was something marvelous. Dr. Watkins never realized how many of his friends owned automobiles, wagons, pushcarts and the like until he saw the steady line of vehicles heading through his gates.

The peaches were unusually good and unusually large. The peaches grown by Dr. Watkins are of the Morris White variety, particularly tasteful. The visitors carried away more than 200 bushels, and the orchard was practically depleted when they departed.

THREE LEGGED PULLET.

Extra Claw Aids Chicken to Make Record In Digging Worms.

A. W. Pierce is pointing with considerable pride to a three legged barred Plymouth Rock pullet which he has developed on his poultry farm near Verona, N. J. How it happened Pierce isn't sure, but he knows the father to be a great runner, having been chased out of the garden patch some hundreds of times last spring.

The pullet, now four months old, is twice as large as its brothers and sisters, being able to turn up 50 per cent more worms in a given time with its extra claw. Mr. Pierce is greatly pleased with having three drumsticks grow where only two grew before and is working over a system of matings which will now give him a three or even four legged fowl for table use.

MAPLES TO MARK GRAVES.

Emblem of Canada to Memorialize Her Gallant Soldiers.

How to mark permanently the resting places of the thousands of Canadian soldiers who have fallen in Flanders and in France is a matter to which the people of the Dominion are giving considerable thought.

From a member of the Overseas club comes the happy suggestion that, since the maple leaf is the emblem of Canada, maple trees be planted over the isolated graves and along the roads leading to the cemeteries. He has already sent millions of seeds to France and is to send more.

The species chosen is the sugar maple, and so France in time will have a beautiful memorial of the allies who gave their lives for her.

VACATION TIME FUN.

Why Don't You Begin Gathering Christmas Gifts Now?

The "Do Your Christmas Shopping Early" signs, which make their appearance between four and five months from now, really ought to be tacked up in the summer, for that is the very best time to shop as far as the comfort that comes from uncrowded stores is concerned.

So why don't you do your Christmas shopping now? If you are in the city look about the shops at your leisure and choose your gifts carefully. You will find uncrowded aisles and experienced and rested salesmen and saleswomen, a far different condition from that which prevails after the 1st of December.

If you are traveling about the United States this summer buy your gifts on your travels. Make out a list of such friends as you wish to remember with gifts at Christmas, and whenever you find anything that would make a particular appeal to one of them buy it and make note of it.

If you are spending the summer at the shore or in the country or in the mountains you can still do much toward getting your Christmas gifts together. Even if there are no shops near at hand there are lovely things to be had for a little pleasure giving exertion on your part.

Suppose you have a summer home in the country. Why not make jams and jellies of the wild fruits in your neighborhood? Wild plum conserve, wild grape jelly, wild blackberry jam—all these have a delicious flavor if properly made. At the nearest country store you can probably get attractive little jam pots in which these preserves, jams and jellies can be packed. If not, you can send to the nearest city for a consignment of the right sort of glasses or jars.

Half a dozen jars of jam packed into a little basket would make a most welcome gift to a young girl at college next Christmas. Four jars of assorted jelly daintily tied with holly and ribbons would be welcomed by an invalid friend, and the fact that they were made from wild fruits would carry a suggestion of freshness and health.

If you cannot make these preserves yourself perhaps you can buy them at some farmhouse. And perhaps there will be jars of extracted honey for sale and cakes of maple sugar. Or perhaps you can make little net bags to fill with sweet lavender blossoms, first put in colored silk bags.

Pillows filled with pine needles and covered with linen covers that may be appropriately embroidered or stenciled with cones are another dainty gift from the country.

For a child in school a scrapbook filled with carefully mounted specimens of wild flowers would prove useful and interesting. And you might dig up some small ferns in the woods and start them growing in pots. Later they could be put in pretty basket holders for gifts.

From the seashore bayberry candles, hand dipped, of course, are an appropriate gift. They can be given in sets of four or six, or one can be set in a candlestick of brass or pottery.

Bundles of driftwood, too, are welcomed by the woman with a fireplace. And bags or boxes of unusual shells are liked by small children.

MANGLED THE PROOFS.

Tolstoy Must Have Made His Printer's Life a Burden.

When "Anna Karenina" began to come out in the monthly Russki Vyestnik, writes Count Ilya Tolstoy in his "Reminiscences of Tolstoy," long galley proofs were posted to my father and he looked them through and corrected them.

At first he would mark the margins with the ordinary typographical signs, letters omitted, marks of punctuation and so on; then he would change individual words, and then whole sentences. That would be followed by erasures and additions until the proof sheets became a mass of patches that was perfectly black in places. It was impossible to send them back as they stood, because no one except my mother could make head or tail of the tangle of signs, transpositions and erasures. My mother would sit up all night copying the whole thing out afresh.

In the morning the pages lay on her table, neatly piled together, and covered with her fine, clear handwriting. Everything would be ready so that when Lyovotchka came down he could send the proof sheets off by post. My father would carry them to his study to have "one last look," and by evening the sheets were all written over and messed up once more.

"Sonya, my dear, I am very sorry, but I've spoilt all your work again; I promise I won't do it any more," he would say, showing her the passages he had inked over, with a guilty air. "We'll send them off tomorrow without fail." But that tomorrow was often put off for weeks, or even for months.

"There's just one bit I want to look through again," my father would say, but he would get carried away and rewrite it all afresh. There were even occasions when, after he had posted the proofs, my father corrected them by telegraph the next day.

Several times, in consequence of these corrections, the printing of the novel in the Russki Vyestnik was interrupted, and sometimes it did not come out for months together.

MONEY IN GOOD TASTE.

A Woman Who Capitalized Her Sense of the Beautiful.

A woman's good taste is a part of her stock in trade and could be made much more widely remunerative than it now is.

One would naturally suppose that the success of an auction depended mainly upon the wit and skill of the auctioneer. A prominent auction house in New York city has discovered that a woman's good taste in showing up things artistically, or in their true relations, or with a suggested use, is quite as valuable an asset as a voluble auctioneer.

For example, in a sale of oriental goods were some handsome old bird cages, wonderful creations in tortoise shell, black lacquer, ivory and jade. There were seven cages in all, and so spirited was the bidding that they brought prices ranging from $410 to $360.

The thing that did it was not anything said or done by the auctioneer, but the fact that in anticipation of the sale there had been put in each cage a pair of singing and twittering birds exactly suited in color to the cages in which they were placed. Cages and birds made a symphony of color. Without the birds in them the cages would not have brought half the price. Who but a woman would have thought of it?

The same auction house has found that a suitable and artistic arrangement of goods, all under the deft hand of its woman specialist, adds many dollars to the sales.—Leslie's.

A LECTURE ON CHRISTIAN SCIENCE

By CHARLES I. OHRENSTEIN, C. S. B.

Member Board of Lectureship of Mother Church, Boston.

What Jesus taught, did, and lived, may well be taken as absolute Christianity. All Christians will admit that his works ranged from providing for the simplest human needs, such as the tax money in the draught of fishes, to the healing of all kinds of diseases, and as in the case of Lazarus, to the raising of the dead.

Science is defined as the "knowledge of principles and causes." Now, did Jesus do these works through ignorance, or mere belief in something, or did he do them because of a specific, accurate, and demonstrable knowledge of their underlying Principle or cause? No rational being would claim that they were done through anything but such knowledge; and, if they were thus wrought through an exact knowledge or science, applied by Jesus Christ, were they not wrought through Christian Science? That Jesus looked upon his works as the result of this Science, is indicated by the immortal utterance; "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also,"—a definite demand upon his followers for like proofs that they understand and practice his teachings; and his immediate followers, and their followers for three hundred years after them, did as he commanded.

GOD

Jesus did his marvelous works because of his knowledge of their underlying Principle or cause. It will be admitted that this knowledge was the knowledge of God, the knowledge of the reign or the kingdom of God, the knowledge of man and of man's relationship to God which he came to teach mankind. What then is God?

In the Bible two terms are mainly used to designate God. One means "strength" or power, and the other "the existing one," or plainly, the one and only existence. It is generally admitted that God is supremely good. Applying this sense of God to the Bible designations, it becomes clear that God is the one and only power, that this power is supremely good, that He is the one and only existence or presence that is likewise good. It is this God that made all that was made, and all that He made He made like Himself, good, "very good." When it is remembered that all that is called intelligence could not have formed the idea indicated by the least primary object, it will be appreciated that the "great First Cause," called God, must be supreme, infinite intelligence or Mind. The Bible further speaks of God as "thy life," as the "Rock", meaning basic reality or Truth, and as "love,"—"God is love."

Taking these Bible definitions of God, and they are identical with those of Christian Science, is there any one who does not believe in God, or who would not trust Him? If so, there is some one who does not believe in and would not trust intelligence, Life, Truth, and Love. But all by the very fact that they are alive, know that this God is; that He is the one supreme and infinite good, and that each and every one is constantly in touch with and completely dependent upon Him.

THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN

Those who were commissioned by Jesus to preach were also commanded by him to heal. Not only did Jesus command his followers to preach and to heal, but he commanded them what to preach and in the light of the Christian Science which he taught, it was plain to them, as it is quite plain to Christian Scientists today, that what he commanded them to preach was intended to and did heal the sick and redeem the sinful. What was it that he told them to preach? "And as ye go, preach, saying, The Kingdom of Heaven is at hand." What is the kingdom of heaven?

If we remind ourselves of the idea of God which Christian Science teaches, and which has just been indicated, we shall see that the kingdom of heaven which Jesus commanded his disciples to preach, is indeed at hand, and that we are entitled to the full enjoyment of this kingdom, for "in him (God) we live, and move, and have our being." Recognizing this that the place wherein we are is "holy ground," as holy as God, how many of us would behave unseemly, debauch ourselves or others in any way, lie, cheat, rob, believe that there is something in our environment to injure, infect, or impair us? Would not disease or lack of ease, which is disease of every kind in the making, be banished, and the ease and peace of being in the presence of our Father, God, have possession of us?

MAN

Teaching this, Christian Science teaches that it is not strange that the sermon which Jesus bade his disciples to preach should heal; and there will be nothing strange about it if many here are healed by learning and remembering that the "kingdom of heaven is at hand"—indeed, not only at hand, but, as Jesus also said, "within you," within man.

What then is man? How do we, can we, tell what is a man? By how much of God one manifests. Jesus illustrated this. In response to Phillip's request, "Show us the Father," Jesus said, "Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known me, "Phillip?" Had Phillip seen the intelligence, power, Spirit, Life, Truth, and Love manifested by Jesus, and had he not seen a great deal of God and a great deal of man?

Jesus showed forth the perfect man, but not because of his physique. He said, "The flesh profiteth nothing." Can that which is truly man or woman be shown forth by mere flesh and blood? "And God (the all-intelligent, all-powerful, eternal Mind, Spirit, Life, Truth, and Love) said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness. . . So God created man in his own image. . . male and female created he them," and this godlike man is the only kind of man there is.

It was this true sense of being, this life purpose or mission, so clearly seen by Jesus when only twelve years old, which prompted him to say, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" In other words, Know ye not that as man, the image and likeness of God, I must show forth our Father, omnipotent Life, Truth, and Love? It was this reflection of the Father, the divine Spirit, without measure, that enabled Jesus to heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead.

THE DISCOVERY AND DISCOVERER

The recognition that no man has any other true mission than that which Jesus had, led Mrs. Eddy to the discovery of this Science. It healed her when she was at the point of death as the result of an accident, but she did not stop with that. Nothing short of the healing and redemption of all mankind could satisfy her loving heart. She practiced what she had discovered, healing others and teaching them in turn to do the same. She made clear her doctrine in a textbook of this Science, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," which has done more for the alleviation of human ills and the reclamation of mankind than any book ever written except the Bible. She wrote other books making clear her meaning; organized the church which now spreads its branches over the whole known world; with members numbering hundreds of thousands who like her and her immediate followers have been healed, many of them of what are called incurable diseases.

Looking back fifty years, when the idea of spiritual healing through Christian Science was new to the world, and tracing its progress, one can see, though dimly, the difficulties which this noble woman must have encountered. Through unimaginable hardships, trials and persecution sheb ore herself not with mere fortitude, but kith a Christlike confidence which will continue to be an ever increasing inspiration to mankind.

JOFFRE'S ATTACK FAILS; ONSLAUGHT "SEEMS WRECKED"

German Second Line Mows Down French [illegible]d British, Whose Casualties Are Placed [illegible]100,000 Men---Witness Describes Battle

The first description by an eyewitness of the assault made by the Allies upon the second and third German line of defense in the Artois and Champagne is received by the International News Service and is as follows:

The Allies' combined general attack has failed. Today I was present at a battle at a place in Champagne, twenty-five miles from Massiges, where the French tried to drive a wedge from the south toward the east. The trenches were occupied by German terrtirials in order to leave the line regiments free for action.

A cannonade more terrific than anything hitherto known in the world's history started on September 22 and continued uninterruptetly for fifty hours. The earth trembled for nearly forty miles around under the roar of thousands of cannon fired on an average of thirty shells per minute.

On the 24th, while the battle was raging along the whole line from the ocean to Switzerland, column upon column of allied troops stormed the German lines with great bravery. They came on in double waves. Each column was formed into twol ines with an interval of about thirty yards.

The first German trenches were entirely destroyed by the artilery fire, but from the German second line the attacking columns were literally mowed down by the fire of the territorials and the reserve. Thus the attack failed.

"Only between Tahure and Hevron did the French break the German line on a front of from three and a half to four miles, penetrating to the depth of about two miles. The French losses were enormous. Great ridges of dead covered the foreground. A wall [illegible]f Frenchb odies was thrown up parallel to the German trenches.

"I have spoken to several French officers who were made pris[illegible]nd all tell of the fearful losses. Of one battalion only four [illegible]d 108 men were left.

[illegible]nglish attacked at the same time from the west, north of Ar[illegible] the same conditions.

[illegible] purpose of this double attack was to force the Germans to retire or to cut off the whole angle of the German line, which has its apex before Soissons.

"This plan failed, notwithstanding the extensive preparation and bravery with which the attacks were made.

"Possibly new attempts will be made, but now success seems impossible. The critical moment for the Germans on the west front has passed. The offensive of the Allies seems wrecked. This is probably the last supreme effort to bring into combination all the available moral and material forces of the Allies. It must have cost them more than 100,000 dead and wounded."

Both Stdes Lose Heavily In Dvinsk Fighting

Petrograd.—Fierce fighting is in progress on the Russian front, with Dvinsk as the most critical point. Evidently the Germans have concentrated an enormous number of guns on the Dvinsk front, relying on their favorite tactics of hurricane fire to reduce the position. The losses on both sides are great, the Germans making desperat eefforts to pierce the Russian front.

The advent of huge reinforcements and the continuous improvement of the Russian artillery enables the Russians to take the first stand. General Ruszky appears to be hammering at von Bulow's left flank from the direction of iMtau, which may cause a diversion in favor of Dvinsk.

Military authorities express the hope that the Russian success southeast of Dvinsk also will help to ameliorate the situation in the city. Hitherto Dvinsk has formed a dangerous salient exposed to German envelopment, whereas now the Russian flank brings it practically nearer the line of the Russian front. Nevertheless the city is not yet free from peril of envelopment since the Germans still hold the district southeast in the region of Lake Drisviaty.

The correspondent of the Novoe Vreyma states German airmen are dropping bombs on the city. The hurricane of fire of heavy artillery is incessant. The Germans are drenching the Russian trenches with heavy shells, but the troops are steadfastly holding out. At one point Russian howitzers silenced a German battery.

WHERE THE WOMEN VOTE NOW AND WHEN THEY WON RIGHTS

Wyoming (1869), Colorado (1893), Utah (1896), Idaho (1896), Washington (1910), California (1811), Arizona, Kansas and Oregon (1912), and Nevada and Montana (1914). Alaska has a suffrage for women. Illinois granted authority to women to vote for all except state officers.

Abroad women have preliminary suffrage in Australia, New Zealand, Isle of Man, Finland, Norway and Iceland.

In eighteen states here women have right to vote at school elections.

Woman suffrage as a live, almost burning, issue makes its eastern debut during the next thirty days.

In New Jersey its fate will be decided at a special election on October 19. It will engage the attention of the voters of New York, Pennsylvania and Massachusetts on November 2.

In New eJrsey the women have grown enthusiastic over the indorsement of their cause by Lindley M. Garrison and Joseph P. Tumulty. They are jubilant over the semi-official promise that the President will give them support. The Smith-Nugent democratic organization in New eJrsey is opposed to the women, however.

In New York the politicians believe that the amendment will be defeated. Their predictions range from 100,000 to 200,000. Tammany Hall can defeat the amendment if it chooses. Up to date it has taken no action, and it may remain passive.

In Pennsylvania the women expect to win, but decline to give figures. The opponents have a different belief. The political organizations here, as in New York State, are shying at the issue.

Massachusetts appears to be hostile to the proposal. The organizations refused to endorse it. Governor Walsh favors the amendment, but the organizations are said to be working against it.

Two Football Elevens Redeem the Loss of Saturday's Playing

One of the largest crowds that has assembled for some time to witness games of football appeared on the fair grounds yesterday to usher in the 1915 season. The games resulted in victories for Fulton lads. So great was the number of persons on hand that the managers of the teams were compelled to rope off the gridiron. This action received a lot of commendation as by it every spectator was enabled to obtain a clear vision of the field. Not only did this feature of yesterday's arrangements please the hundreds of spectators, but the exhibition of up-to-date football displayed by the teams was all that could be desired.

Phoenix Didn't Find the Line

The Tigers of Fulton started off the afternoon with a splendid victory over the Phoenix team. The local boys rolled up 30 points while their opponents failed to get over the Fulton goal line. In the Nondescript-Shakespeare game which followed immediately after some brilliant playing was seen. The Ward brothers especially distinguished themselves with long end runs and open field running.

The Oswego team outweighed the local boys 40 pounds to a man and in the first part of the game it looked like a complete walkaway. The heavy Oswego forwards swept the light local boys before them like so much paper and in the first and second quarters they made several long marches down the field without any apparent opposition.

After see-sawing back and forth in the opening period, the Oswego team started their first march down the field.

They came to within a half yard of the goal line and at that point were held for downs. Ward was obliged to punt from behind the goal posts. Several times during this period, the lighter team field at critical moments.

The second quarter started with the same onward march down the field, but this time the Oswego boys were not stopped. After a series of line bucks in the local boys' territory, the ball was carried over. Score: Nondescripts, 0; Shakespeare, 6. The ball was then kicked off to Fulton. At this stage of the game the new style of football came into play. With end runs, forward and delayed passes the ball was carried by the local boys to within five yards of the Oswego goal line when time was called.

Changes Proved Effective

After the rest period the Nondescripts came on the field with a reconstructed team. The heavier men were taken from the back field and placed on the line. Johnson and Deal were switched to tackles. Reavy was taken from quarter and placed at half. John Ward went from end to fullback, Taylor went in at right end, and George Ward took his place at quarterback.

On the kick-off George Ward received the ball and instantly lined up his team for a series of open plays which soon resulted in a score. The touchdown was not allowed, however, a dispute arising as to whether or not the ball was carried over the goal line. In the third and fourth quarters the open style of playing resulted in touchdowns for Ward's boys. The last score was made by "Scabby" Ward who ran 60 yards for a touchdown.

FULTON HIGH IS BEATEN IN FIRST GAME OF SEASON

East Syracuse Won on Soggy Field---New Recruits Worked Well---Local Boys Suffered as Result of Severe Handicaps.

Fulton High school, in their first game of the football season, was defeated by the East Syracuse High school team on Saturday by the score of 22 to 0. The teams were very evenly matched as to weight but the local organization was severely handicapped by the fact that seven of the F. H. S. had never before played in a game. The flip of the coin gave the choice to East Syracuse. They chose to receive the kick-off. E. Frawley kecked off in good form. Before the F. H. S. line realized what was happening the ball, by a series of buck and end runs, had been rushed up the field for a touchdown. Terry kicked the goal. In this first assault the home team tried one forward pass which was made incomplete by D. O. O'Brien, Fulton chose to receive the kick. The ball was kicked poorly and short to the right. Kraus covered the ball but no gain was made. After failing to gain the distance, Captain Frawley punted the ball out of danger. After Fulton held for three downs East Syracuse was forced to punt and it was the F. H. S. ball on their own 20-yard line. Frawley and O'Brien made gains but E. S. held on the fourth down. The first quarter ended with E. S. in possession of the ball, third down and four yards to go.

The second play of the next quarter put the ball over for the second touchdown. An attempt was made at a punt out but the result was poor and no goal resulted. F. H. S. got the ball on the kick-off but lost it on the next play on a poor pass due to the slippery condition of the field, and ball. E. S. by a series of end runs and latteral passes made the third touchdown but failed in the punt out. On the next kick-off Fulton fumbled the ball and E. S. recovered it. By this time the F. H. S. line and ends had discovered what they were expected to do and the new recruits had recovered from their first bewilderment and they held so that E. S. lost the ball on downs. On the third down Frawley punted. E. S. tried a forward pass which Fulton rendered incomplete. On the next play the half was up.

The second half Judd replaced Mangeot at end. F. H. S. received the kick. This time the Fulton boys tried the open style of play. One forward pass was incomplete. The next pass, Johnson to Frawley, gave F. H. S. first down. The next attempt to pass was caught by Molisky, the E. S. fullback. After E. S. made two first downs, E. Frawley threw Terry for a loss on third down. E. S. punted. F. H. S. made two incomplete forward passes. Frawley punted and the quarter was over.

On the 25-yard line, with fourth down and one yard to go, E. S. decided to try a goal from the field. In spite of the condition of the

I. ALDERMAN HEADS NEW JEWISH ORGANIZATION; S. S. TO BE STARTED

Temporary officers of the newly planned Jewish synagogue for Fulton were elected last night at the home of Samuel Waldhorn in Oneidt st. I. Alderman will act as president of the congregation; H. Rosenbloom, vice-president; David Katz, treasurer; Samuel Waldhorn and I. Fox, trustees.

No decisive action was taken at last night's meeting to establishing the new institution, only an informal discussion taking place in addition to the appointment of the executive committee. More pledges of contributions were received.

It is announced that the first move of the congregation will be to make arrangements for the education of the Jewish children of Fulton in the history of the race and the study of the old Testament. A teacher will be brought from Syracuse who will hold a Sunday school session every week. In fact, the chief purpose of the newly formed congregation is to first of all educate the younger folk. While it is customary to teach the Jewish children in the Hebrew language this plan will not be followed out here. Instruction will be tnirely in English.

It is likely that for the time being quarters will be established downtown, in rooms over S. Waldhonr's store. If the committee decides on doing this, as is more than likely, Sunday school will be held before the end of the month.

Next Sunday night a final meeting will be held in Mr. Waldhorn's house.

No Headdress.

A prominent New York business man, who declines the use of his name for reasons most obvious, is telling this one on his wife:

On his return from a long tour of the west this business man's wife was narrating to him the delightful times she had while he was away.

"One night I was invited to a dinner party at a smart cafe," she said, "and one of the guests was the Turkish ambassador. He was well informed on every subject and was one of the most entertaining dinner companions I ever knew."

"Did he wear a fez?" asked the husband.

"No, indeed!" she replied. "He was clean shaved."—Saturday Evening Post.

The Last Straw.

Mary Jane's master is a slightly eccentric bachelor. He has one most irritating habit. Instead of telling her what he wants done by word of mouth he leaves on his desk or on the kitchen table or anywhere else where she is likely to see it a note curtly directing her to "Dust the dining room" or "Turn out my cupboard," and so on.

The other day he bought some note paper with the usual die sunk address imprinted upon it from the stationer and ordered it to be sent home.

Mary Jane took it in, and the first thing that caught her eye was a note attached to the package. She read it open eyed.

"Well," she said, "he's asked me to do a few things in his blessed notes, but this is the limit. I won't stand it no longer!"

For the note read:

"Die inside this package."

The Leg Was There.

A great sensation was created the other day at a station just previous to the starting of the morning express for London. The guard was about to start the train when a fussy and fat old gentleman trotted up to him and said:

"Wait a minute, will you, please, while I"—

"Impossible, sir," said the guard, putting the whistle to his lips.

"But you must wait!" cried the old gentleman excitedly. "There's a man's leg under the wheel!"

"Good gracious! Where is he?" inquired the horror stricken guard. "Hold on there!"

He hurried after the old gentleman, while a couple of porters jumped down on to the line amid great excitement. After a short search one of the porters handed up a rush basket containing a large leg of mutton.

"Thank you," said the old gentleman.

"What do you mean, sir?" roared the guard. "You said"—

"I said a man's leg was under the wheel, and so it was. I paid for this leg, and if it isn't mine I should like to know to whom it belongs."

Then the train moved on.—London Answers.

Toothsome Revenge.

During the reign of Charles II., the age of gallantry, it was the custom among gentlemen when they drank a lady's health in order that they might do her still more honor to destroy at the same time some part of their clothing.

Upon one occasion Sir Charles Sedley was dining in a tavern and had a particularly fine necktie on, whereupon one of his friends to play him a trick drank to the health of a certain lady, at the same time throwing his necktie in the fire. Of course Sir Charles had to do likewise, but he got even, for not long after that, dining with the same company, he drank the health of a fair one, at the same time ordering a dentist whom he had engaged to be present to pull out a refractory tooth which had been troubling him. Every one else was obliged in this manner to mourn a molar.

Money Wasted.

"Well, my dear," said the head of the family jubilantly, "I closed the deal for the new house today. I had the title examined and found it perfectly clear. It cost me $100 for the examination, but"—

"Now isn't that a perfect shame!" interrupted his better half. "All that money wasted for nothing."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

THE CITY IS THE PEOPLE'S BUSINESS

About the only criticism open to the public in the visit of John D. Rockefeller, Jr., to his mines in Colorado is the lateness of the inspection. It is many monthe since he gave his word that he would go and see for himself the conditions there. In the meantime he smugly taught his Bible class the golden rule and the miners were left to feel that his only interest in them was what he could get out of them while they worked for their daily bread.

Mr. Rockefeller's failure to keep his promise made to Mother Jones months ago had its serious consequences, but now that he has shown the democratic side of his makeup he is getting the admiration he deserves. After all, it is the old, old question of lack of community interest which infects the big interests and small and large towns. It is the same spirit which kills interest in home institutions, such as the public schools, musical organizations, chambers of commerce and hundreds of other matters that should command the attention of a community. It is the same spirit which has failed to arouse interest in the Fulton Chamber of Commerce and at least one other institution in this city—the Citizens' band, making this organization almost beg for its existence. It is the detestable spirit of non-co-operation and Fulton is today a sufferer.

The best evidence at hand of this fact is the word of a musician of this city, who said in effect, that the people do not seem to care whether they have a good or bad band; that the members of the fine musical organization of this city get little or no encouragement to become proficient with their instruments.

There is a reason for this and it lies with everyone of us to uproot the evil. In the days of the old Chamber of Commerce there were "get-together" nights at least once a month. It was charged that the meetings were non-productive of tangible results; that they partook of the nature of love-feasts and nothing ever came of the talk in and out of session, yet one is able to defy a person to say in those days when the business session wound up with a "gabfest" there did not result a feeling of comraderie. The meetings in the old days of cider and fried cakes had the get-together spirit and some things were done, many of them being overdone, it is true, but these meetings were truly sociability affairs. But what of that? They brought together a crowd of men who evinced interest in town topics.

Is it any wonder, then, that community interest in this city is dying? Is it any wonder that, instead of there being a spirit of active co-operation with the Chamber of Commerce one finds criticism? No. emphatically no. It is the same old story, the story that had to be learned by John D. Rockefeller, Jr., who left with his hired overseers the work of looking after the interests of hard-working employes. No community interest is manifest in the Colorado mining towns. There conditions are described as bordering upon military despotism, and why? Because the people are not in touch one with another.

Does This Cap Fit You

By HERBERT KAUFMAN

Author of "Do Something! Be Something!"

ADVERTISING isn't a crucible with which lazy, bigoted and incapable merchants can turn incompetency into success—but one into which brains and tenacity and courage can be poured and changed into dollars. It is only a short cut across the fields—not a moving platform. You can't "get there" without "going some."

It's a game in which the worker—not the shirker—gets rich.

By its measurement every man stands for what he is and for what he does, not for what he was and what he did.

Every day in the advertising world is another day and has to be taken care of with the same energy as its yesterday.

The quitter can't survive where the plugger has the ghost of a chance.

Advertising doesn't take the place of business talent or business management. It simply tells what a business is and how it is managed. The snob whose father created and who is content to live on what was handed to him, can't stand up against the man who knows he must build for himself.

What makes you think that you are entitled to prosper as well as a competitor who works twice as hard for his prosperity?

Why should as many people deal at your store, as patronize a shop that makes an endeavor to get their trade and shows them that it is worth while to come to its doors?

Why should a newspaper send as many customers to you, in half the time it took to fill an establishment which advertised twice as long and paid twice as much for its publicity?

This is the day when the best man wins—after he proves that he is the best man—when the best store wins, when it has shown that it is the best store—when the best goods win, after they've been demonstrated to be the best goods.

If you want the plum you can't get it by lying under the tree with your mouth open waiting for it to drop—too many other men are willing to climb out on the limb and risk their necks in their eagerness to get it away from you.

It is a man's game—this advertising—just hanging on and tugging and straining all the time to get and keep ahead. It is the finite expression of the law of Competition, which sits in blind-folded justice over the markets of the world.

Why Bowser Exaggerates

Mrs. Bowser Demands to Know.

By M. QUAD.

Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

"Mr. Bowser."

Mr. Bowser had read the evening paper and finished his cigar and was nodding in sleep when the voice of Mrs. Bowser, as above, reached his drowsy ear and gave him a jump.

"What is it he growled?" as he opened his eyes and scrambled around.

"I want to talk with you."

"Well, go ahead. You needn't scare a man half to death because you want to talk with him. I was dreaming that Dr. Cook and I were searching for the west pole out in Oregon."

Mrs Bowser looked at him for a minute, and then began:

"Mr. Bowser, I want to know why you exaggerate the way you do. It is getting to be something shameful, and it has got to stop!"

"What do you mean, woman?" he exclaimed as he suddenly roused up.

"I will tell you what I mean, sir. One evening about six weeks ago our minister and his wife called. During the conversation he mentioned that a friend of his passed through the fire in the north woods of Canada two or three years ago. He said that his friend saw two black bears with their fur afire. You remember, don't you?"

"Yes, I remember."

"And you at once turned around and said that while you and a companion were out in the Rocky mountains hunt-

"HE CARRIED YOU TO SAFETY."

ing a forest fire took place at night. You knew nothing about it until the tent was burning over your heads. The other man had already suffocated, but you rolled out of the flames and ran seven miles. Then you stopped to draw a long breath, and you found that your eyebrows had been singed off, your ears blistered, your hair turned to a brick color and the soles of your shoes burned through in seven different places. You had just started to run another seven miles, when a huge grizzly bear approached you and laid down upon the ground that you might mount to his back. You did so, and he carried you to safety and licked your burned ears before he passed from sight. You told that story Mr. Bowser, didn't you?"

"I did," he calmly replied.

"I was looking at our callers as you related it, and their faces told me that they believed it all a monstrous lie."

"Well, I can't help that."

"It was one evening about four weeks ago that Mr. Bascomb and his wife called. He and you got to talking about the war and he said that during the civil war he captured nine of the enemy with only a club in his hand, and was made an officer for so doing. He told that didn't he, Mr. Bowser?"

"I should say he did?"

"And then you had to have your inning. You related that during the Boer war you were commander of a British man of war. At daylight one morning as you were cruising around you saw a Boer warship three or four miles away. She also saw you and endeavored to escape, but you put on steam and overhauled her. She ran up the white flag of surrender, but you paid no attention to it and opened fire with your 160 great guns. She went to the bottom in five minutes carrying with her her crew of 7,000 men. Not one of the poor fellows escaped. You were made Admiral Bowser for your great gallantry. Mr. Bowser, you reeled that story off as if you were telling about digging a woodchuck out of his hole."

"Yes, it was easy work," he half yawned.

"But do you think that either one of them believed one single word of the story? In fact, you had only begun it when I saw Bascomb wink at his wife. He kept up the winking all through it, and three or four times she had to make great efforts to choke back her giggles and her titters."

"But why did he wink and she want to giggle?" asked Mr. Bowser.

"I'll tell you why. Both of them knew that you were not in the Boer war; that the Boers had no warships; that no man-of-war ever carried a crew of above a thousand men. Mr. Bowser, your story contained three of the most whopping lies I ever heard."

"Oh, I don't know about that."

"One evening about two weeks ago," said Mrs. Bowser after looking at him in astonishment, "our neighbors, Mr. and Mrs. Green, came in for a game of cards. We were just ready to sit down at the table when Mr. Green mentioned the fact that he had just met that day the man who had saved his life some thirty years ago. As a boy Mr. Green had gone out to skate on a small lake. He had been skating about three-quarters of an hour when a large wolf came out of the forest and began to pursue him. The pursuit had lasted nearly an hour, and the boy was about to fall from exhaustion when the man spoken of came along with his dog and the wolf was frightened away. Mr. Bowser, did you tell a story to match Mr. Green?"

"Most certainly," he answered.

"Yes, you did. And Mr. Green began laughing as soon as you started in. He seemed to understand that there was a whopper coming, and he was right. You said that when you were a boy fifteen years old and your parents lived near a river in Florida you went out one night with your skates to have a little spin. Wolves were plenty in that location, but you did not think that any wolf would be so daring as to attack young Samuel Bowser. You didn't even take a crowbar with you as a weapon of defense. When you made the statement Mrs. Green was looking on the floor for a lost hairpin. You may have thought she had lost one, but I knew better. She wanted to get her face out of sight so that she could laugh."

"But why did she want to laugh?" asked Mr. Bowser.

Mrs. Bowser's only direct reply to this was a look of contempt, and then she went on:

"You had only gone half a mile on you skates when you heard the howl of a wolf. Did it scare you? Not much. Young Samuel Bowser was not a kid to get scared over the howl of one wolf. You simply continued to cut pigeon wings and curlycues. Presently there came the howl of a second wolf. No attention was paid to it. The howl was heard by your mother at home, but she only greeted it with smiles. She didn't know much about wolves, but she did know her son Sammy from head to heels. At this critical point, Mr. Bowser, you must have noticed that Mr. Green went to the front door to see if it was raining. He was gone about five minutes and must have had five hearty laughs during that time. His face was still twitching as he came in."

"I don't see why he wanted to laugh," remarked Mr. Bowser.

"Maybe not. There came a howl of a third, fourth and fifth wolf, but you only smiled in disdain. Your mother heard them, too, but she did not even stop her knitting. As you moved slowly up the river whistling as you went, there came more howls until you finally estimated the number of wolves at fifteen. Then, of a sudden a pack of the fierce and hungry brutes dashed out upon the ice and with foam flecked jaws and clashing fangs rushed upon you. Was Samuel Bowser there to be pulled down and made wolf meat of? No, you weren't there, were you, Mr. Bowser?"

"I don't remember that I was," he replied.

"No. You were scooting up the river, not for your life, but to amuse yourself with the savage brutes. You let them come so near the foam flew on your coattails, but at no time were you in danger.

"It is said that a wolf can tire out a horse, but when they got hold of young Samuel Bowser they lost their job. After he had drawn them fifty miles up the river they began to wheeze and pant and tire out. Then three or four of the pack turned back to look for an easier chicken roost, and those who continued on lost their speed and spirit. How far did you lead those wolves up river, Mr. Bowser?"

"Never mind that," was the reply.

"I think you said 150 miles. It was then coming daylight, and you wanted to have some fun with those wolves. You circled around them. You pulled their ears. You grabbed them by the tail and swung them about. You gave them an occasional kick. You drove them before you to the starting point of the night before, and there you booted them into the woods, where they fell down exhausted. Your mother had not been alarmed over your absence, but she had come down to the bank of the river to see if any muskrats were playing around. She held out her arms to you and called you her gallant boy. You might have continued that wolf story for another hour, but the Greens rose up and said they must go home on account of the baby, and they went. I heard them laughing all the way home."

"I will see Green tomorrow and ask him what they were laughing about," said Mr. Bowser.

"You needn't see him. They were laughing about your lie. In the first place, no river in Florida ever freezes hard enough to bear the weight of a baby, and no living boy or man ever skated 150 miles without a stop. There were various other flaws in your story, and even an idiot could have told that there wasn't a word of truth in it. Mr. Bowser, why do you tell these falsehoods?"

"Well, Mrs. Bowser," answered Mr. Bowser after hesitating for a long minute, "if you think that I am the sort of a man who will let another man come into my house and sit face to face with me and tell a bigger lie than I can you had better get acquainted with me all over again."

And as Mrs. Bowser had not gained much of a point she said no more, and Bowser will probably continue to lie at every favorable opportunity.

MEN AVAILABLE FOR WAR.

Two and One-half Millions Ready in New York State.

Albany, N. Y.—There are 2,500,000 men in New York state between the ages of eighteen and forty-five, therefore, available for war duty, Secretary of State Hugo announced in one of his census bulletins.

The June enumeration shows, he says, that there were approximately 250 officers and 6,800 enlisted men at the army posts of the state, 60 officers and 1,300 men in New York's naval militia and 1,000 officers and [illegible] men in the national guard. Thousands of men besides these have had [illegible] military training, either in the regular army, national guard or in college or military academies.

Figures obtained from the adjutant general's office show little change in the strength of the national guard in fifty years. At present it stands: Officers, 1,000; enlisted men, 16,080; total, 17,080. In 1857 it was: Officers 1,827; enlisted men, 14,668; total, 16,495.

The possible strength of the division under the present federal regulations is: Officers, 743; enlisted men, 21,930; total, 22,673.

To give more men at least the rudiments of a military training Lieutenant Colonel E. V. Howard of the adjutant general's office favors what he terms a "mild conscription." Every young man on reaching the age of eighteen years would be called to serve under the colors for three years, during which time he would give thirty days of active service each year. A call to arms would find, then, thousands of men better fitted to serve their country.

It Can't Be Done.

HOME TOWN HELPS

BEST HOUSING OF WORKMEN

Subject to Which City Planners Are Giving Deserved and Increasing Attention.

Work done in uncomfortable surroundings and under mental protest is poor work, and work done under unhealthful conditions is likely to be of a still lower order. Therefore, the big manufacturer has given his earnest attention to the housing of his plant. Besides laying his plans for the greatest floor space, lowest cost and highest efficiency of arrangement, he has kept the health and well being of his employes in mind in the erection of factory buildings. This has paid him large returns in dollars and cents.

Despite the decided advantage of a healthy, contented force of operatives, however, there is still a large class of manufacturers in this country who persist in regarding their workingmen as machines, to be run as cheaply as possible with the least possible attention. They forget that the machine is not an inspired thing, that its output of a certain quality of work is known and that it either can or cannot come up to this known output; while, on the other hand, the output of the employe throughout the year can be, at best, apronimated, and, in ill health or when ill at ease, the employe may fall far short of his best, both in quality and amount of work done, without bringing the notice of his employer or next superior upon him.

The humanitarian factory is merely a matter of education.

It is not only a thing to be wished for by sentimental well wishers of the race, but it is good business for the individual and good economy and better politics for society. Foremost engaged in the work of educating the backward manufacturer is the United States department of labor, aided by a legion of writers, sociologists and labor organizations. By process of competition even the sweatshop must succumb before the sanitary factory.—Frederic J. Haskin.

HOW FINE BUILDINGS HELP

Best Possible Form of Advertising Some Examples Given Us by the Old World.

Everybody will talk about New York's circular courthouse. Immediately this building will pay for itself in the delight it will furnish that city and in the interest it will create outside of it.

While St. Mark's square was not constructed as an advertisement, it has taken thousands of travelers to Venice.

The Ringstrasse, that matchless circular thoroughfare, attracts the whole world to Vienna.

I suppose that everybody in Italy walked to Rome in the old days to see the Coliseum, and if anyone in Greece failed to visit the Acropolis he was no patriot.

As soon as one lands in India one hears the praises of the Taj Mahal.

A beautiful building does not cost much more than a monstrosity.

It doesn't profit a town to do a big thing in a little way.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Care of City's Shade Trees.

Too much credit cannot be given the street tree committees of the park commission for the energy and intelligence with which it has entered upon its task of caring for the shade trees in the city streets, says the Philadelphia Ledger. The story of what has been accomplished with little money is told not alone in the statistics of trees sprayed and protected, but in the actual condition of the trees in all parts of the city and in the conspicuous reduction in the number and ravages of the caterpillars. This is a form of improvement in actual civic conditions, material and esthetic, that cannot be measured in figures, yet is so distinct an addition to the beauty and comfort of the city streets that the fullest co-operation should be afforded the committee both by city councils and by the individual property owners, and especially by the owners of trees on the sidewalks.

THE RIGHT TO STRIKE.

Report of Employers' Representatives on Industrial Commission.

The report to congress made by the employers' representatives of the federal commission on industrial relations was signed by Harris Weinstock, Richard H. Aishton and S. Thurston Ballard.

The three men who signed the report are rated as millionaires, all employers of labor. Weinstock is a retired department store manager from the Pacific coast. Ballard is the biggest flour miller in the south and lives at Louisville. Aishton is vice president of the Chicago Northwestern railroad. The charges against employers made by these employers' representatives on the commission follow:

"That they have resorted to questionable methods to prevent their workers from organizing.

"That they have attempted to defeat democracy by more or less successfully controlling courts and legislatures.

"That they have exploited women and children and unorganized workers.

"That they have resorted to all sorts of methods to prevent the enactment of remedial legislation.

"That they have employed gun men in strikes who were disreputable characters and who assaulted innocent people and committed other crimes most reprehensible in character.

"That they have paid lower wages than competitive conditions warranted.

"That they have worked their people long hours and under insanitary and dangerous conditions.

"That they have exploited prison labor at the expense of free labor.

"That they have been contract breakers with labor.

"That they have attempted through the authorities to suppress free speech and the right of peaceful assembly.

"That they have deliberately and for selfish ends bribed representatives of labor.

"And that all of these things tend to produce industrial unrest, with all its consequent and farreaching ills.

"We feel, with organized labor, that there should be no restriction put upon the right to strike, realizing, as we do, that the strike is the only weapon which in the interest of labor can be effectively and legally used to aid in bettering its conditions."

To these confessions of the methods that have been employed against labor these representatives of the employing class add the following remarkable admissions:

"When labor is effectively organized it has two most powerful weapons at its command that the employer, as a rule, dreads and fears because of the great damage these weapons can inflict on him—namely, the strike and the primary boycott, both of which are within the moral and legal rights of the worker to use.

"We say frankly that if we were wage earners we would be unionists, and as unionists we would feel the keen responsibility of giving the same attention to our trade union duties as to our civic duties."

RAINCOAT MAKERS WIN.

Union Gets More Pay and Shorter Hours From Manufacturers.

The officers of the Waterproof Garment Makers' assocation of New York city, which controls a large percentage of the manufacture of raincoats, have signed an agreement with the Waterproof Garment Workers' union conceding the wage increases demanded. The new wage scale calls for 70 cents an hour for operators and cementers, $27.50 a week for cutters, $24 a week for pressers, $20.25 for underpressers, $15 for part pressers and $18 for machine button sewers.

In addition to these increases, which mean from 15 to 30 per cent addition to the wages of the workers, the employers have granted a forty-eight hour week, review of discharges by an impartial tribunal, double pay for overtime and inspection of shops by a union representative to adjust grievances. Under the peace contract all contractors and submanufacturers must be governed by the same conditions as those existing in the main shops. There will be no cessation of work in the shops of the members of the association.

Our Shrinking Earth.

Professor Rollin D. Salisbury of the University of Chicago says a continuous process of contraction is going on inside the earth and will continue until all the chemicals within it have been transformed into the densest compounds, millions of years hence. Earthquakes are a result of the contracting process.

STIRRING CAREER OF "WALLINGFORD" STAR

BURR McINTOSH, NOW PLAYING FILM ROLE, HAS LIVED ADVENTUROUS LIFE.

STAR ATHLETE AT COLLEGE

Journalist and Editor of Wide Repute, Famed Photographer and Noted Actor Among His Many Experiences.

Actor, author, photographer, publisher, lecturer, and coal mine magnate, here is a list of activities any one of which is sufficient to engage an ordinary man his whole life, but Burr McIntosh is no ordinary man. That's why he has been signed for the Wharton production of Pathe's "The New Adventures of J. Rufus Wallingford." George Randolph Chester said Mr. McIntosh was the one man to play "Wallingford", and his advice has been followed.

Mr. McIntosh was a classmate at Princeton University with the Hon. Job Hedges, Senator Pomerene of Ohio, Hon. John Harlan of Chicago, Wm. Steward Tod, the philanthropic millionaire; the late "Alec" Moffat, and others, and he is by no means the least famous of that famous group. Look at the height and width of him and you will readily believe that back in his college days he held the 100 yard intercollegiate championship and played on the varsity baseball and football teams.

BURR McINTOSH

On leaving college he went back to his home in Pittsburgh where his father was president of the largest bituminous coal mining company in the country. Our college athlete at once jumped into both business and politics forming the "Six Foot Republican Marching Club" of 1[?]0 men, each of whom was six feet or over in his stocking feet. Pittsburgh still speaks with pride of that remarkable organization.

Tiring of the coal business, Mr. McIntosh left to become a journalist in Philadelphia, and got a job at $10 a week on the "Philadelphia News." Within five weeks he had a full page expose of the most notorious thieves' resort in the city. The proprietor of the dive, James Kane, was starting for the "News" office with a gun in his pocket when he ran into McIntosh's brother "Andy" and killed him instead.

Having sufficiently proven his versatility in business and reporting, Mr. McIntosh went on the stage, making his debut in Bartley Campbell's play "Paquita" at the Fourteenth Street Theatre. Some of the parts which he made famous are "Colonel Moberley" in "Alabama", "Jo Vernon" in "In Missoura", "Joe", the cowboy in "The Cowboy and the Lady"; and other southern character parts. His best work, perhaps, was as "Pudd'nhead Wilson" as "Senator Langdon" in "The Gentleman from Mississippi", "Col. Watterson Blossom" in "Cordelia Blossom", and "Taffy" in "Trilby."

The Burr McIntosh Monthly is everywhere admitted to have been the most perfect pictorial publication of its time, and it was Mr. McIntosh's own product. As a photographer he won the Grand Prize (1000 francs) in the Paris Figaro contest of art and beauty with a portrait of Maude Fealy. In 1905 he was the official photographer of the Taft trip to the Philippines. He also secured some wonderful photographs in the Spanish-American war. His experience in these two trips he made into the lectures "With Secretary Taft in the Orient," and "The United States and Its Menaces", which he has given before hundreds of thousands of people.

Mr. McIntosh, as may be seen, has done many things and done them all well. It is safe to prophesy a splendid interpretation of "Wallingford" by him in this new Pathe series, especially as in the cast with him are the famous Max Figman and the charming Lolita Robertson.

Miss Robertson, herself, has experienced many exciting happenings, although they do not compare with those of her co-star.

WON RACE WITH A COUGAR

McGhie, Motorist, Tells a Thrilling Yarn of an Experience in Washington.

Everett, Wash.—The story of a race between an automobile and a big cougar is related by S. P. McGhie, who drove the car in the unusual sporting event a few days ago, while returning from Mount Rainier with a party consisting of Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Pritchard and Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Graves.

Soon after leaving the National Park Inn they saw the animal coming up the road. As they approached it stopped. The road at that point runs along a high ledge, precipitous on each side, and the animal had no other chance to escape than to run down the road.

Mr. McGhie took up the chase "stepping upon" his eight-cylinder car for probably half a mile. The animal saw that it was about to be overtaken, leaped to the roadside and crouching close to the rocks, snarled as the machine rushed on.

Forgot He Hid Money in Stove.

Landsdale, Pa.—Adolph Blattner, a gatekeeper on a railroad here, hid his savings in the stove in his shanty and forgot to remove them before he built a fire. The bills were partly burned, but can be redeemed.

COWS TRAVEL FAR TO MOURN

Wander Seven Miles to Spot Where Calves Were Killed in Pennsylvania.

Philadelphia.—Employees at the cattle pens at Paoli freight station were puzzled the other day when they found two stray cows near the pens when they reported for work. The cows were lowing and wouldn't be driven away.

When F. H. Bernheisel, a cattle dealer of Newton square, arrived, he said that the cows were the mothers of two calves found trampled dead when a car containing a herd consigned to him was unloaded at Paoli. The calves were buried soon after the unloading and Bernheisel's employees drove the herd to his farm.

The two mother cows got away from the pasture during the night and made the seven-mile journey to their "babies" at Paoli in darkness.

Inventor Has "Invisible Submarine."

Denver, Colo.—Patrick Keenan of this city has applied for a patent on what he characterizes as an "invisible submarine." Keenan's idea is to clothe the portions of the craft above water with mirrors so that they will reflect the color of the waves.

The Drunkard's Cloak.

The drunkard's cloak, formerly imposed on delinquents by the Newcastle justices, survived in the United States as a punishment for other offenses until the time of their own war. The writer of a paper published in 1862 under the title, "A Look at the Federal Army," records being "extremely amused at an original method of punishment drill. One wretched culprit was gratuitously framed in oak, his head being thrust through a hole cut in one end of a barrel, the other end of which had been removed, and the poor fellow loafed about in the most disconsolate manner, looking for all the world like a half hatched chicken."—London Chronicle.

CRAZED IN GRAND CANYON.

New Hampshire Tourist Wanders Without Food or Drink.

Grand Canyon, Ariz.—After wandering for three days in the depths of the Grand Canyon without food or water W. H. Harvey, a retired merchant of Manchester, N. H., was rescued in Hell's Half Acre, one of the most perilous parts of the canyon. Mr. Harvey was crazed from thirst and hunger. He was rescued by Rudolph Reimer, Jr., of Brooklyn, N. Y., a Grand Canyon guide.

Mr. Harvey and James H. Hyde of New York started down Hermit Trail, eight miles west of Grand Canyon hotel. They took neither food, water nor guide, intending to follow the river along the bottom of the canyon back to the foot of Bright Angel Trail, which leads to the canyon bottom from here.

Soon after leaving the foot of Hermit Trail they became lost in the waste of rock formations. The alkali water which they were forced to drink caused both men to lose their minds temporarily. Mr. Hyde became separated from Mr. Harvey and found his way out of the canyon, but was unable to direct searchers to the spot where he had left his companion.

Parties searched the canyon for two days and found no trace of Mr. Harvey. Finally he was discovered in a delirious condition, his outer clothing gone. He was brought out of the canyon on a pack burro. He is recovering from his hardships.

FLAG ISLAND AERIAL BASE.

Property Owned by Peary Recommended For Maine Coast Station.

Portland, Me.—A report favoring Flag island, in Casco bay, the property of Rear Admiral Robert T. Peary, as one of the stations of the proposed aerial coast patrol was made by Henry A. Wise Wood, vice president of the Aero Club of America, to Alan Hawley, its president. The use of the island already has been tendered to the club by Rear Admiral Peary. The report says:

"With a minimum of effort and time aerial observers working from Flag island may command the offshore approaches to Portland and Bath and the inner waters of Casco bay, which lie behind the Portland defenses. The importance of a constant aerial surveillance of Casco bay in the event of hostilities cannot be overestimated, as the bay provides perhaps one of the best hiding places for submarine vessels to be found anywhere along the New England coast."

City tourists through the fruit growing regions have had an object lesson in seeing stuff rotting in the orchards for which they would pay fancy prices at home. Nothing can be done about it now except bear the fact in mind until the time comes to co-operate in banishing the evil.

The president of China says that none but a fool wants to be emperor. But, Mr. Kai, republicanism should teach the subject that it is his duty to be at the call of his country for any role where he can serve best and under whatever commission is handed him.

More and more the idea is expressed that this country will be rich and prosperous when war impoverished Europe is out for loot, gun in hand. Then why put temptation in Europe's way by parading our wealth?

If one-half that Carranza and Villa say of each other is the truth our watchful waiting policy will require an injecting of ginger in it before Mexico can pacify itself.

United States dollars command a bigger premium abroad than ever before, but no one relishes the job of going over to collect it.

If the weather is to keep up such pranks we can establish all the year round resorts and maybe also summer coming or going.

Paradoxical though it seems, nobody can deny but the Russian army has stood well in the running.

All the governors and many ex-governors are ready to help defend the country. "Fall in, governors' company!"

After war is reformed what next for the good people, to keep them busy?

THIEVES ABDUCT RED-GARBED FLEAS

Bible Also Included in Plunder Taken From Home With Martial Insects.

Hartford, Conn.—If two curious and unusual burglars who ransacked the curio room in Herbert Randall's home bring forth fruits meet for repentance he thinks they will return an old Bible they took, whatévár disposition they may make of two red-robed fleas they included in their booty. The Bible was printed in Greek, and was more than a century old. The fleas were considerably younger—and dead.

"The fleas were dressed in red uniforms," said Mr. Randall. "I bought them from an old lady in Seattle who made a living dressing fleas in martial array. They reposed in little boxes against a background of white cotton, and I often observed them through a microscope. Their martial spirit had long since fled, but I hope they come to life and take vengeance on the thieves."

When no one was at home two men were seen to enter Mr. Randall's house at noon and leave an hour later. They carefully piled up a quantity of silver, but left it intact. They likewise spurned a gold and pearl necklace and numerous gold pins. They made their selection almost entirely from antiquities and curios, of which Mr. Randall has a large collection. The only modern article they took was a new suit of clothes.

One of the most valuable objects missing is an antique Roman gold pin, which was presented to Mr. Randall in Venice by an Italian woman of rank. They removed and left behind a topaz stone which was set in the pin. Many rare Greek coins, a cameo pin bought in Scotland, a unique diamond pin and an old gold watch are among the missing articles. Mr. Randall places his loss at $1,000.

THEY "GUY" HIS TIN HAT

Whiting Built It Himself, for Himself to Wear on His Own Head, So It's His Own Affair.

Bangor, Me.—William H. Whiting of Jonesport, a seacoast village town in Washington county, doesn't care if he is caught out in the rain while wearing his new hat. It is made of tin and has a band of copper. In general build and dimensions it conforms to the 1915 model worn by fashionable young men. Mr. Whiting concluded that straw was too flimsy, wool too hot, and Panama too costly, so he went to his own tinshop and from the thinnest tin that he could find built for himself this novel hat. It shines gladly in the sulight of the morning, reflects the glory of the sunset, and echoes musically in the rain.

The only think about it that makes Whiting any way nervous is that some day it may attract a bolt of lightning. People "guy" the hat, but Whiting merely observes that it's his own hat.

His Inference.

LOCAL WOMEN AT CONVENTION

The Forty-Second Annual Convention of the State W. C. T. U. Delegates Meet ---Mrs. Sylvester and Mrs. Gifford Atteud.

Attending the forty-second annual convention of the New York State Woman's Christian Temperance Union now being held in Ithaca are Mrs. William Sylvester, president of the local union, and Mrs. William Gifford, recording secretary. The convention represents one of the largest gatherings of that body. More than 700 delegates are assembled.

Mrs. Ella Alexander Boole, Ph. D., vice-president-at-large of the National W. C. T. U., was re-elected president of the New York State Union. Her election was unanimous. Each of the other officers were also again chosen. They are: Mrs. Frances W. Graham of Lockport; first vice-president; Mrs. Helen J. Andrus of New York, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Mary B. Wood, of Ithaca, recording secretary; Mrs. Ellen L. Tenney, of Albany, treasurer; Mrs. Maude B. Perkins, of East Syracuse, general secretary of the Young People's Branch, and Mrs. Helen I. Root, of Port Byron, general secretary of the Loyal Temperance Legion.

Dr. Andrew D. White was to have spoken yesterday morning, but he notified Mrs. Boole that he was unable to do so, because he had just returned to the city from a trip, was very tired and did not feel physically able to be present and address the meeting. Dr. White sent his regrets.

In the meetings of the annual convention notable progress has been reported in every department by the superintendents. In the reports so far, Tompkins county has been the leader.

A feature of the report of the committee on press work, which showed that 347 newspapers give space to articles furnished by the press superintendents and sixty-five papers use the service reports prepared by the National W. C. T. U. Publicity Bureau. New York State officers have furnished 450 papers with press paragraphs published monthly by the State Publicity Bureau. In the State of New York 188 papers refuse liquor advertising.

Mrs. W. B. Dingman of Monroe county was the winner of the great diamond medal oratory contest, a feature of the convention entertainment program. The contest was in charge of Mrs. Lula E. Walker, state superintendent. The competitors, besides Mrs. Dingman, were Mrs. Alice Burch of Tompkins county, Mrs. Jane Clark of Niagara county, Mrs. Mary Stone of Oneida county and Mrs. Hattie Baker of Tompkins county.

MANY PERMITS SOLD TO SPORTS

Ox Creek Favorite Stamping Ground---Ducks Comparatively Plentiful---City Hall a Busy Place.

Fifty-six hunting licenses were issued Saturday by Clerk L. R. Scudder at the City Hall.

Reports of game secured hereabouts are varied. The usual run of fishermen's luck seems to be prevalent among the hunters. A number of men have brought back a fair supply of rabbits and partridges, while others could sight nothing.

South Granby, in the neighborhood of Ox creek, appears to be the favorite hunting ground of local sportsmen, as many as forty men having been seen in that neighborhood on Friday. Owney Rafferty's camp between Lampman Road and Ox creek has been chosen as a stopover place by many. The huntsmen on Friday morning left the camp and within a few yards of the place came upon a flock of seventeen ducks. They managed to bring down seven of the lot.

One of the best pieces of luck is reported by Frank Howard. He was gone from his home not more than two hours and during that time bagged three ducks and a rabbit.

Clerk Scudder was kept busy this morning issuing more hunting licenses.

HORSE REARED; WOMAN THROWN

Mrs. Jacob Potter, residing on the Hannibal road, about two miles from this city, was thrown from a buggy at the east end of the lower bridge Saturday night when the rig became entangled in the traffic, causing the horse to rear suddenly. The street at the point where the accident occurred is blocked off on both sides awaiting the brick paving to set and only a narrow path in the car tracks is left for passing traffic. At the time Mrs. Potter was thrown out, an unusually large number of wagons and automobiles were in the neighborhood. She was carried into the Wilcox cigar store nearby and placed in a chair by Officer Michael Bray, assisted by another patrolman, who telephoned immediately to Dr. Fox. After taking a short rest Mrs. Potter re-entered the buggy and drove away.

BEAN CROP IS HEAVY

The marketing of beans will commence immediately. For the past two weeks Oswego county farmers have been harvesting the crop, which is reported as fair. This week C. H. Highley, who represents the L. E. Sands Company, with offices at 209 Erie st., will start threshing. Mr. Higley maintains a large thresher and in addition to dong the threshing for the farmers, the company which he represents does most of the buying of beans in this neighborhood. Mr. Higley forecasts that this year's crop will keep him busy until the early part of July. Last year his work was completed July 3.

Dr. Lavina R. Davis will make the main address. This will occur on Wednesday evening, the subject to be, "Two Scraps of Paper." A number of other interesting features are promised. It is probable that a large number of Fulton's people will attend the sessions.

LABOR UNIONS WILL FIGHT CONSTITUTION

New York—A state-wide campaign by laboru nions against the proposed new Constitution will be organized today at a conference of labor leaders in Albany under the auspices of the State Federation of Labor. The basis of the fight will be the warning sounded by former Chief Judge Edgar M. Cullen, of the Court of Appeals, yesterday in an appeal to voters to defeat the measure at the coming election because it would permit military tribunals to supercede the civil courts while the latter are in operation.

Adoption of the new Constitution under these circumstances, he declared, would be a "great public calamity." Labor leaders profess to see in it that it would permit military courts to step between labor unions and the civil courts in strikes. James P. Holland, president of the State Federation of Labor, presided at yesterday's conference

State Senator Ogden L Mills told a gathering of three hundred men at the rally day services yesterday in the Twenty-third Street Branch of the Y.M.C.A. that the most important change provided in the new Constitution probably was the complete reorganization of the state departments He urged its support at the electtion, because, he asserted, it "represents the product of the great minds of the state"

CENSUS TAKEN TOO LATE

That's the Case With Watertown---The Official Figures Show Loss of Population in June.

Albany.—Had the state census been taken this month rather than last June, the city of Watertown would have shown a considerably greater increase in population that is revealed by the official figures given out today. In the last five years Watertown had added 192 residents, having a population last June of 26,922, including 261 inmates of various institutions. The city's alien population totals 2,871. Watertown like many other cities of its size about the state suffered in population through business depression.

During the last few months numbers have flocked to the city, lured by the fact that several of the largest manufacturing concerns of Watertown are now engaged in turning out munitions for the warring nations of Europe.

That portion of Watertown lying in the first assembly district has a population of 12,646, while that in the second assembly district shows a population of 14,276.

In the last fifteen years Watertown's population has increased 5,226, the enumeration of 1900 crediting the city with 21,696 residents. The growth in the last ten years has been 1,475.

Between 1892 and 1900, when a boom was enjoyed, Watertown added 4,714 residents while from 1900 to 1905 the increase in population amounted to 3,751. The growth between 1905 and 1910 sl[illegible] amounting to but 1,283 during the five years.

LINDSEY PROMISES TO KILL DEFAMERS

Denver, Colo.—"If there is no law to protect my reputation against perjured affidavits and criminally libelous statements, I will revert to the methods of the primitive and kill the first man who assails it again," said Juvenile Judge "Ben" B. Lindsey last night. "I am going to get a shotgun and fill him full of lead. It's the only thing left for me to do. I am a law-abiding citizen and sworn to uphold the law, but I am entitled to protection, and if I cannot get it from the law I am going to see that I get it otherwise," he exclaimed.

The Juvenile Judge had just been served with a subpoena summoning him for the trial of Frank L. Rose, evangelist, indicted by the last grand jury on a charge of criminal libel. Mr. Rose criticised Judge Lindsey.

COMMERCIAL FAILURES NOW ON THE DECREASE

New York.—Commercial failures in the United States during the first nine months of this year, as reported to R. G. Dun & Co., totalled 17,288, with indebtedness of $241,464,060. While the statistics, as a whole, compare adversely with former records, of late there has been a very pronounced trend toward improvement. Returns for the third quarter, besides showing only 250 more reverses than in 1914, disclose a reduction of 2,668 failures and nearly $53.000.000 from the opening three months of the current year and 976 fewer defaults and $30.000.000 less in the sum owed, as compared with the second quarter.

September was the first month to show a smaller number of suspensions than in 1914, while liabilities were the largest since November, 1912

LASHLEY SENTENCED BY WATERTOWN JUSTICE

Nichols, the probation officer claiming that the prisoner had violated the conditions of his parole after pleading guilty at a former term of court to a charge of burglary in the third degree. Lashley was given a sentence of not less than one nor more than two years at Auburn.

PULLMAN EMPLOYE ROBS GRAND CENTRAL OF $5,000

New York.—A $5,000 robbery in the Pullman offices of the Grand Central station came to light last night. The money, mostly bills, was taken after the offices were closed on Thursday night. A private detective agency has been called into the case and the description of a hitherto trusted employe sent broadcast throughout the United States

Loss of the money has been shorouded in mystery and secrecy by the officials of the New York Central railroad. From a leading officer of the company, it was learned, however, that every attempt is being made to apprehend the thief and recover the stolen money.

The robbery Thursday is the climax of a series of petty losses in the Pullman offices beginning with Labor Day, when $500 was missed.

SYNOPSIS

Old Cyrus Martin, the head of the American soap trust, makes a bet of $30,000 with a friend, John Clark, a rival soapmaker, that his (Martin's) son Rodney would be making more money at the end of a year than Clark's son Ellery.

Martin takes his pretty secretary, Mary Grayson, into his confidence and enlists her co-operation. Rodney has been a spendthrift, and the father wants to make him reform and go to work.

Mary meets Rodney, and the son proposes marriage to her. Rodney tells his father about his proposal; and the old man pretends great anger. He tells Mary he will disinherit Rodney.

Rodney defies his father, and Mary is deeply touched at the lad's genuine affection for her. Mary makes a financial bargain with Martin to encourage the son to go to work.

Ambrose Peale, press agent, meets Rodney and agrees to go into business with the lad on a salary basis. Rodney has resolved to go into the soap industry and buck the trust.

Rodney, Peale and Mary go into the soap trade together. Rodney then endeavors to borrow $10,000 as capital for his newly formed company.

The offices of the "13 Soap company" are opened, and they advertise it as "the most expensive soap in the world." Peale talks advertising continually.

The 13 Soap company finds its expenses very heavy, and financial rocks loom ahead. Their chief business seems to have been to spend money for advertising under Peale's directions.

An alleged countess, who has appeared on the scene, desires to purchase the French rights for the sale of "13 Soap" and produces a draft for $20,000, which she desires to have cashed.

The "countess" is shown to be an impostor and despair settles over the 13 Soap company. The firm introduces her, however, to Ellery Clark. Father Martin visits the offices.

Martin, fearing rumors that the new company would injure his business and might break the trust, offers to buy out the firm for $100,000 and give Rodney, Peale and Mary good positions. Then he learns that the company is "dead broke."

Suddenly out of a clear sky comes an order for 50,000 cakes of 13 Soap from the great firm of Brown & James of Chicago. "The tide has turned," the trio now declare.

The 13 Soap company having no factory cannot deliver. The trio endeavor to buy the cakes from branch offices of the Martin trust. They fail to get the necessary number, but send 5,000 cakes.

Mary, in despair, calls on old Martin. Rodney also appears. There they both learn that the father caused the sending of the telegram from Brown & James. Naturally they are amazed and mortified.

Peale arrives. He discourses at length to old Martin on the value of advertising and explains that the money spent on booming 13 Soap was not wasted. Martin is unconvinced.

At last the partial shipment of 13 Soap, which had been sent to Chicago, begins to sell. Brown & James send a man to the Martin home to announce that the 5,000 cakes were gone at $1 apiece. They want more.

Martin, astonished, is forced to realize that Peale's advertising did it all. A deal is finally concluded in which for a big sum Brown & James take over the trademark and formula of 13 Soap.

Martin discovers that Mary and Rodney have married, and he wins his bet with Ellery Clark's father. That "It pays to advertise" the old man will never again deny.

false order to spring up out of the ground, and Mary's $5,000 contribution to the soap company's capital had developed it, which may also be said to have been the fault of the old magnate.

The Brown & James order was especially to blame, however, because it had made the future look assured and rosy and encouraging, so that together they had taken the plunge. In the illuminated moments which followed the $5,000 flash Mary's reluctance had disappeared, Rodney's ardor had redoubled, and in the reaction of a lovers' quarrel and a "grand makeup," as Mary said, they had gone off to the Little Church Around the Corner and been married. That was the whole story. Really and truly it was all old Mr. Martin's fault and prearranged by him from the beginning, as Mary told herself again and again, defending herself against Rodney's father's possible wrath when the news of his son's marriage to a typewriter should be broken gently to him.

The quarrel came, as quarrels and April showers are apt to do, out of a clear and serene sky. In the general jubilation over Brown & James Rodney had remarked, escorting Mary uptown at night, that now the first thing he was going to do with his share of the profits was to pay her back that $5,000.

"And then," he added sententiously, "there won't be anything between us any more."

Something in the tone of his voice, quite unintentional on the boy's part, no doubt, had piqued Mary.

"You've always fussed about that," she said.

Something in the way she said the word fussed piqued Rodney.

"And don't you think it's been something to fuss about?" he demanded. "When a fellow's best girl, his fiancee, takes money from a rich old man, and then the fellow lets her lose it all in his business—well, I don't see why you can't see that the situation's pretty raw."

"Why do you say lost? I hope you don't think it's really lost," retorted Mary. "Don't be such a gloomy Gus."

"Well, you know what I mean," persisted Rodney. "It was darned near lost. And that shows you do care about it anyway."

"Why shouldn't I care about it?" said Mary. "Indeed I think $5,000 is a good deal of money."

"I think it's a whole lot of money," said Rodney, "and you must excuse me if I can't help wondering how a girl in your position was able to get hold of it."

"A girl in my position," echoed Mary scornfully. "That's right. Rub it in. I'm really ashamed of you, Rodney Martin. And you know perfectly well I wasn't born a typewriter."

"Mary," he said, trying to be perfectly calm and persuasive, "tell me now. You know we shall be happier."

"I don't know it at all," said Mary obstinately.

"Mary, please," he said, trying to take her hand.

"No," said Mary, "I don't believe you'd like me if you knew."

"Please," persisted Rodney.

The long, uniform rows of New York house fronts stretched away on either side of them in the obscurity. A red light twinkled in one bay window, and beneath the shade could be seen the rows of books in a library. Near the curb opposite an extraordinarily silent limousine had just drawn up, with a little swish of its rubber tires as it came to rest, and presently a man and a woman in joyous evening raiment came out of the house and got into it.

The woman wore a perfectly gorgeous opera cloak, and combs flashed in her beautifully arranged hair. The man's linen was very white and his silk hat very shiny. The chauffeur had switched on the light inside the car, and the occupants showed a moment brilliantly in the jewel box of its interior before the light went out and the car moved off again, west and south, to the haunts of pleasure, as Ambrose Peale would have said. A throb and a sob came into Mary's voice as she saw it all, and she answered again:

"You might hate me. And I'm taking you away from all that, which was yours by right."

"Come in a moment," said Rodney gently and kindly.

They climbed the stairs together, and a West Indian "butler" let them in. Rodney drew Mary into a hideous little reception room on the ground floor, took both the girl's hands in his and looked earnestly into her lovely eyes.

"You're the finest girl 'n the world, Mary," he said, "and nothing could ever turn me against you."

In the ill lighted, ill ventilated little parlor, illuminated for them with love's thousand eyes, the truth came out. Mary told the whole story from the beginning, not without some humor and not without some satisfaction at certain portions of it, it must be confessed: told of old Mr. Martin's fretting about Ellery Clark, of the bet with Ellery's father, of her share in the deception and of her reward in money.

"What do I care if you really love me," protested Rodney. "Mary, now you must marry me."

That was a Thursday, and by Friday night they were married, so that they could have two days of honeymoon, anyway, before Monday, Rodney said. It was all very quietly arranged in the little church.

So much for those who talk about telepathy. Late Saturday forenoon, when they sneaked down to the office, just to be sure that everything was all right, certainly no one guessed what momentous change had come into their lives; no one divined the ecstasy that thrilled unseen beneath their everyday demeanor.

Of course old Mr. Martin's obduracy had been a blow, but Rodney was game throughout and gloriously happy. He felt every inch a man now and dared to cope with every difficulty.

"Shall we tell the old gentleman?" he asked Mary, meaning of course the fact of their being married.

"No, indeed, not yet," said Mary, blushing ever so little. "Just let me wait for the psychological moment."

CHAPTER XIX.
A Wedding Present.

RODNEY and Mary waited, and love was rewarded once more by nothing less ethereal than a second order for soap that very morning. It was from Dockery's, and this time they simply must fill it. They both agreed, wherefore they had flown at once to Mr. Martin's house in the midst of their honeymoon.

They arrived while Mr. Bronson of Chicago was putting in his half hour wait by feeding peanuts to the chipmunks in Central park. They found only Ambrose there, though very much at home; and Ambrose, of course, once the countess was disposed of, wanted to know what the excitement was all about. Mary told him. It seemed that just after they got to the office that morning a letter from Dockery's had come in.

"Ordering 10,000 cakes of 13 Soap," interrupted Rodney.

"Now what do you think of that?" said Mary.

"Pinch me—I'm dreaming," Peale told her.

"They say our advertising's wonderful," went on Rodney, "and has created such a demand they want to handle the soap in town."

Rodney went on:

"You see, when I show father this letter from Dockery he's got to admit we've won out—and supply us with soap."

"Suppose he's still stubborn and won't help us, what shall we do?" asked Mary.

"Oh, we'll just have to plod along," said Rodney.

"Don't plod—gallop, son—gallop—gallop," amended Peale, full of his high spirits.

"If we ever come out of this you're going to be my partner, fifty to fifty," declared Rodney.

"Mr. Charles Bronson," Johnson announced.

"Oh, I beg pardon! I expected to find Mr. Martin," said Mr. Bronson, entering.

"I am Mr. Martin," spoke up Rodney.

"Mr. Rodney Martin?" pursued Bronson.

"Yes," said Rodney.

"Just the man I wanted to see—on private business," said Bronson.

"Oh, these are my partners," said Rodney. "You can talk before them. This is Mr. Peale and Miss Grayson."

"May I present—Mr"—

"Charles Bronson of Brown & James."

The man from Chicago went straight on with his errand.

"Now about your soap?"

"Now see here," protested Rodney.

"O Lord," thought Peale, then added aloud politely, "We're very sorry"—

Mr. Bronson looked at the three in a kind of busy wonder.

"Sorry?" he said. "Why, your 13 Soap the last few days has had a most remarkable sale at our store in Chicago."

Rodney gasped:

"You mean it is really selling?"

"Why, you seem surprised," said Bronson, studying their faces.

Mary pulled herself together briskly, the first of them all.

"Oh, not—not a bit," she repudiated.

Peale longed to know the whole truth.

"You mean people are actually coming into the store and buying it?" he went on.

"At a dollar a cake," said Bronson.

"It was those page advertisements in Chicago that did it," conceded Mary.

"Absolutely," said Peale.

Mr. Bronson wanted to know if they would keep up their campaign. That would have some bearing, of course, on the subject in hand.

"Triple it," said Peale from the bottom of his heart.

"Good, good!" said Mr. Bronson. "We foresee a tremendous sale for your goods. It's an amazing soap. Do you control the company yourself?"

"Oh, entirely," said Rodney.

"Then I can deal with you," Bronson began again.

"With us—all of us," Rodney asserted, and Bronson went on:

"We should be glad to contract now for 250,000 cakes, with deliveries to begin next week."

Mary, whose brain had been going like lightning, now took a hand.

"Our capacity just at present is limited," she said cautiously.

"Yes, we have so many orders on hand," agreed Rodney. "Here's an idea," he said. "In view of our press of orders, would you entertain the idea of paying us merely for the use of our trademark, without any soap at all?"

"Yes, I think we would," Bronson said. "Your trademark is, of course, your biggest asset. You would give us your formula?"

"Yes, if we still have that cook book," blurted Peale.

"I beg pardon," said Bronson.

"Nothing, nothing. Have a cigar," said Peale.

"I've got the cook book," said Mary.

"You can have the formula," Rodney agreed.

Mr. Bronson cleared his throat and went on:

"With a license from you to use the title, I daresay we could arrange to have the soap manufactured by Cyrus Martin of the soap trust."

For Young Folks

Teddy Roosevelt 3d Is a Happy Outdoor Youngster.

© 1915, by American Press Association.

As his picture indicates, Teddy Roosevelt 3d is a wholesome and robust little lad. He is a great favorite of his famous grandfather and spends much of his time at the ex-president's home at Oyster Bay, N. Y. He is the son of Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., and is the third of his family to bear the well known name. The youngest Teddy is very fond of bathing and may frequently be seen sporting in the waves at Southampton, N. Y. It was at this resort that the camera man snapped Teddy 3d. He had just emerged from a ducking in the waves, but was good natured and willingly posed for his photograph. He is too young to swim as yet, but by this time next year, if he inherits the qualities of his grandfather, he will have acquired that accomplishment.

Proverb Puzzle.

In each of the following ten sayings a word of five letters is omitted. When these ten words are rightly guessed and placed one below another in the order here given the central letters reading downward will spell the name of a famous poet, who was born in February, 1807:

1. Idle — are always meddling.
2. A bird is — by its note and a man by his talk.
3. Make yourself all — and the flies will devour you.
4. A — is a fool's argument.
5. — a fool your finger and he will [illegible] your whole hand.
6. [illegible] leak will sink a — ship.
7. [illegible] ought to be his great-[illegible]
8. [illegible] his ill temper — his enemy [illegible] may hit him.
9. A rascal — rich has lost all his kindred.
10. Do as most do and — will speak ill of thee.

Answer.—Longfellow. Words—folks, known, honey, fight, offer, great, folly, tells, grown, fewer.

A New Way to Play With the Sea.

The traditional way to play with the surf is to dive through the breakers. There is, however, another game that is still more riotous fun and gives the waves a fairer chance.

The bather wades out to the line where the breakers begin to curl and the water is about shoulder deep and stands facing out to sea with his eye on the coming wave. Just before the wave begins to lift to form the breaker the bather throws himself on his back and floats in that way—head toward the shore, feet toward the sea. If he has judged time and distance correctly the curling breaker will pick up the bather, feet first, turn him heels over head and leave him standing on his feet, ready for the next wave. If he misjudges the timing or the distance—well, that is the game—the wave scores.

It takes large breakers to turn a grown man, as large breakers as people often bathe in, but ordinary surf will do the trick for a boy.—Youth's Companion.

A Strange Word.

There is a word in the dictionary which you may read forward or backward without changing it one iota, either in meaning or letters. Write the word out in capitals and analyse it. The letters are now in procession. Mother is in the lead, sister Ada is conspicuous in the center, while poor papa—the father of us all—is in the rear.

Again, if children reassemble the first part of this word they will be crazy, and if their boats go over the last part they will probably be drowned. What is this mysterious word?

Answer: Madam. Words: Ada, Adam, mad, dam.—Chicago News.

At the Telephone.

Hello, daddy! Is that you?
This is little "Eyes o' Blue."
How are you today?
I am feeling very well,
Going downtown with Auntie Bell
To the matinee.

Auntie says we'll see a show
About a boy who wouldn't grow
Up to be a man.
Teddy bears and fairies, too—
I can scarcely wait, could you?
It's called "Peter Pan."

Daddy, don't forget you said
When you broke poor dolly's head,
And I didn't cry,
You would get me a new doll
With a hat and parasol:
Don't forget. Goodby!

MYSTIC NUMBERS.

Romance That Is Woven Around the Seven, Three and Nine.

There are seven days in the week because of the oriental tradition that the world was created in seven days. The Romans had no week, but reckoned by months, counting forward and backward from the ides and nones, until the fourth century, when they adopted the Jewish-Christian week.

Because of its relation to the creation the number seven has always been invested with an occult and mystic significance. There were seven wise men in antiquity and seven wonders of the world. The seventh son of a seventh son, or seventh daughter of a seventh daughter was supposed to possess powers of prophecy or divination. For seven days seven priests with seven trumpets invested Jericho, and on the seventh day they encompassed it seven times. The ancients knew of seven planets and seven metals. There were seven heavens and seven hierarchies of angels.

Seven had a mystical significance among peoples who had no tradition of a seven day creation, and this was due to its being indivisible by any number but itself and to its being a combination of 3 (called by Pythagoras the perfect number, representing beginning, middle and end) and 4, the square number.

The Pythagorean idea about 3 received confirmation when the doctrine of trinity in unity was promulgated by the early Christians. For 3 is itself at once trinity and unity.

The number 9 was endowed with mysterious properties because it is the product of three times three—perfection multiplied by perfection. To see nine magpies was remarkably lucky. Nine grains of wheat laid on a four leafed clover enabled one to see the fairies.—New York World.

A CHANGELESS METAL.

Science Wants It For Standard Measures, But Cannot Find It.

The use of melted quartz for the manufacture of standard measures of length has been a great disappointment, since even this material is subject to very marked fluctuations in length.

The search for a suitable material is, however, being continued, because platinum-iridium, which has been used up to the present, is out of the question for practical purposes on account of its great cost, says the Scientific American.

Dr. Guillaume discovered the alloy, which has become known under the name of "invar," an abbreviation for "invariable."

The nickel-steel alloy would make an ideal material for standards of length on account of its great resistance to changes in temperature, but unfortunately it is not proof against chemical action. For this reason it is suitable only for standards of the second grade, in which accuracy within a millionth part is sufficient.

The ideal material, possessing the advantages of platinum-iridium but less expensive than the latter, is therefore still to be found. Similarly good materials for standard weights have been sought extensively and various nonmagnetic nickel alloys have been tested.

A review of the progress in the use of the metric system shows that during recent years Denmark, Siam, Belgian Congo and some of the Central American states have adopted this decimal system.

The most important success still to be gained by the metric system, the conquest of England and of the United States, seems still, however, far removed.

The First Aeroplane.

The earliest effort to construct a machine which, according to modern ideas, is entitled to be called an aeroplane was undoubtedly that of William Henson in 1842. Henson, who was a practicing engineer, with offices in New City chambers, Bishopsgate, London, devised a machine which resembled very closely the type which has since been termed the monoplane—that is, having its supporting planes practically forming a single deck, as distinguished from the box form of the biplane and multiplane devices of later inventors.

Day of Reckoning.

"John, you owe me 17 cents."

"Yes, but I paid the gas bill and you owe me $1.23."

"But I paid the groceries and that made you owe me 51 cents."

"True, but I paid 45 cents for telephones."

"I know, but you borrowed 86 cents"—

"Caesar! Here's $2: let's begin all over again."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Too Suggestive.

"Yes," said the young physician of aristocratic lineage, "our family has a motto, but I prefer not to use it. It is a little too suggestive in my profession."

"What is the motto?"

"Faithful unto death."—Boston Transcript.

Pointing the Course.

He—Can't you find a way to make our living expenses a little less extravagant? She—Easily. Cut out smoking cigars, walk home from your office and resign from your club. Then I will take $10 or $15 off the price of my next hat.—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

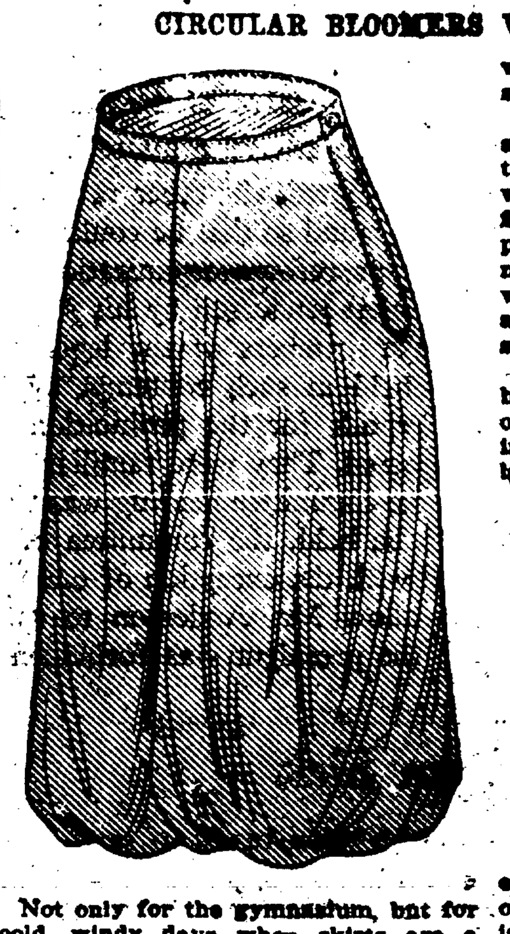
CIRCULAR BLOOMERS WITH SIDE CLOSING.



Not only for the gymnasium, but for cold, windy days when skirts are a nuisance, are these bloomers of dark serge serviceable.

For both ladies and misses are these bloomers designed, and they are very practical since freedom of movement is allowed without the sacrifice of graceful lines.

Serge is the material par excellence for the development of the bloomers, 2¾ yards being required if 44 inches wide. The bloomers are circular in shape and close at one side.

The cutting and construction are so simple that each may be described in today's lesson. Place the waistbands with edge marked by triple "TTT" perforations on a crosswise fold when preparing to cut the bloomers. The remaining pieces of the pattern, all of which are perforated with large "O's" are laid on a lengthwise thread of the serge.

If the belt is to be trimmed with braid it is well to stitch the trimming over the serge foundation before taking the rest of the work. Next, sew lap and underlap underneath slashed edges as notched and turn over on the outside on large "O" perforations. All is now ready for stitching. Now, close the leg seam, matching the notches carefully and turn hem at lower edge on small "o" perforations. Insert an elastic or a drawstring and close center seam. Sew waistbands to upper edges, centers even, fold through the center and fell remaining edges over seam.

While trimming is not necessary on bloomers, some of the smartest models show attractive stitchings of braid.

Pictorial Review Bloomers No. 5421. Sizes 21, 22, 24, 26, 28, 30, 32 and 34 inches waist and 14 to 20 years. Price, 10 cents.

For the Ideal Nursery

In no part of the home has there been a greater change in the furnishings than in the nursery. Formerly any old piece of furniture was thought good enough for the children's room. Only an extravagant or careless housekeeper would put good furniture in a nursery to be crawled over and perhaps soiled by muddy boots or grimy fingers.

The first change in this condition came when the cry for sanitation in the home swept through the land. After practically every other room in the house had been swept and garnished to the satisfaction of the sanitation experts the reform struck the nursery. The little people lost not only their worn sofas, ragged rugs and commonplace pictures, but practically everything in the shape of furniture excepting enameled iron cots and straight backed enameled chairs. Rugs were an abomination and pictures accumulated dust, parents were told.

And now again after every other room in the house has received the attention of architects and decorators the little people have come into their own. Parents as well as educators have come to realize the importance of environment upon the young as well as upon older persons. New nurseries and playrooms are just as beautiful and as individual as the rest of the house. This does not mean that in the new nursery the question of sanitation is overlooked, only that parents have come to realize that the aesthetic sense of the young child may be influenced by its surroundings without in any way lessening the hygienic quality of the rooms.

In the new nurseries the floors are always made so that they can be easily washed. Though hardwood floors are considered durable as well as sanitary and beautiful, many persons, parents, educators and decorators, prefer nursery linoleum, which is said to be sanitary and easily kept free from dust and which has the added advantage of being made with figures of Mother Goose and animals and birds scattered over its surface.

When a hardwood floor is preferred for a nursery rugs with all sorts of quaint and beautiful figures are to be had. When the child first begins to walk all rugs should be carefully held in place by thumb tacks to prevent the baby from slipping on them.

When coloring the walls it is well to remember that a delicate shade of yellow has a brightening effect and is not injurious to the child's eyes. Where the room is bright and cheerful naturally a delicate shade of green is the color favored.

There are many charming designs in wall paper made especially for nurseries. Among the all over patterns shown by one firm which makes a specialty of furnishing and decorating nurseries there is one with scenes from "Mother Goose" in delicate shades with touches of red on a pale buff background. There is another with Little Bo Peep and her lambkins on a delicate shade of green. Then there are others with fairies, with elves and all manner of interesting make believe people. One just suited for a boy's room has flamingoes and other wonderful birds in a tropical forest.

The point to remember about actual furniture is simplicity and durability, articles that can be easily scrubbed in case of contagions. Put nothing in a child's room that he cannot manage and master—chairs scaled to his size and shelves that he can reach—and allow plenty of boxes and cubbyholes, where his precious, favorite junk can be treasured and respected.

A New Headlight.

A novel electric flatiron has appeared on the market which is provided with a headlight. The latter consists of a small lamp of four candle power operated at six volts. The beams of this lamp are projected down upon the work directly in front of the point of the iron and enable the operator to see just what she is doing. The lamp is arranged to burn only when current is flowing through the iron, and for this reason it operates as a signal to show whether the current is turned on or off.

The Statesman's Twins.

"How many children have you?" asked the reporter.

"One, a daughter," replied the statesman proudly.

"But I heard that you had three," protested the man of letters.

"Oh, two of them are twins, and they're paired, you know!" explained the representative of the people.—Philadelphia Ledger.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Itch and Its Treatment.

Itch is a contagious disease excited by an animal parasite—the acarus scabiei—and manifested by small elevations on the skin called papules, which later become like blisters and then fill with pus, and there is always intense itching. The intense itching is the first symptom, and it is associated with an eruption of small papules, vesicles (blisters) and pustules. Among those lesions may be found burrows; these are discolored, dotted, slightly elevated lines, ranging from a line to half an inch in length and produced by the penetration of the female acarus and the deposition of her eggs along the passage.

The parts most commonly affected are the hands between the fingers, the wrists, the armpits, beneath the breasts and on the inner surface of the thighs. The face and scalp are never involved. The condition is curable. The treatment consists at first in a thorough bath, after which the whole body should be anointed twice daily for three or four days with the remedy. At the end of this time the bath should be repeated and the bed linen and underclothing should be changed. The infected clothing should be sterilized by boiling for a half hour. Sulphur ointment is the best remedy for this disease. The ointment should be composed of sublimated sulphur, one dram; balsam of Peru, one-half dram, and lard, one ounce. The mixture must be prepared by a druggist.

GLORY IN THEIR GLOOM.

These Pessimists Love Misery and Revel In Wretchedness.

Vowing never to admit that passing time has given the world any cause to rejoice or that it has brought or ever can bring any good to the human race, Liverpool's "Pezzers' society" stands out unique among the many organisations which have come into existence. Its members are true pessimists, and it appears that the brotherhood was known originally as the Liverpool Society of Pessimists. Later the name was contracted to its more academic present form.

Curiously enough, the original members did not set out to be preachers of gloom. Quite the contrary. They were amateur social reformers and dabblers in abstract science who met occasionally in an obscure coffee house. The apparent futility of their efforts to impress the world, which did not desire to be reformed in any way and which evinced no taste for their abstract science, caused the little band to organize to take what comfort it might in pessimism.

None of the members must be cheerful on pain of immediate expulsion. They are only optimists about one thing, and that is their pessimism. They revel in their gloom and are only happy in their unhappiness. The society is well conducted. It has its rules and its officers. The greatest event in the pessimist year is the annual "Pezzers' razzle," when the members make a gloomy pilgrimage, which lasts throughout the night. On this occasion they go forth in costume as nearly approaching sackcloth and ashes as possible, and a dark, dismal night is chosen. Supper over—and there is nothing gloomy about the food—the tables are pushed back, the cheerful lamps are extinguished and the company sit round the fire smoking churchwarden pipes.

A little later the hardier "Pezzers" embark on a gloomy tramp, which lasts throughout the night. Down country lanes, across the fields and through the woods they go, never missing a graveyard or anything really depressing. In the churchyard of a very ancient parish they halt and remain for an hour or so while Gray's "Elegy" is solemnly recited by the arch-Pezzer and other Pezzers less arch recite gloomy poems of their own or some one else's composition.

If the night is unusually dark and they are able to lose themselves in consequence they are as happy as sworn pessimists may permit themselves to be. It is then that the society's torch bearer is allowed to exercise his sole and rare prerogative of lighting up. The "torch" is a very ancient horn lantern stuck on the end of a pole and containing a pessimistic candle. It is only to be lighted when the Pezzers are utterly lost and cannot possibly find their way without illumination, and when their bearings are ascertained it is promptly extinguished.—Argonaut.

Alaric the Goth.

Alaric, the first of the barbarian kings who entered and sacked the Eternal City and the first enemy who had appeared before its walls since the time of Hannibal, is said to have received as the price of his departure from the city (during the first siege, in A. D. 408) 5,000 pounds weight of gold, 3,000 pounds weight of silver, 3,000 silken robes, 3,000 pieces of scarlet cloth and 4,000 pounds of pepper. In order to furnish a portion of the ransom demanded by the invader it became necessary to melt down some of the statues of the ancient gods.

Magellanic Clouds.

The Magellanic clouds are two cloudy masses of light, oval in shape and unequal in size, seen at night in the heavens in the vicinity of the south pole. They are supposed to be nebulae, or dense aggregations of stars, so far distant as to give to the unassisted eye the impression of cloudlike masses. They cover areas of 42 and 10 square degrees respectively and are so named in honor of Ferdinand Magellan, the great Portuguese navigator, who first observed them in 1520 during his voyage around the globe.—Exchange.

Court Dress of Tennyson.

Tennyson's court dress when he received the laureateship did not cost him much, for it was the same court dress worn by Wordsworth, who in turn had it from the old poet Rogers, and it is still in the Wordsworth family. It is a wonder how Tennyson and Wordsworth got into it, for Rogers was a little fellow. Tennyson had no passion for courts, and so he went in second hand to save cost.—New York Press.

Siam's Peculiar Order.

Some years ago his majesty of Siam gave an Italian, for painting one of his wives from a photograph, "the grand cross of the Siamese crown." It is a rather large order. "This cross," said his majesty graciously, "will entitle you to marry twelve wives. It is a distinction I seldom confer, so I hope you will make good use of it."

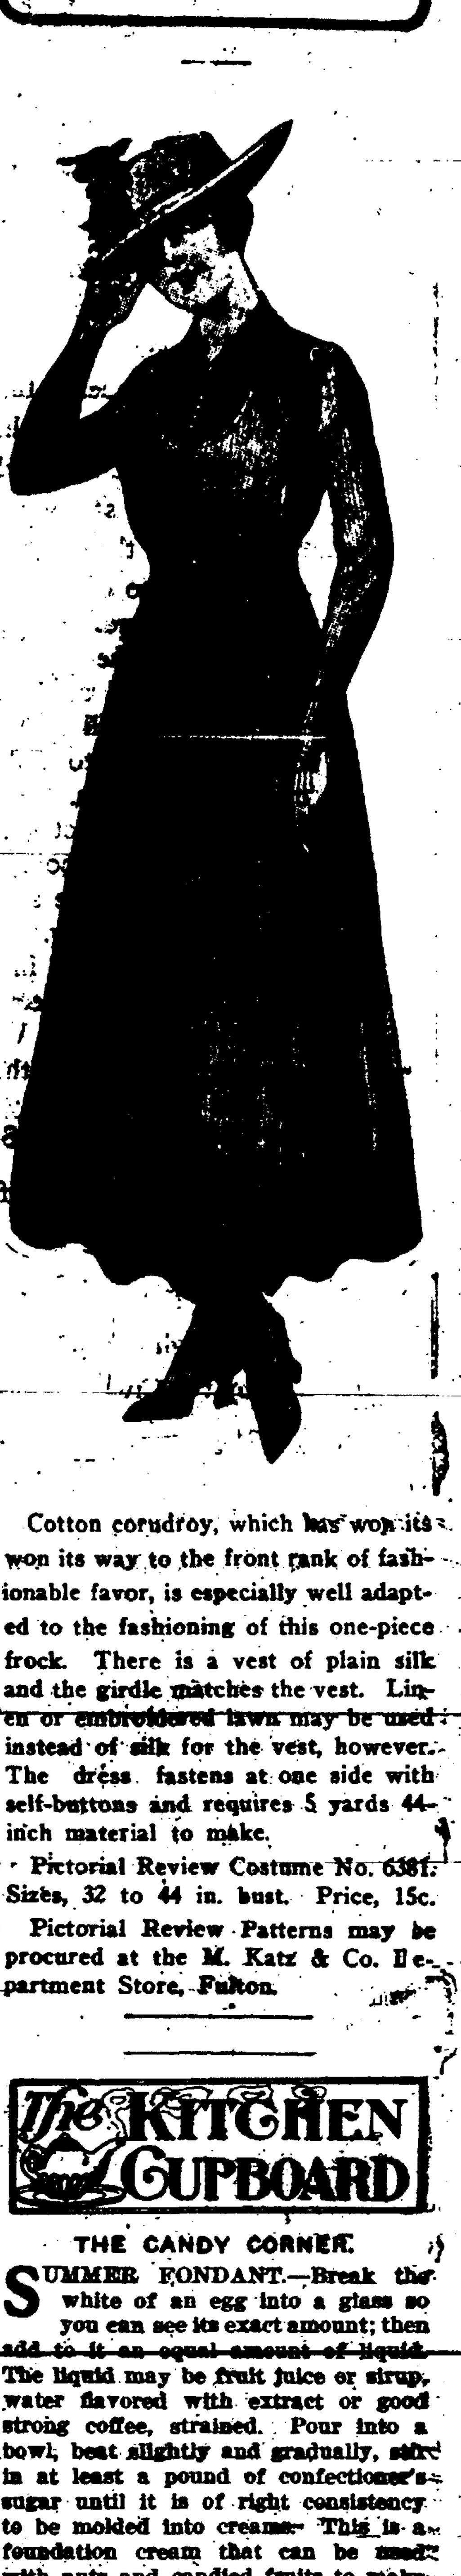
TODAY'S FASHION NOTE



Cotton corduroy, which has won its won its way to the front rank of fashionable favor, is especially well adapted to the fashioning of this one-piece frock. There is a vest of plain silk and the girdle matches the vest. Linen or embroidered lawn may be used instead of silk for the vest, however. The dress fastens at one side with self-buttons and requires 5 yards 44-inch material to make.

The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

THE CANDY CORNER.

SUMMER FONDANT.—Break the white of an egg into a glass so you can see its exact amount; then add to it an equal amount of liquid. The liquid may be fruit juice or sirup, water flavored with extract or good strong coffee, strained. Pour into a bowl, beat slightly and gradually, stir in at least a pound of confectioner's sugar until it is of right consistency to be molded into creams. This is a foundation cream that can be used with nuts and candied fruits to make many favorite sweets.

Crystallized Peanuts.—Shell the peanuts, brown them slowly and remove the skins. Place in porcelain lined or granite kettle two cupfuls of granulated sugar, one cupful of water and half a teaspoonful of cream of tartar. Bring this to a boil and stir until the sugar is dissolved. Then boil without stirring until a little dropped into cold water becomes hard and brittle; then remove immediately from the fire, dip the nuts singly into the mixture and lay them on paraffin paper to dry. Sections of fruit and other kind of nuts may be treated in the same way.

Coffee Fudge.—Two cupfuls of light brown sugar, one cupful of granulated sugar, three-quarters of a cupful of strong boiled coffee, a piece of butter the size of a small egg and a pinch of salt if the butter isn't very salty. Boil until it forms a soft ball when dropped in cold water. Take it off the stove and stir in nut meats if liked. Now let it stand a few minutes, then stir until it begins to grain. Pour into a buttered pan, let cool, then mark in squares.

Chocolate Creams.—Beat the whites of two eggs to a stiff froth, adding gradually two cupfuls of confectioner's sugar. If the eggs are very large it may take a little more sugar. Flavor with a half teaspoonful of cinnamon or vanilla and stir well. Roll into little balls, drop on a lightly buttered plate and set away in a cool place for an hour to harden. Shave fine five ounces of chocolate and melt it over the teakettle or by setting the bowl containing it in a pan of hot water. When melted drop the creams into the chocolate one at a time, using a candy dipper or fork for this purpose; then lay on buttered paper to harden.

BETTS SAYS THE SALOON'S ALLY IS SICK

Charles H. Betts, in Saturday's Lyons Republican, takes one more fling at W. H. Anderson, secretary of the anti-Saloon League. The Republican says:

There is an interesting incident which occurred last winter in Albany which the public is entitled to know about and which the people should understand.

It will be remembered that the common liar and common lobbyist, William H. Anderson, had a bill before the legislature known as the local option bill, a bill which was before the excise committee. The year before this same Anderson had a bill before the committee and condemned the members of the legislature for not passing it but the bill was so crude, unworkable and absurd that no intelligent member could vote for it, as we have repeatedly pointed out in the columns of The Lyons Republican. After we got through criticising the bill and after we had challenged Anderson to reintroduce the same old bill and debate it before the committee, a challenge which he refused to accept, he then made over 80 pages in his bill to meet our criticism. It would seem that a bill that had to be amended 80 times was not the right kind of a bill to ask members of the legislature to support and it was not a bill for which the members of the legislature should be slandered for not supporting. But this is Anderson's way. Either he knew nothing about the bill else he put the "jokers" in it to defeat it so that he could have issue to go before the people and raise money. But this is not what we started out to say. We started out to give the people a little information in regard to this reform faker.

Anderson's Unpopularity

There was another bill before the legislature introduced by the New York Civic League known as the State-wide Prohibition bill. When the hearing on that measure was to take place William H. Anderson, although the measure was introduced by the Civic League and backed by the Civic League, wanted to steal the thunder of that organization and wanted to make the people believe that he was the "whole thing" in the temperance reform movement and so he prepared a speech and made a request to be permitted to speak for the prohibition bill before the joint committee of the legislature. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the Allied Reform forces and the New York Civic League, headed by the Rev. O. R. Miller and Charles L. Boothby, were the reform agency back of the State-wide Prohibition bill. The anti-Saloon League was back of Anderson's legislative monstrosity known as the local option bill. But Mr. Anderson, with his usual affrontery and audacity, pushed himself to the front and insisted on speaking in favor of the State-wide Prohibition bill. He wanted to do this to advertise himself, to advertise the anti-Saloon League and to suppress the other reform organizations and keep them in the background so that he could get all the money. The leaders of the various reform organizations understood this. They also understood that Anderson by his slanderous and unjustifiable attacks upon the members of the legislature had become so unpopular and was held in such contempt by the members of the legislature that to speak for the prohibition bill would endanger its chance of being passed. They were familiar with all these facts and so the day before the committee hearing was to be held, or on the same day it was to be held, the committee of all the reform forces had a meeting and with the exception of one vote the whole committee voted not to allow Mr. Anderson to speak in favor of the prohibition bill and the president was forbidden to introduce him as a speaker.

Made Him Sick

Mr. Anderson had his speech all written ready to send out to the papers. He expected to get all the publicity. He expected to blanket all the other reform forces and get the credit. But the leaders of the other reform forces were "on to his game" and nipped it in theb ud. They refused to allow him to speak. When the committee voted against his speaking and forbade the president to introduce him he packed his bag, gathered up his belongings, rolled up his speech, and sneaked back to New York City. The next week The American Issue, Anderson's organ, announced that Mr. Anderson did not speak in favor of the prohibition bill because he was taken sick and had to go home. Well, we guess this is so. We have no doubt that he was sick. Most anybody would be sick under such circumstances. But Mr. Anderson was not physically sick, he was simply mentally ill. He knew euough to know that he had been squelched and the reason he had been squelched was because he had been discovered.

He Wanted An Issue

These are interesting facts, all of which can be verified and proven and which are known to many unimpeachable witnesses. Not only this, but at the same time it was discovered that Anderson was holding up the prohibition bill in committee and that he was holding up his own local option bill and that he was criticising Speaker Sweet for not letting out the local option bill, when he himself had a deal to keep it in committee for the express purpose of having an issue against Speaker Sweet, so that he could get up an agitation and raise more money. Oh, what a reformer this Anderson is! Oh, what a political knave he is! When the Rev. O. R. Miller and Charles L. Boothby were made acquainted with the fact that he had been playing a double game, that he had been holding up their prohibition bill, that he had been holding up the local option bill, in order to have an issue against Speaker Sweet, they went to him and charged him with this reprehensible conduct. When he discovered that he was discovered he became penitent. Notwithstanding the fact that he had denounced Rev. O. R. Miller as a crook and Charles L. Boothby as a drunkard, he discovered that they had the "goods on him" and so he made up his mind that discretion was the better part of valor." What did he do? He went to them and wanted to make a combination. This reformer, this high and holy temperance advocate wanted to make a combination with a man who he said was a drunkard and had sold out the temperance cause, wanted to make a combination with Rev. O. R. Miller, who he said was a crook and had betrayed the temperance cause. Why did he want make a combination with them? Because they had caught him red-handed in his dirty political work. That is the reason and the only reason. That is the reason that the combination was made. Now what is William H. Anderson doing? He is misrepresenting the New York Civic League. He is misrepresenting Miller and Boothby and he advertises to the public that they have surrendered the leadership of the temperance forces of the state into his hands. This is another lie. This is another proof that he is a common liar, as well as a common lobbyist.

BILLY ALLEN OPENS AT QUIRK TONIGHT

BILLY ALLEN

The Billy Allen company opens a week of musical comedy at the Quirk theater tonight. The Billy Allen company is widely known as one of the best organizations presenting musical comedy and light operatic productions, and comes to Fulton after a long and successful tour including an all-summer engagement in the popular summer parks where the company makes its summer headquarters and equips the show for its regular road tours.

The organization is unique, and Billy Allen himself is an odd personality around which the organization has been built.

Billy Allen is a clever comedian, but it is not only as a fun-maker that Billy Allen excels, he is also a shrewd manager. He has studied the popular demand, and much of his success has been achieved by placing before the public a style of entertainment which never fails to please. He surrounds himself with capable support, and his organization comes to Fulton with a well balanced company of 35 thoroughly drilled musical comedy players.

This includes a cast of clever principals and his widely known "Beauty Chorus" of singing and dancing girls. He has chosen his bills from among the best known New York successes, without, however, exploiting any already worn out and discredited by hurriedly organized and frequently incompetent one-nighters.

These productions are usually seen only at the highest prices of admission, but the Billy Allen Company, while a high class organization, is a popularp rice attraction.

The show with which the company opens its engagement tonight is "A Hot Old Time," in which Billy Allen appears in the leading comedy role, the part made famous by that old timer Johnny Ray, whom Billy Allen so much resembles. Catchy songs, dainty dances and irresistible comedy are the elements of "A Hot Old Time" which promise to make this evening's performance an entertaining one for the large audience that will undoubtedly be on hand to welcome the popular comedian and his clever company.

There will be a change of play every day. Matiness will be given every afternoon.

HIGH SCHOOL BEATEN IN THE FIRST GAME

ball Terry made a pretty drop kick. After the next kick-off E. S. caught a forward pass and on the second down with ten yards to go, the game was finished. The final score was 22 to 0.

The line-ups follow:

Fulton.		E. Syracuse.
LaPoint	right end	Hopkins
M. Frawley	right tackle	Finney
Gillespie	right guard	Tolden
Richardson	center	Lynn-Donnelly
Kraus	left guard	Gibson
Holly	left tackle	Laidlow
Calkins	right halfback	Cole (Captain)
Johnson	left halfback	Rogers
D. O'Brien	quarterback	Terry
E. Frawley (Captain)	fullback	Moleski

The stars of the game for Fulton were the backs and tackles. Only twice during the game did the East Syracuse runner get through the tacklers to the Fulton quarterback and both times he was ready for them. Now that the new men on the team have played the first game and found out what it is really like it is hoped that the team may go through the rest of the season without fear. The remaining games to be played are:

October 9—Baldwinsville at Fulton.
October 16—Auburn at Fulton.
November 2—Baldwinsville at Baldwinsville.

ALEXANDER RATED AS ONE OF THE GREATEST PLAYERS

Chicago.—In the tightest league race staged the Chicago Federals narrowly won the flag by winning the second game of a double header from Pittsburgh, after having dropped the first game. Darkness held off just long enough to allow the Chicago team to take the title and put Pittsburgh in third place. Three runs in the sixth inning of the second game, however, settled the ownership of the gonfalon. The enormous crowd went wild over the victory. The scores were 5 to 4 and 4 to 3. The first game went to eleven innings, while the second was called after the visitors' half of the seventh inning.

The league race was in doubt until the final game was played today, as for weeks past there has been a constant shifting of positions on the part of Pittsburgh, Chicago and St. Louis, the Mossouri city not being eliminated until yesterday, when a defeat by Kansas City put it out of the running. The three teams finished with only a little over three points separating them. The final standing is:

Chicago	86	66	.56578
St. Louis	87	67	.56493
Pittsburgh	86	67	.56209

NINE MINERS ENTOMBED SIX DAYS; THEY LIVE

Pottsville, Pa.—The six men and three boys entombed in the Coaldale mine last Monday morning were rescued at three o'clock yesterday. They were at once hurried to the Panther Creek hospital, where all were expected to recover. They kept alive by gnawing chicken bones and chewing fish oil composition used for their mine lamps. Of the eleven men imprisoned when an inrush of water blocked them in, all have now been rescued.

BRITISH PAID BIG PRICE FOR VICTORY

Heavy Casualty List Made Public in London Indicates Price Paid for British Victory Over the Germans in France.

London.—Another heavy casualty list made public here indicates the price that has been paid for the recent British victory over the Germans in France. The official list gives the names of ninety-nine officers and 1,736 men, while unofficial news has been received of the deaths of eighty-eight additional officers.

In the most desperate attempts made so far by the Germans to stay the advance of the Allies in the West heavy columns of troops are being hurled against the new positions consolidated by the British and French. In these the infantry attacks are preceded by hours of continuous artillery bombardment.

So far in these attacks, which have cost the Germans heavy losses, success has been gained at only one point. This is at the northern end of the recent British drive, where Sir John French admits, the enemy has retaken the greater part of the Hohenzollern redoubt. As the Germans in their official bulletins never admitted the loss of this stronghold, the latest communication from Berlin makes no mention of its recapture.

The Germans, who were the first to shock the world by the use of chlorine and other poisonous gases, are circulating the charge that the British gains were due largely to the useof deadly vapors. Reports from Berlin say indignation is expressed that this weapon should have been used by the enemies of the Fatherland.

Figures given out by Germany purport to show that the loss of the Allies in the recent fighting was 190,000. Of these the British are said to have lost 60,000 and the French 130,000. This estimate is without denial so far from the British War office.

Sir John French's latest report, which is dated yesterday, says:

"Yesterday afternoon the enemy commenced a heavy bombardment and delivered repeated attacks over the open against our trenches, between the quarries and the Sermedes-Hulluch road. These attacks, which were pressed with determination, were all repulsed with severe loss to the enemy, and failed to reach our trenches.

"Further to the northwest the enemy succeeded in recapturing the greater portion of the Hohenzollern redoubt.

"On the remainder of our front the situation is unchanged."

Kaiser's Men Recapture Important Point at Loos

London.—Violent and repeated counter-attacks by the Germans, delivered in persistent effort to re-establish themselves in the works captured from them by the Allies in their great offensive in Artois during the past week, today resulted in their scoring gains against both the British and the French, which the Allies admitted in theer official reports.

Recovery of this lost ground serves to strengthen materially the German lines on both sides of the salient protecting Lens, which has its apex at Angres. The Germans admit French gains at one point.

In his report tonight Field Marshal Sir John French said:

"Yesterday afternoon the Germans commenced a heavy bombardment and delivered repeated attacks across the open and as well against our trenches between the quarries of Vermettes and the Hulluch road. Their attacks were pressed determinedly, but were all repulsed with severe loss to the Germans, who failed to reach the trenches.

"Further toward the northwest the Germans recaptured the greater portion of the Hohenzollern redoubt."

The Hohenzollern redoubt is in the vicinity of Loos, and was among the important captures reported by Marshal French last Tuesday. It is in the front line of the German trenches.

On the other hand, the Germans admit that the French have captured a section of trench just northwest of Givenchy, which they still held. In the give-and-take fighting of trench warfare, the opposing lines along this front have been zigzagged until they resemble the edge of a saw.

Teuton Military Officers Expelled by Bulgars

London.—The time limit set by Russia in her demand upon Bulgaria to "break openly" with Germany, Austria and Turkey and to expel from herb orders German and Austrian military officers, expired at 2 o'clock this afternoon. So far as is known in London at midnight, the Sofia government has made no reply and there is not an inkling here as to what has happened in the last twenty-four hours within the troubled kingdom.

Meanwhile, military activities on every vital frontier of the Balkan theater is increasing, indicating a determination on the part of the hostile commanders to be prepared for any eventualities.

The known developments of the day include:

The appearance off the Bulgarian port of Varna (in the Black Sea) of Russian warships.

The moving of the allied troops landed at Salonica to Drama and Buk, near the Bulgarian frontier.

The seizing of three Macedonian railroads by Greece. Two of these are Austrian owned, while the third is French.

NEW JERSEY ATTRACTS SUFFRAGE FIRE

New York.—For the effect it will have on New York if the men of New eJrsey vote for suffrage, a committee of women started this morning across the river on a whirlwind tour of the state to win doubtful ones to the cause. They met at the Plaza at 11 o'clock and commanded by Mrs. Helen Hoy Greeley, who had a new automobile recently presented to New York suffragists by their enfranchised sisters of Oregon and California.

The automobile was decorated with the Empire State Campaign committee's colors, blue, gold and white, as the tour is made under the auspices of this organization. The first stop was in Jersey City, where the volunteer workers were metb y Miss Elizabeth F. Pope, chairman of the Hudson county organization, which has headquarters in Newark avenue.

From there the automobile, which was accompanied most of the way by another campaign vehicle in charge of Mrs. H. A. Grant, of Tarrytown, proceeded to Newark, where the suffragists were welcomed by members of the Women's Political Union. Another meeting followed at Passaic, and a big rally will be held tonight in Paterson tomorrow, according to program. The automobiles will reach Dover, Chatham, Madison and Morristown, and all along the way the women will be met by New Jersey workers.

The tour will end at Trenton, where several meetings will be held. With Mrs. Greeley tomorrow will be Mrs. Henry Bruere, wife of the City Chamberlain, who helped organize the New Jersey committee; Mrs. Robert Adamson, wife of the First Commissioner; Miss Mary H. Fisher and Miss Vivian Donner. "We are helping the New Jersey suffragists because if they win it will have such a wonderful effect on New York voters," Mrs. Greeley said.

Forty men of prominence in New Jersey today organized a committee for woman suffrage and issued an appeal to voters to look upon the question favorably at the special election this month. Heading the committee is George M. Lamonte and the vice chairman is Colonel George Harvey. Other members are John W. Westcott, Judge Frederick Adams, Senator William Hughes, J. Thompson Baker, Ernest R. Ackerman of Plainfield; E. G. C. Bleakeley of Camden; Judge Robert Carey of Jersey City; Everett Colby of Orange; Judge James C. Connolly, Seymour Cromwell, John Cotton Dana, Judge Abe J. David, Cornelius J. Ford, J. Franklin Baker Fort, formerly governor; William G. Gebhardt, Emerson P. Harris, Eugene F. Kinkead, Victor Marvlag, Mayor of Elizabeth; George W. V. Moy, James E. Pope, Mayor Thomas K. Raymond, of Newark; Linton Satterthwaite, William L. Saunders, Oberlin Smith, of Bridgeton, and Mayor David H. Standish of Glen Ridge.

CLARA MORRIS, FORMER ACTRESS, MADE WEALTHY

New York.—Miss Clara Morris, one of the most distinguished actresses of the American stage and who seemed doomed to pass her declining years blind and in poverty, came into a fortune yesterday which will provide for her until the end.

This will be gratifying news to her thousands of admirers, many of whom had contributed to her support either directly or indirectly through benefit performances.

An accounting of the estate of her brother-in-law, William H. Harriot, filed with the tax appraiser of Queens county yesterday, shows that Miss Morris, who off the stage was Mrs. Clara Morris Harriot, is to receive the income of $50,000 for life. Mr. Harriot left an estate of about $450,000. After providing for Miss Morris he gave $50,000 to each of two nephews, Warren H. Titus and William J. Wallace, and the rest of the estate to his widow.

Miss Morris formerly lived in Yonkers, but is now making her home with Mrs. Harriot, in Whitestone, Queens county. She is blind and in feeble health, requiring the attention of a nurse all the time.

CITY CLERK'S REPORT

The monthly report submitted today by City Clerk Scudder shows twenty-two deaths, 93 births and sixteen marriages during September.

One hundred and sixty licenses were issued and one alien's license. The former netted $160.00 and the latter $20.00.

WANTS PANAMA CANAL CLOSED

Panama.—Lieutenant-Colonel Harding, in charge of the Panama Canal, has recommended that President Wilson officially close the canal until November 1 as it will be impossible to clear the channel before that date. He favors refunding tolls to ships awaiting passage and trans-shipment of the cargoes. It would require at least a month for the Panama Railroad to complete the trans-shipment for the ninety vessels now in canal waters.

The new slide is the worst in the history of the canal. More than 1,000,000 cubic yards of earth must be removed before the channel is again clear.

PERSONAL TAX IS ASSAILED BY SAXE

New York.—The abolition of personal property tax and the submission of a low occupational income tax on all business whether conducted by corporation or individuals was advocated yesterday by Martin Saxe, president of the State Board of Tax Commissioners.

This levy was attacked by Commissioner Saxe as a "howling farce." He declared it would not increase the city revenue, but would simply pile up uncollected taxes, as the Mitchel administration had gone about boosting the assessment with a "blare of trumpets and given all the tax dodgers a chance to run to cover."

INDIANA SPEAKER COMING SATURDAY

Indiana Woman Famous on Chautauqua Circuit---Mayor Fox Invited to Preside at Biggest Suffrage Meeting Ever Held Here

The largest suffrage meeting ever held in Fulton will be that which will take place Saturday evening in the Park, to be addressed by Mrs. Mabel Currie, of Indianapolis, Ind., who is spending two months in this state working for Votes for Women.

The plans for the meeting have been going on for several weeks and expectations are that there will be a large attendance, as Mrs. Currie is one of the best known Chautauqua speakers of the Middle West and on several occasions had the distinction of speaking from the same platform with William J. Bryan, former secretary of state and world peace advocate. As a singular coincidence, Miss Sarah T. Muir, the organizer, who is now working in this county for the cause, is when she is home in Lincoln, Neb., a neighbor and acquaintance of several years' standing with Nebraska's foremost citizen. Miss Muir will also be heard in suffrage talk on Saturday evening. Dr. Frank Fox has been invited to preside at the meeting and will do so unless prevented by private affairs.

Miss Currie is one of the most convincing talkers ever heard and her speeches are not only on the enlightening order, but she has a fund of anecdote and reminiscences of the stage and circuit as well as a fund of experiences which are well worth hearing. No woman can shine on a Chautauqua circuit and be dull in word or deed. Miss Muir, too, is a speaker of exceptional ability. She teaches English in a high school in Nebraska and holds two collegiate degrees and expects to gather in a third in 1916. Dr. Harriet Doane is in charge of the arrangements for the meeting and there will be a program of music and souvenirs will be distributed.

ANNA GOODELLA WINS CASE AGAINST NEIGHBOR

In police court this morning the case of Sophia Labodia vs. Anna Goodella was tried, resulting in a verdict for the defendant. The two women, who are Polish, were represented respectively by Attorneys Hillick and Somers. It was charged that Mrs. Goodella had instructed her young son to throw stones at the complainant, with the result that Mrs. Labodia received a blackened eye.

Two cases are being tried before Judge Wilson this afternoon, William McCarthy, a saloonkeeper, being arraigned first. McCarthy is charged with violation of the code pertaining to short weights and measures. The evidence in the case was obtained by City Sealer O'Brien. The claim is that MeaCrthy sold butter underweight.

Mrs. Hattie Walters will be tried later in the afternoon on the charge of violating penal law No. 720.

COMMON COUNCIL TO MEET TONIGHT

The Common Council meets tonight in regular session. Among the important matters to be brought up will be the necessity for temporary detention quarters for insane or violent persons brought to police headquarters or the hospital. Last week two cases involving insanity required the attention of local authorities.

GLYNN PLACES BLAME ON G. O. P.

Albany, N. Y.—Former Governor Martin H. Glynn tonight gave out the following statement:

"Ever since January 1 the present Republican State Administration has charged with the responsibility for the levy of the big direct tax.

"The figures on the books of the State Treasurer for the fiscal year just closed show this charge to have been manufactured forp olitical purposes, and place the blame for the heavy direct tax where it belongs, on the shoulders of the present administration.

"These figures do not lie. They tell a tale which no political juggling can answer."

LOCAL OPTION IN THREE CONVENTIONS

Trenton, N. J.—Of the three state conventions to be held in Trenton today by the political parties of New Jersey that of the Republicans is likely to be the warmest. Local option and a threatened attempt to force the convention to adopt a plank in its platform covering that subject is expected to put liveliness into the gathering. Woman suffrage and the certainty that efforts will be made to get the Republicans, the Democrats and the Progressives to incorporate a plank in favor of votes for women and the acoption of the amendment to the State Constitution at the special election on October 19 also will stir something of a flurry.

BARBER REYNOLDS NEARLY LOST A FINGER

Merton E. Reynolds, of Utica st., a barber employed at Zuck's shop in Oneida st., cut his finger with a sharp razor yesterday, almost severing that member. Mr. Reynolds was in the act of shaving a customer and had gone to the water faucet carrying in his hands besides the razor a cup and brush. He dropped the brush on the floor and in attempting to pick it up the hand came forcibly in contact with the razor blade. Dr. Cusick dressed the wound.

TELEPHONE OPERATORS RECIPIENTS OF KINDNESS

Wilson & Scott, taxicab owners, are showing their appreciation of the service rendered by the corps of operators in the Central telephone exchange. Each fair day the taxi men call for five members of the force to be taken on a "joy ride" to Oswego and return. That the young women appreciate fully this thoughtfulness is evidenced by the expressions one hears them make to relatives and friends.

SOLD BUTTER UNDER THE PROPER WEIGHT

William McCarthy, a farmer, charged with selling butter underweight within the city limits, was found guilty this afternoon in police court and fined $10.

Opinions

It Will be a Fine Day

One of the most idiotic statements madeb y some of the corporation New York papers and some of the corporation attorneys of the Constitutional Convention is the one to the effect that those who opposed the short ballot did so on the ground of patronage. It was alleged that they wanted the patronage of the state departments and that is the reason they opposed the short ballot. Only subtle corporation lawyers and their newspaper aids could make such an argument. The patronage distributed by the different elective state officers has always been distributed in the open but when the Governor has all the patronage to distribute it will be distributed in secret and banded out in accordance with the wishes of the corporations that put up the money to nominate and elect the governor. Every intelligent man knows this.

Not only this but there will be just as much patronage when the Governor makes all the appointments as there was when the elective state officers made them. There will be no less patronage but it will be concentrated in the hands of one man who is controlled by the one financial interest, that backed him for the nomination and election. There is not an intelligent voter who cannot see this. The corporation lawyer and the subsidized New York papers to the contrary notwithstanding.

It will be a fine day for monarchy; it will be a fine day for autocracy; it will be a fine day for the aristocracy of wealth; it will be a fine day for Wall Street, when the Governor is the only public state officer elected and he is owned by the financial interests. It will be a fine day for the corporation lawyers who engineer the canvass of the Governor at the dictation of the financial interests they serve, but it will be a sad day for the people.—Lyons Republican.

PENNELLVILLE CABBAGE DEMONSRATION POSTPONED

Silo filling was in full swing in the neighborhood of Mr. Thos. Washer and Mr. A. D. Becker on the date set for cabbage demonstration under the auspices of the Farm Bureau. For that reason these meetings have been postponed and are ow scheduled as follows:

Monday, October 11, 10 a. m., Thos. Washer, Pennellville.

Tuesday, October 12, 10 a. m., A. D. Becke , Pennellville.

These fields have been visited by the manager of the Farm Bureau and Prof. A. E. Wilkinson of the College of Agriculture, and they found that there is a marked difference to be seen between the various plots having different fertilizers. Bear these new dates in mind and plan to be present at one of the meetings if possible.

AUBURN GIRLS TO HAVE A GYMNASIUM

Auburn.—Privileges of the gymnasium and classes under the supervision of a capable instructor will be again this year granted to girls of the High and Grammar schools by the officials of the Woman's Union, according to announcements made today. In all probability more than 200 girls of the High and Grammar schools will soon be taking gymnastic work.

STREET SIGNS ARE CONVENIENT

At one of the get-together meetings of the old Chamber of Commerce, Edward Joslin told in a humorous vein of his experience with a stranger in town who wanted to locate himself, to find a certain street. Now, while Mr. Joslin felt that he knew the city pretty well, he was, nevertheless, puzzled when it came to giving directions; therefore, he seized the man's coat sleeve and led him to the object of his search. The relation of the incident amused the audience and everybody agreed that this city should have street signs as soon as possible.

One of the results of automobile travel is a general effort for the better marking of highways with guideboards. The same idea applies equally well in towns where there is commonly a lack of proper marking of street corners, which is irritating to visitors and newcomers.

Not many years ago travelers upon the highways of the rural sections would find guideboards of wood with painted directions. In a few years the paint washed off, and few persons were able to decipher the remnants of the information. Within the past two or three years automobile associations and highways departments have planted many road signs, giving routes and distances as well as warning motorists against dangerous places. The effect of these handsome signs is pleasing and also beneficial. Nothing adds more to the comfort of a traveler than clear markings of the highway. Nothing makes a town seem more convenient and up-to-date than the careful marking of corners with names of streets.

LOYALTY

Frequently one meets the man who is forever proclaiming his loyalty to the house he represents. Occasionally we run across the fellow who seldom, if ever, refers to his faithfulness, his loyalty, his compliance with the rules and regulations of the company he represents.

About once in so often something comes up to distinguish the first man from the second man, and you know there's a difference in men and in what we call loyalty—what we call loyalty.

By and by some knocker, some complainer, some small chap takes a sly slap at the corporation that the man of proclaimed loyalty represents. This causes the alleged loyal man to get all excited, and he resents everything and anything. He storms, struts and shouts his loyalty.

The truly honest man, the honestly loyal employe, quietly, tactfully makes a knocker look like a punched lead nickel. And he does this without trying to make glory for himself by megaphoning to the world his individual indignation, without putting himself in the spotlight. He works intelligently to fix things. He does not fake.

Loyalty is in the heart and not in the head. Be loyal and some one will find it out.

The tongue is a good tool to talk with, but you cannot talk yourself into confidence of the corporation you represent. Work there.—Silent Partner Magazine.

VIEWS OF STATE EDITORS

From Republican State Committee Views:

We note that since the war orders began to pile up by the million dollars' worth in this country, the Democraaic newspapers are full of stories about "the return of prosperity."

This strikes one as rather queer, in view of the fact that only a few months ago, and until the war orders did begin to come in, these same Democratic newspapers were strenuously denying that prosperity had ever left, or that anything like hard times existed.—Cuba Patriot.

It is obvious that when Chairman Osborn of the Democratic State Committee declared that the voters are becoming tired of the Whitman administration he was expressing a wish and by no means a fact. Such talk is expected of certain political leaders, or perhaps in this case it would be more correct to say figures, for Mr. Osborn is a part of the front which Tammany puts up to make a show at respectability. No political observer with impartial judgment can well hold the view expressed by Chairman Osborn. The truth is that the people are becoming more and more pleased with the Whitman administration the further it pursues the work of restoring the state's affairs to a normal and healthful condition.—Brooklyn Standard-Union.

Some of the Democratic newspapers are becoming unintentionally humorous in that they are attempting to make it appear that the late Progressive party will somehow become a factor that must be included in the Republican party's reckoning for the next presidential campaign.

As the Progressive party was the Democratic party's best asset in 1912, for that reason having come to be known as the Democraaic Aid party, Democratic newspapers naturally find it difficult to reconcile themselves to the fact that it is no more. Without its assistance, the Democratic party will be overwhelmed next year, just as would have been in 1912 if many Republicans had not in that year been lured from their allegiance.—Albany Evening Journal.

BIG CROWD AT THE NEW QUIRK

Patrons of The Quirk theatre received a treat last night in the performance of the Billy Allen Musical Comedy Company, which presented "A Hot Old Time." The play, a recognized production in two acts, was staged with every attention to the detail demanded by a first-class performance. The company is a thoroughly competent one and includes a hard working group of attractive chorus girls who sing and dance well and dress prettily.

BILLY ALLEN

Billy Allen plays thel eading role, an Irish character, and the comedy situations are both emphatic and frequent and the audience does laugh. There arem any musical numbers, all well handled, and produced with pretty effects. Deserving of special mention is the Japanese song. In this the chorus girls carry prettily lighted Japanese lanterns.

The living pictures, introduced in the second act are another spectacular feature. Altogether, the show is clean, clever and entertaining and will no doubt attract large audiences during the balance of the week.

The Beauty Parlor Tonight.

Tonight the company will present another popular musical show, "The Beauty Parlor," in which Billy Allen plays a character in which he has scored the greatest success as a comedian. His many scenes are a constant source of laughter, and the show is provided with excellent singing and dancing numbers.

On Wednesday "Keep Moving" will be played. For Thursday one of the feature bills of the week—"The Time the Place and the Girl" is announced and on Friday another feature, "A Night at the Wintergarden" will be presented.

"The Dingbat Family," the popular cartoon play, is advertised for Saturday.

A Charlie Chaplin contest will be held after the performance on Thursday evening. Daily matinees are being given.

POPULAR MECHANICS

Automatic Safe Lock.

To protect vaults from being broken into by cracksmen, a secret auxiliary locking device has been invented which acts automatically when the combination of a safe is disturbed, says Popular Mechanics. It is installed between the door and the back cover plate and so arranged that it is neutral at all times unless the regular combination is blown off or tampered with in an illicit manner, at which time the concealed lock is automatically sprung. This confronts the cracksman with a puzzling situation, for there is no means of his ascertaining the position of the second locking member, even if he is aware of its presence. The location of the device may be varied, while its bolts are also placed in different positions and hidden from view even when the door is opened. Only the owner and the lock company are aware of the exact place at which the device is fitted.

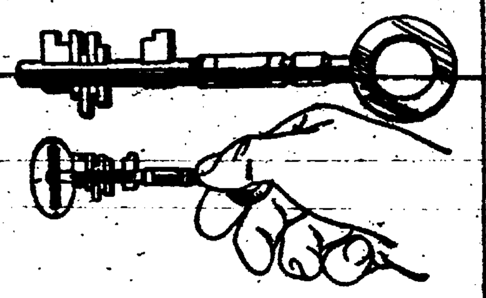
Making Impressions of Leaves.

Grease a piece of heavy writing paper with linseed oil, and smoke the surface well by lighting a small piece of camphor gum and holding the paper over the flame. Place the leaf on the smoked surface of the paper and cover it with several thicknesses of newspaper; then press the leaf into the blackened surface. Remove the leaf and lay it with the blackened surface on a piece of white paper; then cover again with the newspaper and press evenly and thoroughly. A beautiful and permanent impression of the leaf will be transferred to the paper.

Care should be taken not to move the leaf the least bit either in coating it with the smoke or in transferring it to the paper. Be careful not to use too much oil.—Popular Mechanics.

Lock of Many Combinations.

In France an inventor has recently produced a lock which is capable of being changed at will into any one of 10,000 combinations, says Popular Mechanics. The inner construction of the device is intricate, but so formed that by altering the web arrangement of the key its locking tumblers may be set to conform to any desired outline and respond to no key of dissimilar detail. There is a longitudinal slot in the stem of the key carrying the individual teeth which by loosening the thumbscrew may be moved transversely.



KEY USED WITH VARIABLE LOCK.

To alter the combination of the lock the key is inserted into it and given one turn. It is then removed and the structure of its web changed, whereupon the key is again inserted and given a second turn. In making this last turn the tumblers in the lock conform to the new shape of the key and lock themselves to its outline, thereafter responding only to it, but upon being turned over once always come back to neutral to the extent that they are ready to be subjected to a different key arrangement.

Leave Room For the Wrench.

Designers of machinery and particularly engines often overlook, in their endeavor to secure compactness, the fact that a wrench at times has to be used on the various nuts. Consequently, when examining a car with an idea of purchasing, this point is well worth remembering. Be sure there is plenty of space between the nut and the nearest metal, and if the position is such that an ordinary wrench cannot be used see that there is sufficient head room for a box wrench. When it is necessary to remove a number of adjacent parts to get at a single nut it is not only annoying, but it also means a waste of time and money.

Limited Repertory.

Uncle Shadrach had held down the job of pumping the organ in his church for a score of years. A new organist had come, and a member of the church asked Uncle Shadrach what he thought of the newcomer.

"Well, suh," answered Uncle Shadrach, "Ah dean wan' to brag, but Ah can pump mo' pieces 'n he kin play, sah!"—New York Post.

LABOR SAVING.

Various Devices That Assist the Housekeeper.

How efficient is your home? How well does it perform its functions? There are problems to be solved therein every whit as engrossing as the business of the wage earning head of the family. But, thanks to modern devices, it is not impossible to solve them. For instance, take the vacuum cleaner. It will do the work of a maid in a very small percentage of the time it would take her to perform the same work. Of course its first cost is rather large, at least $25, but the saving in the long run is so great that no woman who ever has the tiniest bit of money to spend on making her home comfortable should resist buying one.

If the woman does much of her work herself—if she is one of the domestic women for whom happiness lies in doing the work of the house well—there are electric devices that will take the load of heavy work from her shoulders and yet give her the satisfaction of knowing that she has done her work herself. Electric fans are considered necessities by many business men. Surely if this is so electric motors to run the sewing machine and the washing machine and the dishwashing machine are necessities for the housewife. If you do your housework yourself, why don't you look into this matter of labor saving devices for the home?

There is one other necessity to efficient labor—comfortable shoes. The time has come when every young college girl or professional woman throws appearances to the winds and walks forth in low heels and roomy toes. Her feet may not be as beautiful as formerly, but her general appearance, the swing and grace caused by being comfortably shod, makes up for it. The shoes she wears cost $5 and may be had in all leathers and sizes, from kid to Russian calf.

The Dinner Horn.

Details in regard to the manner in which meals were served during the dark ages do not abound. It is only toward the twelfth century that we begin to have a little light on this interesting subject. When a meal was ready in the thirteenth century the guests of a castle, with the vassals, were assembled to the sound of a horn, a method of summoning that appears to have been the privilege only of the greatest lords. Some hundreds of years later a bell was used for the purpose.

HOME TOWN HELPS

TOWN PLANNING IN AUSTRALIA

Antipodeans Show Wise Interest in Subject and Profit by Experience of Older Countries.

Australians are showing a wise interest in the subject of town planning and housing in general. The trouble with older countries has been that they have not begun to think much about improving housing conditions until housing conditions have got to be insufferably bad. Australia, being a young country, should be able to profit by the unfortunate example of other countries, and it is apparent that Australia is striving to do this.

Building, an Australian publication, devotes much space to this subject. Alluding, for example, to the direction of the movement in Victoria by the Town Planning and Parks' association, these activities are described as intelligent, enthusiastic and energetic. "The flow of active campaigning established," it appears, "threatens altogether to swamp the slum and its wedded evils beyond the hope of re-establishment.

"The association, very sensibly, is enlisting the sympathy and support of the masses by alert regard for their well being. The essentials of the movement bear directly on the existence of that section of the people whom circumstances have handicapped. This the association recognizes. Settled evils which primarily deny the common heritage of sunlight are being squelched. Conditions of living scarcely befitting the brute creation, but to which human flesh and blood are subjected, are being swept way as speedily as the ponderous arm of the law can be operated. In brief, the movement in Victoria, directed by the Town Planning and Parks' association, is making good.

"The association is making a special point of making plain the principles of town planning to those in the position of facilitating reform. For instance, the mayors and councilors of the municipalities and shires were recently circularised on the new and extensive powers conferred upon local governing bodies, by recent amendments of the act. A portion of that circular reads: '... It is hoped that advantage will be taken at once of these powers—applied, perhaps, in conjunction with building regulations to avoid the creation of slum or insanitary areas. In this connection St. Kilda council has recently passed a by-law providing for a minimum area, devoted exclusively to open space, for each dwelling equal to at least eight-eighteenths of that occupied by dwelling and outhouses.'"

COMMUNITY PRIDE AN ASSET

The Town That Cares for Its General Appearance Is the Town That Will Prosper.

Community pride is an asset, and it is one of the greatest of all assets.

The town that improves its streets, cleans up the alleys, paints the houses, cuts the grass, rakes the lawns and plants its flowers is not only encouraging cleanliness, but is making for itself a name among the peoples of the outer world.

Commercial travelers and others come, and look, and go away and talk—and the talk is all in favor of the town and its people.

Talk travels, and grows, and multiplies until the town becomes known in many climes for its cleanliness and progressiveness.

In time other men who are looking for a change of location hear of this town—and then they go, and look, and talk, and are pleased, and it becomes their home.

And the town continues to expand and progress, and as the years roll by it gradually assumes larger proportions and a more commanding and dominating position in the world.

When Community Pride comes in Prosperity enters by its side, and the two become the mighty levers that control the machinery of success.

Personal Pride and Community Pride should march side by side, for when these two potent factors join hands in a laudable purpose opposition quickly melts away.—Laredo Record.

FIFTEEN YEAR HUNT TO END.

Captain C. E. Farrand's Widow to Be Declared Legally Dead.

Denver.—Mrs. May Spencer Farrand, second wife of the late Captain Charles E. Farrand, U. S. A., retired, who mysteriously disappeared fifteen years ago, may soon be declared legally dead in order that the captain's estate may be settled. The only heir the attorneys for the estate have been able to find is Mrs. Louise A. Ryder of New York city, daughter of Captain Farrand by his first marriage.

A nation wide but futile search has been made for Mrs. Farrand for fifteen years by war department officials, federal secret service men and attorneys, since she left Arvada, a Denver suburb, shortly after her husband's death. Neither relatives nor friends have since heard from her.

"Unless Mrs. Farrand is found in a few weeks, Public Administrator Woodward said, "she will have to be declared legally dead, and the captain's fortune will go to the only heir we have been able to locate, but if she is found half of the fortune will go to her."

MAY LOSE CITIZENSHIP.

Status of Baltimoreans Fighting in Europe Is In Doubt.

Baltimore.—A question of law may arise if the young Baltimoreans now fighting in Europe, John Poe, John Sydney Howell, Alexander Godby and Martin D. Monaghan, attempt to return to their native land. It is held by the department of labor that by taking up arms they have expatriated themselves. This was the finding in the case of Frank Calwell of Harrison, Me., a trooper of the Canadian contingent, who attempted to come home, but was held up by the authorities on the ground that he had ceased to be a citizen of the United States.

Local officials declare that a different light may be thrown on the subject when it becomes known under just what conditions these young Baltimoreans enlisted. If they swore allegiance to the flag under which they aspired to fight they of course ceased to be citizens of the United States, but there appears to be doubt as to just what the foreign powers exact of their recruits.

FEW PAUPERS IN KANSAS.

Many Counties Have No Poor Farms Nor Poor Indigents.

Topeka.—Twenty of the 105 Kansas counties have no poor farms or indigent poor, while in other counties the poor farms are self supporting, according to a report made by J. W. Howe, secretary of the state board of control.

In the year ending July 1 the various counties in Kansas cared for only 900 paupers, the report says.

Pending the construction of new quarters at the Winfield Hospital For the Feeble Minded a number of insane and feeble minded patients have been cared for by individual counties.

As a result there were ten more inmates of poor farms this year than last year. In the year ending July 1, says the report, there were nineteen children in the county institution as against fourteen the previous year.

Denmark's Butter.

Denmark prohibits the sale or exportation of butter containing more than 16 per cent water.

CHILD WELFARE HINT.

No garment should bind or restrict the chest of your girl. The ribs, especially in youth, are very elastic, and much of the development of the lungs depends upon their flexibility. Neglect of proper breathing and free exercise out of doors will bring rigid, unyielding walls. Unless the chest expands readily and properly the muscles gradually weaken, the back becomes aged and rounded, and the body actually suffers from malnutrition.

Such abnormalities are acquired unconsciously. A girl may fall into the habit of carrying one shoulder higher than the other, or she may bend forward at the shoulders, or there may be a slight curvature of the spine. In all these conditions the breathing space is lessened. An improper attitude when writing or reading will often ruin a woman's figure. This is especially true of a girl who is growing.

LILLIAN LORRAINE

No, this is not an advertisement for a new hot-weather drink. It is Lillian Lorraine, of "Neal of the Navy" fame, celebrating the end of the filming of an episode by having a drink of soda. The new Pathe and Balboa star has "made good" in pictures.

WM. COURTLEIGH, JR., MISTAKEN FOR SAILOR.

The lucky chance which made William Courtleigh, Jr., who plays the lead in "Neal of the Navy", the Pathe and Balboa serial, turn his head, saved him from a forcible application of shoe leather administered by the captain of one of Uncle Sam's warships. Mr. Courtleigh was sitting on the starboard side of the quarterdeck of the battleship, which particular spot is sacred to the use of the captain and his invited guests. He had been working in a number of shipboard scenes, and feeling tired and hot made his way to a portion of the deck that seemed particularly attractive, and sat down to rest. He was arrayed in the costume of one of Uncle Sam's sailor boys, and so caught the eye of the captain who made a rush at him to give him a lesson in discipline. The captain's boot was poised in the air when young Courtleigh turned his head just in time. "Lucky for you, my boy," said the captain, his anger over, "the refreshments are on me!"

FITZMAURICE BECOMES A BOND ISSUE IN HIMSELF.

Geo. Fitzmaurice, the Pathe producer, wears a disgruntled look these days. He only had one scene in "Via Wireless" left to take and ran up against all sorts of trouble over it. "Fitz" wanted to blow up a yacht off the coast of Long Island, but ran afoul of the government. In the first place he had to give heavy bond that after he blew up the boat he would have her raised. Secondly he had to give bond to a tow boat concern and thirdly to a wrecking company. "Fitz" is so plastered with bonds that he dreams of them. "They say there's no market for bonds these days," he remarks. "They're wrong!"

Signs That Save.

A decided decrease in the number of traffic accidents is reported from Portland, Ore., since the installation there of a comprehensive system of warning signs. The signs consist of red steel dials 18 inches in diameter mounted on steel rods sunk three feet in concrete at the curbs and standing eight feet deep on the top of the dial. The dials are painted bright red with black letters, and read: "School, Careful," "Caution, Bridge," "Caution, Steep Grade." "Danger, Drive Slowly." "Hospital. Quiet." "Caution, Fire Station." "Danger. No Outlet." "Caution. Dangerous Corner," and so on. The signs are set in pairs about 100 feet from the danger point and in all street directions from it, and are so placed that the street lights will shine upon them at night. Portland has a population of about 20,000 greater than Rochester, and embraces more than twice the area of this city.—Rochester Post-Express.

FIGHT FOR PRINCIPLE.

His Task Seems a Hopeless One, Yet He Sticks to the Job.

Every little while you hear somebody say: "It isn't the expense I mind. It's the principle of the thing."

United States treasury officials have found that the country is overrun with persons who feel just that way. Here is one case:

Some years ago the crew of a government revenue cutter gave an entertainment of some sort, and, according to custom, assessed the cost of the affair among those aboard. Each man's share was taken from his pay. One young man was not in sympathy with some feature of the entertainment and objected to having to pay his share. It cost him only 30 cents, but it was the principle of the thing.

He began to write to the assistant secretary of the treasury, who had charge of the revenue cutter service, and demand justice.

That was years ago and the man has averaged about two letters a week ever since. He numbers his letters, and the last one was numbered seven hundred and something.

Two or three years ago he resigned from the revenue cutter service and is now living in New York, but he is still after his 30 cents and the establishment of a great principle.

When Charles Dewey Hilles was an assistant secretary of the treasury he sent the man his personal check for 30 cents in the hope that it would end the long correspondence, but it did not. The man promptly sent back the check, saying that he did not want the money but justice, and that the 30 cents must come from the government itself.

And so the correspondence goes on with no sign of ever letting up.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

The Way Out.

Mr. Halle in his book "Notes From a Painter's Life" tells an amusing story of the celebrated caricaturist Carlo Pellegrini.

The caricaturist borrowed £5 from the author.

"When he had got it and put it in his pocket he said these memorable words in his broken English: 'Halle, my fellow, if I take this £5 as a loan every time I see you I say: "Dere dat tiresome Halle. I owe him £5." And you say: "Dere dat tiresome Pelican." He owe me £5." It make unpleasant between us. So I take dis as gift.'"

When Spencer Tried Vegetarianism.

Herbert Spencer tried vegetarianism for about a year, says London Opinion. "At the end of that time," he relates, "I went over all that I had written during the year and consigned it to the fire." Spencer found an exclusively vegetarian diet too bulky, and came to the conclusion that rational life is a compromise. In the matter of diet it is best to strike the happy mean, "between the tiger pacing its cage and the cow lying upon the grass."

Old Hickory.

The fifth grade class in history stories had been studying about Andrew Jackson, from his boyhood up. Finally the day came for them to write all they had learned of this great man. Bert, a bright little fellow of nine years, wrote among other interesting things:

"Andrew Jackson was called 'Old Hickory' because when he was a boy he was a little tough."—New York Tribune.

Business men and others training at the Plattsburg and Fort Sheridan camps should brace themselves to the fact that these affairs are not holiday outings for real soldiers, but the routine thing, year in and year out.

Carranza has been talking about a peace "absolutely undesirable" to his party. Perhaps one absolutely desirable to the rest of the world will be established, leaving the Carranzaists to "grin and bear it."

Military training is going on in this country at the pace held abroad a few years ago and for the purpose alleged over there—national defense. Do you get that, Europe?

Many a worrying along golfer realizes after the tournament trophies have been handed out that at least he has acquired some clubs and flannel trousers.

The appropriation for airships of three of the belligerents in $150,000,000. That's surely going some for the mere toy of the faddists a few years back.

GIVES LIFE FOR ONE OF HIS CREW

Survivors Tell of Thrilling Wreck on Bermudian Coast.

CAUGHT IN A HURRICANE.

Captain Boothe Sought Life Preserver For Fireman and Was Only One Lost. Bermudian Also Brings In Thirty-three Survivors of Wreck In Mid-Atlantic Ocean.

The Quebec liner Bermudian arrived in New York from Bermuda with sixty shipwrecked sailors among her passengers and brought the story of how Captain Ernest Boothe of the British steamship Pollokshield, caught off the Bermudian coast in a hurricane and fog, ran his vessel ashore head-on and sacrificed his life while trying to insure the safety of one of his crew. This story has added interest because the Pollokshield was, up to the outbreak of the war, the Hamburg-American liner Graecia, plying between New York and West Indian and Central American ports.

The Graecia slipped out of New York harbor with a cargo of coal for the German cruiser Karlsruhe, was captured by the British, taken to Gibraltar and sold. Her name was changed to the Pollokshield, and she was used by the admiralty as a supply ship.

Had Cargo of Explosives.

The Pollokshield, with a crew of thirty-two men, left Cardiff, Wales, for Bermuda on Aug. 22, with a cargo of shells and gunpowder. In mid-Atlantic she encountered the great gulf hurricane and fought wind, fog and seas for five days. Captain Boothe had lost his bearings when at 8 o'clock in the morning of Sept. 7 the fog lifted and he found himself almost ashore on Elba beach on the south coast of Bermuda.

He tried in vain to get his vessel away from the reefs, but the gale was too strong. Nothing remained to be done but run ashore. Captain Boothe ordered the fires banked, called all the men up from below and assembled them on deck, tied down his whistle cord and headed his ship for the coral shore.

The journey was not a long one, and the Pollokshield soon struck, burying her nose in a great smother of waves beating over the reefs. She beached herself in such a way that she rested on a shelf of coral, and in a few hours she began to break in two just forward of the mainmast.

Captain Gives Up His Life.

Captain Boothe discovered that one of his firemen did not have a life preserver. The fireman said he had not been able to find one. The captain started aft for a preserver just as the ship broke in two, and the last his men saw of him he was being carried away on the crest of a wave.

The rear end of the ship slipped off into deep water, and much of the cargo fell out into the sea. The thirty-two survivors were taken off after thirty hours by Antonio Marshell, a Portuguese fisherman, who manipulated a whaleboat through the surf and got it alongside the stranded hulk.

Five of the survivors of the Pollokshield remained in Bermuda to work at recovering such of the shells as remain in the wreck. The others will remain in New York a few days and then start for England.

Besides the survivors of the Pollokshield, the Bermudian brought thirty-three survivors of the wreck in mid-Atlantic on Aug. 15 of the Italian steamship Purificazione, bound from Genoa to Norfolk, Va. The captain and crew of the Purificazione abandoned her several hours before she went to the bottom and were picked up a couple of days later by the British steamship Cayo Gitmano, which took them to Bermuda.

The Married Voice.

A dramatic critic has been saying that our most accomplished players cannot reproduce on the stage the "married voice," even when they are married. There is a peculiar domestic note—used at home—which cannot get over the footlights and was never meant for publicity.—London Chronicle.

ARNOLD DALY

Arnold Daly, who is producing pictures for Pathe under the name of the "Arnold Daly Series", sprang a new one recently in his desire for realism. Mr. Daly wanted to get a ballroom scene with all the atmosphere of life in high society. Mrs. George Gould generously permitted the use of her palatial residence on Fifth Ave., New York. Upper Fifth Ave. opened its eyes to see a long line of carriages and automobiles discharging scores of men and women in evening dress at high noon before the Gould residence, and received by lines of powdered footmen in full livery. A number of persons well known in society consented to appear in the ballroom scene, and doubtless when "Ashton-Kirk, Investigator", the name of the picture, is shown upon the screens they will be easily recognised.

Cut the Weeds and Grass.

Whether you are a renter or an owner, you should not permit grass and weeds to "take" the sidewalk. Flies and mosquitoes bred in the tangled grass of a home owner are just as annoying and poisonous as those that are brought to life on the rented premises. And the blow to civic beauty is as severe in the one instance as in the other. Don't be a drawback to comfort, health and civic beauty, which is to say, don't weed and grass-encumber the sidewalk of the place that you call home.—Corsican (Tex.) Sun.

Value of Street Trees.

"New York would be a far different city," says the Evening Mail, "if a million trees were growing along its 3,500 miles of streets and roads. Manhattan highways also would afford room for 200,000 trees, which would greatly improve property values and the public health."

Wireless Control of Fog Guns.

A system of wireless control that is now being applied successfully at several points in Scotland seems to have solved the problem of distant control of acetylene fog guns located at points difficult of access, and provides a means by which a number of such installations may be operated from one wireless station without the necessity for visiting the different signals, except for making repairs and replenishing the supply of gas, a Popular Mechanics writer says. The gun automatically feeds and fires itself at regular intervals until stopped or until the supply of acetylene runs out, and the wireless control simply provides a means of starting it when there is a fog and stopping it when the fog clears, without going near the signal. Furthermore, the wireless apparatus is so arranged and tuned that it is not interefered with by the more powerful waves that may be sent out by passing ships or by other wireless stations.

COMMON BLESSINGS.

It is not rare gifts that make men happy. It is the common and simple and universal gifts; it is health and the glance of sunshine in the morning; it is fresh air; it is the friend, the lover; it is the kindliness that meets us on the journey. It may be only a word, a smile, a look; it is these and not any rarity of blessing that are God's gentle art of making happy.—Morrison.

MINERS' STRIKE IS UNLIKELY

That Is the Prevailing Opinion in Philadelphia—Miners to Demand Eight-Hour Day and Increased Pay.

Philadelphia.—On April 1 next the wage agreement, under which the anthracite miners of Pennsylvania have been working since 1912, will terminate, as well also the agreement under which the bituminous miners have been working. The coincidental termination of these agreements make a Nation-wide strike feasible. The indications are, however, that such a strike will not occur.

To get first-hand knowledge of industrial and social conditions in the hard coal country, and to learn, if possible, what result might be expected from the wage negotiations of next year, a newspaper representative has made a survey of the anthracite territory, and talked with all classes of persons as to the outlook. The best information he has obtained seems to indicate that there will be no strike. On April 1 the miners will demand an eight-hour day, recognition of the union and a 20 per cent. increase in wages. There will probably be a suspension of work at the mines, lasting as long as six weeks or two months, and representing conditions in 1916, when the mines were closed pending renewal of the wage agreement. The eight-hour day and "full and complete recognition" will be the chief issues to be settled. Granting of an eight-hour day would mean the same pay for less work, and would doubtless increase the price of coal to consumers, without an increase in the miners' wages. Should there also be a 20 per cent. increase in wages, the price of coal to consumers would be still a great deal higher.

There are strong influences at work for a peaceful settlement, not the least being the disposition of both men and employers to be reasonable and fair, and the growth in mutual good feeling among operators and miners. Other indications for peace are that work at the mines this year has been slack, the international treasury of the union has been depleted owing to Western troubles, the companies are not storing coal in unusual amounts, and there is the fear that the I. W. W. may gain a foothold if a strike is forced.

CANDIDATES SLOW TO FILE STATEMENTS

Only two candidates whose names were before the voters at the recent primaries have filed a statement of their expenses. B. C. Turner and Richard Johnson, Progressives of Oswego, were the exceptions. [illegible] pires next Friday and every person who filed a petition of designation as a candidate must also file his statement of expenses, showing what they expended and for what purposes. In case they spent no money they must also certify that fact. The blanks for use in making the statements can be obtained at the Commissioners of Election office.

The employes of the Commissioners of Elections office are now getting ready for the registration days, when the enrollment for 1916 will also be made. In cities the first day for registration is next Friday, October 8, and the second day will be the day following. Then the registration places will again be open on the following Friday and Saturday, October 15 and 16. The places will be open from 7 a. m. till 10 p. m. continuously.

MISS SARAH MUIR PLACES POSTERS

Young Suffragist Visitor Rejoices in President Wilson's Change of Heart, Which Indicates Trend of Times.

Downtown merchants received visits today and yesterday from Miss Muir, suffragist, who placed neat posters advertising the suffrage cause on display in each window.

Miss Muir, with the local committee, held street meetings Saturday at Mexico and Pulaski and attracted large chowds. They were ably assisted by the suffrage organizations in both towns, who had announced the meetings in advance.

No meetings were held yesterday, the entire day being spent by the committee in arranging for a number of talks in connection with the granges in surrounding towns. Daysville, Fernwood, Altmar and Sandbank are on today's program. In each of these towns the grange has charge of the meeting.

Local supporters of the suffrage movement are interested in the announcement from Washington on Saturday that President Wilson will soon make known his position on the subject of woman suffrage. His friends say he will give his support to the reform as a state question.

Mr. Wilson will vote at Princeton, N. J., on October 19 on the proposed amendment to the State Constitution providing for equal suffrage. About the same time he will issue a statement giving his views on the subject.

In discussing suffrage the President will make it clear that he has not modified his conviction that the national government is wrong in principle and that women should seek the right to vote through the medium of states.

In the opinion of national leaders the effect of the President's utterances on suffrage will be important in a political way. They believe it will remove in a large measure the opposition of the suffragists which has been inspired by the President's refusal of their appeals for his assistance in procuring the submission of a suffrage amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

That the President is favorably inclined to the suffrage side in New Jersey was indicated in announcements today that his private secretary, Joseph Tumulty, and Secretary of War Garrison will support the suffrage amendment in the forthcoming New Jersey election. Here is Mr. Garrison's statement:

"I cannot see that any harm whatever can come to the body politic by permitting the women to have the ballot. I m someawht in doubt if the great reforms that its earnest advocates claim will flow from giving the women the ballot."

THE G. A. R. DELEGATES RETURN TO CITY

Members of Post Schenk, G. A. R., of this city, who have been in Washington, D. C., for the annual encampment, have returned. The meeting is reported as having been inspirational and the "comrades" are looking forward already to next year's meet.

LOCAL ATTORNEYS ELECTED TO OFFICE

Attorney Giles S. Piper and his law partner, R. J. Pendergast, were elected president and secretary respectively of the Oswego County Bar Association at yesterday's meeting in Oswego. N. B. Smith, Esq., of Pulaski is the treasurer of the association. It is thep urpose of the association to give a dinner to Justice Ross very soon.

She had always lived in Oswego and was a member of St. Paul's church, from where the funeral will beh eld tomorrow morning. Surviving besides her husband, Coroner Vowinkel, is the one son, John H. Vowinkel.

FARMERS FAIL TO PACK THEIR FRIUT PROPERLY

"The general report of the fruit market as it exists in the large cities today, shows a condition that perhaps is not unusual, except that the excessively hot weather preceded by moisture has put fruit into our large centres, not in the best of condition. With the cooler weather now, this condition will be changed," writes F. R. Stevens, agriculturist, Lehigh Valley Railroad.

"Since so much has been said, especially in New York State on the subject of grading and packing of fruits, the adverse report on the present condition of the pack, while not at all unusual for past packing, is almost inexcusable in the face of the general sentiment and the laws which we have on grading and packing. It decreases most decidedly the returns which the farmer received for his product. For instance, one car of Bartlett pears contained A and B. grade and culls. The shipper should have received under proper packing $4 a barrel for the best. Under the condition, he received $3.12 1-2. Similar conditions exist as to peaches and plums. There seems to be a general trait among buyers of not only fruit but any commodity to make their bid according to the poorer quality rather than the better. Two baskets of poor peaches will hurt the sale of a carload, even if every other basket is A No. 1 in quality and pack.

"The grading and packing of our fruit is today doing more to hold down the prices than any other one factor. This is the condition. The cause of it is that, as a rule, our producers do not have enough fruit to make shipments in any one grade. Therefore, the whole product of an orchard usually goes in one car, thus giving a mixed shipment for sale. There is only one solution of this problem and that is central packing houses where the produce of a locality can be brought together for packing and grading. We have preached this for so long that it seems almost trite to repeat it, but in three or four places it is being tried with great success. With the central packing houses will come pre-cooling devices to help hold the fruit in shape until it reaches the market. "I think this year this fact is being impressed upon our shippers as never before and I hope that in the coming winter the farmers' co-operations will begin to plan for the establishment of those shipping stations so that one year from now we will not be in the same position that we are today."

OUR WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENCE

News Mostly of a Political Nature From the Nation's Seat of Government for Times' Readers.

Washington.—(Special Correspondence.)—Keener than their product, is the competition which our razor manufacturers have to meet in the struggle with foreigners for a fair share of the American market. Owing to foreign control of razor factories in the country and their success is mainly due to the fact that they manufacture principally patented articles, safety razors and specialties. There is no reason why, with adequate protection, we should not have a large razor industry, and encourage foreigners, who now compete with us, to come to America as manufacturers and employers of American labor at American wages, and with no increase in the price of razors.

Another important consideration is that a large proportion of foreign-made razors are made by the workmen in their homes, thus reducing very largely the overhead charges.

The American razor is made of high grade crucible steel. The cheaper grade German razor with which our market is flooded, is made of Bessemer steel. It makes a good appearance, but is inferior, and the purchase of it spoils the sale of a good razor of domestic manufacture.

The razor industry in this country received some encouragement in the Republican tariff law of 1897, but even under the slightly higher duty rates of the Republican law of 1909, which gave an average advalorem duty of something over 70 per cent., the importations of razors steadily increased. During the fiscal year 1910, 1,689,347 were imported, and in 1912, 2,352,472 came in, the average importation exceeding the home production two to one. Notwithstanding the fact that this information was put squarely before him, and in spite of his repeated assertion that he stood for a "competitory tariff," Mr. Underwood made indefensible reduction in the dutieso n razors.

The effect was immediate: The last quarter under the Republican tariff law showed importations to the number of 567,863. The following quarter, under Democratic law, imports jumped to 1,186,224; the next quarter, 819,192; the next, which was the last quarter of the fiscal year 1914, 886,322 came in. During the first quarter of the fiscal year 1915, war broke out. Germany was blocked, and the imports of razors dropped to 532,896, of which 62 per cent. came in in July, war being declared July 31. In 1914 foreign competition became so bad that one of the largest domestic manufacturers had to go into the business of jobbing German razors and his pay roll was 72, below a normal of 200 men. The war has given him a breathing spell, but he looks with anxiety on the termination of hostilities and the likelihood of still being under a Democratic tariff law, as do manufacturers in every line of industry in the United States.

THE JEWS ON POLAND; THE RUSSIAN MEASURES

The last issue of the "Hebrew Standard" contains a digest of the desires of the Jews in their demands upon Poland, as follows:

The cable bears the interesting information that the liberal and democratic parties among the ruling class of Russia have agreed on a number of needed and thoroughgoing reforms for the government of the inhabitants of that country. Eight of these, which are regarded as reforms to be instituted during the present war, that is, immediately, include one prescribing full civic rights for the Jews and the total repeal of the present laws placing disabilities on their residence in Russia proper.

We need not enlarge on the purpose of the foregoing demand. It will, if accomplished, remove the entire Jewish question from the horizon of Russian political, social and religious life. The other pressing reforms, too, are of importance. First, Poland is to be given complete autonomy with a relation to the Russian Empire somewhat like that which Hungary bears to Austria. We have already discussed the bearings of this on the Jews. Amnesty, adequate and all embracing, besides, is to be extended to all political prisoners. Trades unions are to be recognized and the disabilities to which the Russian workman is subjected removed. The other projected innovations do not specifically strike at the root of the Russo-Jewish evil.

We are glad to note, moreover, that the program of these parties embraces other schemes of reform which, while not regarded as immediately necessary, are nevertheless to be ultimately secured. Of thise lass there are twelve.

This is a comprehensive program which is sounding almost too good to be true. For, in the case of Russia, no one has ever thought that a substantial part of the population would come to agitate in favor of such changes in the structure of government. That these changes may be speedily and permanently all brought about is the wish of every lover of humanity, let alone all those who know the situation of the Russian Jew.

COURT CALENDAR WAS NOT READ IN COURT

Even though Judge Ross was late by twenty minutes in calling the October Trial Term of Supreme Court yesterday, he had all of the preliminaries out of the way in less than an hour on account of the fact that he dispensed with the usual calling of the calendar. This has never been done before in Oswego county. Judge Ross in explaining the move said there was no necessity for going through the long list of ninety-six cases and have the lawyers come together on their various cases and arrange to put them on the day calendar as they desired.

The only cases Judge Ross called were those on the special day calendar. Of these the case of the People vs. Charles E. Briggs went over the term. Other cases announced by the attorneys as over were Frank Gilhooley vs. H. P. Burgard and F. L. Ingersoll vs. Thomas Lanning et al.

On the call of the jurors, D. W. Smith, Central Square; George Kissing and Welcome Alden, Mexico; M. J. Upson, Sandy Creek, and Joseph Brunette, Williamstown, were excused as trial jurors and John Bernard, Constantia, and Ralph Stark, Hannibal, as grand jurors.

The grand jury immediately organized by electing Earl S. Brown, of this city, foreman and started their work as soon as they had been charged by the court. Judge Ross delivered an excellent address to the jury, telling of the importance of their work and emphasizing the necessity of living up to their oaths to weigh every case on its merits and not to permit malice to enter into their decisions. Judge Ross advised them to work the same hours that the court worked and let it be known that he would remain here as long as there was any business to transact.

The first case to go to trial was that of Arthur I. Melvin vs. Grover A. Woodward, of Phoenix, an action to replevin a moving picture show. Ira Betts and Udelle Bartlett appear for the plaintiff and O. M. Reilly for the defendant.

Attorney Welch of Syracuse, appearing for the Haeberle Brewing Co., made a motion to compel the County Treasurer to transfer an excise license from Paul Kowalski's place, 201 West Broadway, to a place at 20 First st., operated by Jacob Schilling. The State Excise Department objected, through Attorney Chase, of Massena, on the ground that the consent of all of the assignees had not been obtained, the First National Bank, of this city, the Haberle Company both being assignees.

SYNOPSIS

Old Cyrus Martin, the head of the American soap trust, makes a bet of $30,000 with a friend, John Clark, a rival soapmaker, that his (Martin's) son Rodney would be making more money at the end of a year than Clark's son Ellery.

Martin takes his pretty secretary, Mary Grayson, into his confidence and enlists her co-operation. Rodney has been a spendthrift, and the father wants to make him reform and go to work.

Mary meets Rodney, and the son proposes marriage to her. Rodney tells his father about his proposal, and the old man pretends great anger. He tells Mary he will disinherit Rodney.

Rodney defies his father, and Mary is deeply touched at the lad's genuine affection for her. Mary makes a financial bargain with Martin to encourage the son to go to work.

Ambrose Peale, press agent, meets Rodney and agrees to go into business with the lad on a salary basis. Rodney has resolved to go into the soap industry and buck the trust.

Rodney, Peale and Mary go into the soap trade together. Rodney then endeavors to borrow $10,000 as capital for his newly formed company.

The offices of the "13 Soap company" are opened, and they advertise it as "the most expensive soap in the world." Peale talks advertising continually.

The 13 Soap company finds its expenses very heavy, and financial rocks loom ahead. Their chief business seems to have been to spend money for advertising under Peale's directions.

An alleged countess, who has appeared on the scene, desires to purchase the French rights for the sale of "13 Soap" and produces a draft for $20,000, which she desires to have cashed.

The "countess" is shown to be an impostor and despair settles over the 13 Soap company. The firm introduces her, however, to Ellery Clark. Father Martin visits the offices.

CHAPTER XIX—Continued

"How much would you pay for the trademark?" put in Mary.

"I should have to call up our Chicago office," said Bronson. "But I think I can safely say we should be prepared to offer you at least $250,090."

Peale gasped, but controlled himself in time to say "Indeed!" in a very genteel tone of voice.

"Can I have an option at that figure?" pursued Bronson.

"No," said Mary.

"Yes," said Peale.

"No," said Mary again, loudly and resolutely.

"No," said Rodney, following her lead.

"Hadn't we better discuss the matter a little more fully first among ourselves?" she said sweetly.

"Yes," said Mr. Bronson tactfully. "Perhaps I could wait somewhere for a few minutes."

"Yes, do please—in the next room," suggested Mary.

Mr. Bronson stepped to the door.

The door had no sooner closed on Mr. Bronson than the board of directors of the 13 Soap company went into immediate special session.

"Why not give him an option at a quarter of a million?" asked Rodney.

"Because maybe we can get more money than that out of your father," Mary said quietly.

Rodney kissed her. Peale coughed.

Mary said nothing more, for at that moment she spied Johnson coming up, and the sight of him helped give her an idea.

"Johnson, oh, Johnson, you know I've always liked you," she began, attracting his attention vehemently. "Will you do me a favor?"

"Why, yes, Miss"—

"When Mr. Martin comes back don't tell him that Rodney and Mr. Peale are here or Bronson either. Say I'm alone."

"Yes, miss, but Mr. Martin has just driven up in his car. He'll be here directly."

"Hurry up, then. Tell him I'm here, waiting for him," said Mary.

Johnson went out obediently.

"I've got a great idea," said Mary. "You two boys go into that room and stay there. Now listen. Keep Bronson there. When I ring this buzzer twice you call me on this phone—there's a switch in there—and never mind what I say. Now hurry. I'm going to try to make a deal with your father."

They went out reluctantly. Mr. Martin came in.

"Hello, Miss Grayson," he said, seeing her; "this is another pleasant surprise. Where is Rodney?"

"That doesn't matter. I'm here," said Mary demurely.

"Where's that—that Mr."— he began.

"Mr. Peale?" said Mary. "Oh, Mr. Peale's gone back to the office, but he told me to tell you that he'd got that contract"—

"Oh, he did, did he?" said Martin. "Great, great! He's a smart boy."

"We are all smart," said Mary. "It's a smart firm. We've just got a letter from Dockery's for 10,000 cakes of 13 soap, and this time you didn't send the telegram."

"Dockery's, eh? Well, well! Now I'll be frank," he said. "I want Rodney to come in with me—and you've got to help. You started this scheme. Now finish it up."

"What's changed you all of a sudden?" asked Mary.

"Well, Dockery's, for one thing," said the old gentleman. "That shows sensational advertising does pay. Those boys are right. I've been too conservative, but anyhow I've got the whip hand. Rodney can't get his soap for Dockery's except from me, and if I'm going to furnish 8 cent soap that he sells wholesale for 60 cents, I'm going to be in on the profits. Any young man who can do that is just bound to have me for a partner, whether he wants me or not. What do you say, Miss Grayson?"

"I'll do all I can for Rodney," said Mary, looking down.

"Good. Now, what's your proposition?" he inquired, sitting down.

"Five hundred thousand dollars cash," said Mary quietly.

"What!" yelled Mr. Martin.

"That isn't all. We are to get 51 per cent of the stock, you put up a factory and give Rodney $50,000 a year, Peale $30,000 and me $20,000."

Mr. Martin whistled.

"As my son once observed, what lovely weather we're having," he said.

"Hurrah, Mary! It's all right now!"

Mary pushed the buzzer twice. Almost instantly the telephone rang.

"Shall I answer it?" said Mary politely.

"Go ahead—say I'm out," Martin grunted.

"Oh, hello," said Mary in the telephone, adding in an aside to Mr. Martin, "It's for me. Hello, Rodney—you've seen Bronson?"

"Bronson?" repeated Mr. Martin.

"He did?" said Mary in the telephone; "why, that's a splendid offer. I hardly dared think Brown & James would be so generous."

"I'll accept your proposition, Miss Grayson," interrupted Mr. Martin hastily.

"Wait," said Mary. "Have you closed with Bronson yet?" she went on. "Oh, you haven't?"

"Good," grunted Mr. Martin.

"No," Mary went on, "I think you'd better come right up from the office and see me before you sign anything."

"Here, let me talk to him," Mr. Martin said, and reached for the phone.

"Oh, hello, hello," called Mary quickly and jiggled the bell. "Oh, dear, we've been cut off."

"I'm grateful to you," said Mr. Martin.

"Shall we sign a memorandum now?" asked Mary a little nervously.

"Sure—sure—just the rough details," he agreed.

"Sure, never put off till tomorrow what you can sign today," said Mary.

Mr. Martin began to write:

"Fifty-one per cent—Rodney—fifty thousand— And what's that young man's name again—Spiel?"

"Peale," said Mary.

"That certainly is one dickens of a name—$30,000—Grayson $20,000—there. You sign here."

"No, you sign first," said Mary. He obeyed.

"Now I'll sign for Rodney," said Mary, and did so gleefully.

"That's great," said Mr. Martin.

"You don't know how great it is," assented Mary, and started for the door. "Now I've a big surprise for you. Rodney's not at the office; he's in there."

"What do you mean?"

"Only that I thought I'd handle you less sentimentally than he would. You see, once before I spoiled Rodney's plan. This time I thought I ought to fix it up for him. Rodney, Ambrose," she called, throwing the door open.

Rodney and Peale came in.

"Rodney, it's all settled," Mary began. "Your father has come in with us. I've the contract for all the soap you want."

"Then I don't care what the arrangement is," cried Rodney, "now that we can make good. Twenty per cent of profits and any salary."

"Twenty per cent! Why, she bunkoed me out of 51 per cent and half a million down!" growled his father.

"Half a million!" gasped Peale.

"You did?" asked Rodney. "Mary, you are a wonder."

Mary turned to Mr. Martin.

"And by the terms of my contract with you you now owe me 10 per cent of what Rodney has made—$50,000."

"What contract?" asked Rodney of Mary.

Mr. Martin growled and snorted.

"So that's why you held me up, eh?" he sputtered. "Just to get your 10 per cent. Say, young lady, I've got a lot of other money that you are overlooking."

"Father, what do you mean?" Rodney queried.

"I'll tell you what I mean," said his father. "She got engaged to you to make you go to work. She only left me to keep you on the job because I promised her 10 per cent of what you earned. All the time that she's been pretending she would marry you she's been making use of you."

"You owe me $50,000. Can I have the check, please?" said Mary quietly.

"Yes," said the soap king, "if you'll quit now—get out of here for good. I'm disappointed."

"What's the difference?" asked Mary. "If I'd really loved him you'd have objected to his marrying only a typewriter."

"Objected! If you'd been on the level I'd have been proud to have you for my daughter," said the father, handing his check to Rodney.

"Hurrah, Mary! It's all right now!" cried Rodney.

"What is this—a joke?" said Martin.

"Certainly it is. You put up a joke on Mary and me, and I thought we'd put up one for you. Mary has told me about that contract already."

"You mean you're going to marry her?" asked his father.

"Certainly not," said Rodney.

"Why aren't you going to marry her?" demanded Martin.

"Because we are married already—married yesterday," said Rodney proudly. "And we thought before we told you of our marriage we'd get her percentage for a wedding present."

Mr. Martin whistled.

"By George, you boys were right! I am an old fool. Anyhow I'll win that bet from old John Clark."

"Now for Mr. Bronson," said Mary.

"You boys know Bronson?" asked Mr. Martin.

"Oh, yes!" said Mary. "We had a long talk with him right in this room about a proposition from Brown & James."

Mr. Bronson, who had come in, turned to Rodney.

"But I thought I was dealing with you"—

"No, sir; with me. Now, what's your proposition?" demanded the soap king.

"A quarter of a million cash just for the trademark," said Bronson.

"A quarter of a million?" said Martin scornfully to the quailing Bronson. "Why, you ought to be ashamed of yourself to try to trim these poor boys like that."

The excitement of putting through an important deal, the winning of the bet from John Clark, the reclamation of his boy Rodney and finally Rodney's marriage with Mary Grayson, something he had always wanted, exhilarated him. He squared away like Ambrose Peale, for all the world, and let Bronson have a full blast.

"You know that 13 Soap is worth half a million in Chicago alone!" he shouted. "And you try to take advantage of these kids' ignorance. Why, it's outrageous, but you can't trim me. No, sir—we wouldn't take a million. Do you know that the Bingo cracker trademark is valued at six million, the Honey Bee soap at ten million and our trademark is better than theirs? We're going to advertise all over the world— That's what advertising means—the power of suggestion—the psychology of print. All you have to do is to say a thing often enough and hard enough and 97 per cent of the public'll fall."

"Well, father," laughed Mary, hearing this torrent of advertising talk from these erstwhile conservative lips. "You've got religion."

Mr. Martin took out a large silk handkerchief and blew his nose quite loudly.

"I'll settle $100,900 on the first grandchild," he said, "just for luck."

"Well, well," said Ambrose Peale, with a suspicious twinkle in his eye. "Believe me, it pays to advertise."

THE END.

For Young Folks

Little Boy Who Won a Prize in a Baby Parade.

© by American Press Association.

Clifford A. Halstead is the name of the little boy herewith pictured. Clifford lives in New Jersey, and he recently won a prize at the annual baby parade held at Asbury Park. He represents Cupid, the god of love, and his costume, or lack of it, was considered the best in the fifth division of the famous baby carnival. Twenty-five years ago Asbury Park held its first baby parade, and as this was the quarter century anniversary a special effort was made to eclipse all that had preceded it. Everybody who was present said that the affair was the best that they had ever seen. There were hundreds of babies in line, and each was out for the prize. As said before, Clifford won in his division, but it is doubtful if he appreciated the compliment. He doesn't appear exactly at his ease. His mother, however, was very proud.

Importance of Little Things.

A friend once called upon Michelangelo while he was finishing a statue. Some time afterward he called again. The sculptor was still at the same work. His friend, looking at the figure, exclaimed, "You have been idle since I saw you last!"

"By no means," answered Angelo. "I have retouched the statue here and polished it there. I have softened this feature and brought out this muscle. I have given more expression to the lip and more energy to the limb."

"But," said his friend, "these are all trifles."

"It may be so," replied Angelo, "but remember that trifles make perfection and perfection is no trifle."

Conundrums.

Why is a steam engine at a fire an anomaly? Because it works and plays at the same time.

What word of five letters is it, of which two being removed, only one will remain? St-one.

Why is a fly taller than most men? Because he stands over six feet without shoes or stockings.

Why should a false friend never leave his house? Because you might look in and "find him out."

When is a man hospitable and a cheat at the same time? When he takes you in.

Why is a divinity student like a merchant? Because he studies the prophets (profits).

Boston.

The following amusing game is called "Boston." Any number of persons may play this game. Every one must sit in a ring and then receive a number. One player is put in the middle of the circle and blindfolded; then she calls any two numbers, according to the numbers in the game. The two persons whose numbers were called should change seats before the one who is blindfolded can get to the seats. If the one in the center calls "Boston," every one should change their seats, and the one in the center should try to get a seat.

Persimmons.

Aquila Porcupine one day
Met Peter Possum by the way;
The latter seemed in haste, for he
Was going toward the 'simmon tree.

"Oh, have you heard," said Peter P.,
"What luscious fruit grows on yon tree?
The frost we had on yester night
Will make the 'simmons taste just right.

"To fill my basket I have come
To feed the little chaps at home,
And I must hurry, for I'm late."
And so the two improved their gait.

When Peter scampered up the tree
And shook the 'simmons—one, two, three—
Aquila stayed upon the ground
And ate the best that could be found.

At last, when Peter did descend,
He scarcely recognized his friend,
For on the end of every spine
Was stuck a 'simmon, large and fine.

To get them all he'd vainly tried,
Then rolled himself on every side,
Till scarce a plum could Peter see
For his expectant family.

LONGFELLOW'S HOME.

Craigie House Is to Be Preserved For Use of the Public.

Longfellow's home, Craigie House, in Cambridge, is to be preserved for the public. Several months ago, says the Boston Transcript, it was learned from the filing of the will of Mrs. Richard Henry Dana (Edith Longfellow Dana), daughter of the poet, the surviving heirs agreed to intrust the house to three trustees, together with a sum of money for upkeep, for a triple purpose: (1) "As a specimen of the best colonial architecture of the eighteenth century;" (2) "As a historical monument of the occupation of the house by George Washington during the siege of Boston in the Revolutionary war;" (3) "As a memorial to Henry Wordsworth Longfellow."

Longfellow heirs may live in the house by paying rent. When the time comes that no surviving heir wishes to do that the mansion is to be managed solely as a memorial "for the benefit of the public." Thus, definitely and without further action, Craigie House is placed forever among the state's public monuments to art and patriotism and to celebrate equally one who pleaded for justice, humanity and, particularly, the beautiful.

War and Trade.

Pessimists predict that when the war is over the great increase in the foreign trade of the United States will not continue, but not so does history teach. A lap lost in the race of national progress is lost forever. When Spain fell back after the Armada and the Netherlands forged ahead the Netherlands stayed, and when Cromwell crippled the Dutch 100 years later and England forged ahead England stayed ahead. If the United States does not keep the vantage ground gained during this war it will be a new phenomenon in history.—World's Work.

Street Car Seat Reform.

The new subway cars in New York city are equipped with seats specially designed to sustain the body in a comfortable and healthful sitting posture. The seat has the additional advantage, for feminine users, that "the head can be held upright in moderate sized hats and is not thrust forward when one leans back in the seat." The seats have the approval of the American Posture league, an organization formed to promote the use of hygienic seating appliances in schools, vehicles, etc.

Alaskan Forest Divided.

The area of the Chugach national forest, Alaska, which is to be crossed by the railroad that the government is building from Seward to Fairbanks, is reduced nearly one-half by a proclamation signed by President Wilson returning approximately 5,802,000 acres to the public domain. This action follows classification of the land by the forest service, showing that the areas involved are not of high enough timber value to warrant government protection.

Demand For Better Carton.

The Scientific American calls for the invention of a carton for containing foods and other merchandise, saying that any one who will devise a carton "better structurally, more effectually sealed against moisture or other atmospheric conditions, of a distinctive shape or as equally satisfactory in important respects and cheaper than the cartons now used, will find a demand almost beyond imagination."

Bullets In Their Flight.

A writer in Popular Mechanics tells of seeing in their flight bullets traveling at the rate of 2,700 feet per second. A dark background was necessary and a sun at right angles to the course. The flying missiles made a silvery flash as vivid as if of lightning.

Cloak Union Protocol Ended.

The protocol between the Cloakmakers' union and the Cloak Manufacturers' Protective association of New York city has been abrogated. The protocol was drawn up in September, 1910, at the close of a bitter seven weeks' strike in which more than 53,000 garment workers were involved. It was the agreement that was commended by the federal department of labor for its provisions submitting all differences to arbitration. Conditions are now in the same state as before the signing of the famous "peace treaty."

Compromise.

"Might doesn't make right."

"No, but it most always makes good."

Easy & Practical Home Dress Making Lessons

Prepared Especially For This Newspaper by Pictorial Review

JUMPER FROCK FOR THE SCHOOL GIRL.

6404

Jumper frock for juniors, made of blue and white linen. The skirt is pleated and finished with a plain hem.

Dresses combining two materials are pretty for girls and an economy when one considers that two small remnants from the bargain counter will make up into charming models. Plain blue and white linen are used together for this frock, and the dress can be worn much longer than the underblouse. For the jumper and skirt 2¾ yards of blue linen are required and for the waist 1⅝ yard of 37-inch linen or lawn.

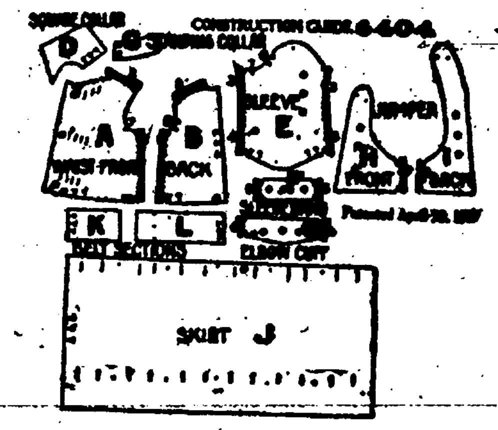
The waist has a box-pleat in front, and this is first formed by turning under right front edge at notches and taking up a tuck on line of slot perforations nearest the front edge. Stitch, catching front edge in with tuck. Form tucks on either side of pleat by creasing on lines of slot perforations; then stitch.

Turn under front edge of left front 1⅝ inch for hem. Center-front indicated by large "O" perforations in right front. Close under-arm and shoulder seams as notched. Lap right front on left, center-fronts even; stitch lower edges together. Gather lower edge of waist between double "TT" perforations.

If waist is made with slightly open neck and square collar face collar and sew to neck edge, center-backs even.

Next, gather lower edge of sleeve between double "TT" perforations and sew sleeveband to gathered edge; then close seam. Sew into armhole with as little fulness as possible.

Now close under-arm seam of jumper as notched. Lap the upper rounded end of front on the back, matching small "o" perforations, and close with buttons and buttonholes. Arrange on waist, under-arm seams even, and bring the front and back edges of jumper to large "O" perforations at lower edge of waist front and back; stitch lower edges together.



Close back seam of skirt. Turn hem at lower edge on double "oo" perforations. Form box-pleats, creasing on lines of slot perforations; bring folded edges near center-front and center-back to the center, and bring the remaining folded edges to corresponding lines of small "o" perforations and press. Sew to lower edges of waist and jumper, center-fronts and center-backs even, large "O" perforation in skirt at under-arm seam.

Lap the front section of belt on the back to small "o" perforations and fasten with buttons and buttonholes. Adjust to position as illustrated on reverse side of envelope, bringing the single small "o" perforation at upper edge of belt to corresponding perforation in jumper.

Add a string tie to the neck finish if desired.

Importance of Rest for Baby

The importance of rest for a baby is so obvious that it would seem superfluous to deal with it at all, and yet experience among the babies of well to do parents proves that in a very great number of cases progress is retarded and perfect health marred simply for want of rest.

A baby who does not sleep well is really an anomaly, and yet a remarkable number of cases come under one's notice where this is the case. It is hard very often to trace this state of things to its cause.

Many children undoubtedly inherit nervous tendencies in these days; nervous mothers have often nervous babies and as their influence is the potent one in the early days as well, it is usually in an environment calculated to further enhance nervousness in which the mite finds itself.

Apart from natural tendencies, too, present day life, in towns anyway, is distinctly exciting to a baby. The quick movement of motor traffic outdoors, the brilliancy of electric light indoors—all mark a very different state of things to the old days of leisurely movement and candles. The sudden switching on and off of a light at night is in itself disturbing or stimulating to a baby, and as it has to become accustomed to such things it is only common sense to reduce other reasons of excitement to the minimum.

For this reason, as a rule, a baby should not be played with often, should not have things rattled at it or dangled before its eyes. The more near to a vegetable existence the early days are passed in, speaking generally, the better for the child.

Then the room in which the baby sleeps must be well ventilated, but secure from drafts. And here may be mentioned the advantage of placing the baby's cot away from the nurse's or mother's bed. "Alongside" has become almost a universal rule, but the result is that the child is breathing air more or less contaminated by the grown up person, more especially as the necessity of safeguarding the child from drafts means that a free current of air is, and rightly, absent. In winter time, when the wicked microbe of the common cold is abroad in the land, the arrangement will have the further benefit of safeguarding the small person from infection to a remarkable degree. It is perilously easy to lean over to a cot alongside at every whimper or movement, to continue night feeding and otherwise disturb the long hours of rest which are so beneficial—nay, indispensable—to the progress and good condition of the child: but it is quite another thing when it necessitates getting up, and the child is more likely to have a chance of long, unbroken hours of rest without being deliberately taught to wake at intervals. Of course, if a baby is ill or anything is the matter it is another thing.

No baby should be rocked or "patted" to sleep. The baby should be laid down warm and dry, with every care to each detail of its comfort, well fed and shaded from any light, even from the first day, and so accustomed to go to sleep unheeded and unrocked. Sometimes it will be awakened suddenly—possibly by some noise or exterior influence, possibly for a cause which cannot be determined; do not immediately take the child up, even if it is crying—although it is the ordinary instinct to do so—but simply turn it over in its cot, soothing it with soft words as you do so and giving it a teaspoonful or so of cold water if it appears hungry; this simple process, carried on in the dark or in the same subdued light which obtained before, will in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred induce the little one to go straight off to sleep again.

Of course a baby should be laid to sleep on its side in alternate positions each night, and care should be taken that the little ear is laid flat and not crumpled.

During the first two months of life a healthy, well managed baby will sleep almost all the time, waking only at the regular feeding times when probably a cry will give notice of the fact. Once in the twenty-four hours it should be allowed a lusty fit of crying, so that the lungs may be well expanded, and good exercise given generally. The time when sleep should be least encouraged is in the late hours of the day, as by that means a sounder and longer sleep is induced at night.

At six months old two-thirds of the day of twenty-four hours should be spent in sleep, which means that sixteen hours is the proper time. This should be continued until the first birthday, when a couple of hours less suffices, ten hours being devoted to the waking time. This fourteen hours sleep is needed by children until they are five years old, after which about two hours may be knocked off (which means practically in many cases dropping the sleep by day and having only the long night of twelve hours), and after the seventh birthday still another hour may be stolen from night for day.

YOUNG FOLKS' CORNER

Robin Redbreast Saved.

There is a happy robin redbreast singing somewhere around the pleasant suburbs of Springfield, Mass., that owes its life to those who could not see a robin in trouble or in danger of death through an accident that had befallen it. While it was building its nest in the top of a tall maple forty feet from the ground one of its legs got entangled in some twine it had picked up. A resident near by who had been watching the busy bird saw its predicament and at once telephoned to Agent Dexter A. Atkins of the Massachusetts S. P. C. A. Agent Atkins communicated with Chief Daggett of the fire department, who dispatched the aerial ladder truck to the scene, and then Fireman Robert D. Ruhe, in the presence of scores of children who had scurried thither from all points to see the little songster released, ascended the tall ladder, snapped off the twig that held the bird and brought it to the ground. The cord that held the tiny captive was cut, and it flew away to freedom, to the joy of everybody.

The Eagle's Nest.

There was once a young lad named Rudy, who lived in Switzerland, where the mountains are very high. When he was a little boy he had been taught by a cat how to climb, so that he could always climb very high, and when he grew up he became a chamois hunter. One day he fell in love with Babette, the miller's daughter, and they wanted to get married. But the miller told Rudy he must first bring him the young eagle whose nest was on the top of a high, steep rock.

Rudy tied five long ladders together and at last captured the eagle; then, of course, the miller gave his consent, and Rudy and the miller's daughter were married. — Andersen's "Fairy Tales."

"Going to Jerusalem."

A very interesting game to be played is "going to Jerusalem." Arrange a row of chairs down the center of the room, one chair facing one side of the room, the next facing in the opposite direction, and so on to the end of the line, there being one less chair than there are persons to play. A brisk march should then be played on the piano, while all the players march around the whole row of chairs.

Suddenly the music stops, and all must try to sit. One, of course, is left standing, and that one is then out of the game. One chair is therefore removed, and the game goes on until only two persons are left. The one who wins the last chair wins the game.

Numerical Enigma.

I am a word of seventeen letters. My 4 5 6 7 8 9 is a man's Christian name who is often mentioned in the Old Testament; my 13 14 17 11 is a part of the body; my 6 5 15 16 2 11 3 is some one of great use to a nation; my 17 9 2 15 is part of a ship; my 7 5 3 6 11 is an animal on whose head you will generally find my 10 11 2 13 17; my 15 14 10 16 is a title of distinction; my 1 9 2 15 5 3 is some one who, when he is on my 6 11 9, is glad to see my 15 9 13 16; my 15 11 9 is a river in England, as also is my 12 9 10 11; my whole is the name of a celebrated painter.

Timing a Train.

Have you ever tried to tell how fast the train on which you were riding was traveling? The next time you are on a train try this: Watch in hand, count the clicks of the rails for twenty-one seconds, divide by two and you have the number of miles per hour at which the train is moving. Another method is to count the number of rail joints of a parallel track for the same length of time. The reason for dividing by two in the former case and not in the latter is the fact that the rails are staggered, thus making the two rails of each track click separately so that the number counted is twice the number actually traversed.—American Boy.

"Hill Dill."

The game of "hill dill" is often played between the curbings of a street. These curbings serve as boundaries. One player is chosen to be "it" and stands in the center. The other players stand in two parties beyond the boundary lines, one party on each side.

The center player calls: "Hill dill! Come over the hill!" The other players then exchange goals, and as they run across the open space the one in the center tries to tag them. Any one who is tagged assists in tagging the others.

Sausages.

A train was rushing through some swamps in which thousands of cattails were bobbing their brown heads in the breeze.

Hugh was from the city and had never before seen a cattail. He watched them curiously through the car window a moment, then turned to his mother excitedly.

"Why," he cried, "I didn't know sausages grew that way!"—Continent.

Zoological Tommy.

When Tommy's good, I often hear
His mamma call him little deer,
But when he has a cold, of course,
He sometimes is a little horse!
And oftentimes, quite sure I am,
He is a precious little lamb.
While then, again without excuse,
He proves to be a silly goose.
Alas! it grieves me this to tell,
But I have sometimes seen quite well
Greedy Tom, with mouthful big,
Turn into a little pig!

TODAY'S FASHION NOTE

A coat that is dressy in effect is always a delight to the girl of "awkward age," to whom service counts as nothing. In this Empire coat of plain brown broadcloth, however, there are combined style and service. The skirt is full and there are long sleeves with part-velvet cuffs, while bands of beaver finish the collar. Size eight requires 3 yards 44-inch material, with 3-4 yard fur banding.

About Sandwiches.

EACH season brings its new crop of varied sandwich fillings, and it is a good idea to jot down as one hears about them and then after a trial specialize on those that are found to be the best. Remember that in sandwich making the bread is better when it is a day old and that butter should be softened with a little whipped cream and warm enough to spread on the slices without breaking them. Brown bread, whole wheat and raisin loaves make a variety in themselves, while the rye is always good with the cheese mixtures.

Sandwich Filling.

Chicken Livers.—Take the chicken livers, gizzards and hearts that have been boiled tender with the chicken and chop them very fine, add one stalk of celery, one gherkin, a strip of green pepper, three olives and two tablespoonfuls of walnut meats, all chopped fine. Then moisten one package of cream cheese with cream, add pepper, salt, a tablespoonful of chutney sauce and work all smoothly together, using as much sweet cream as is needed to make a good spreading paste. Lay up the sandwiches on white bread.

For chicken salad all of the white meat may be used. Save the dark meat for sandwich material, with the giblets. Tuna, salmon or cold boiled codfish make good and quick salads, and the Macedoine vegetables that come bottled need only to be drained and have lettuce shredded and French dressing added to make delightful salad.

Hard and Soft Money; Their Uses in Farming

The Country Gentleman of recent issue contains an explanation of what is meant by the exchange of money between farmers and bankers, as follows:

In some of the newer fruit districts of the West growers find it hard to borrow money enough for the costly work of picking, packing and storing their product, because their fruit is in scattered lots too small to make sound banking security. The way out of this difficulty, it has been found, is to organize growers and bring the fruit together in large blocks for safe modern storage under trustworthy control. That gives the banker something tangible to hold as security, and money is available.

Much has been heard about reorganizing our banking facilities to accommodate the farmer, but it will be found that most rural credit plans that work are not reorganizations of banking but organizations of farmers and their products along lines that mass them together and create sound security for loans. Then the farmer is on a footing with the manufacturer and merchant.

Many a farmer believes in his heart that nothing but tightness of money is holding him back from expansion. But easy money does not mean profitable farming, by a long shot. In cotton, truck growing and in some other lines where the individual grower can get advances, under a loose system of credits, from the storekeeper, landlord or commission merchant, he is usually down at the heel, in debt to the lender most of the time, and pays high interest. For loans on such a basis mean heavy risk, costly supervision of borrowers, and a large margin of loss.

Only two kinds of people lend money to the farmer. One is the money-lender proper, with loose standards of security, lending easy money. Although his loans are seldom for any large amount of working capital, in the end they usually mean peonage for the borrower. The other is the real banker, demanding real security. His is hard money. He insists upon a sound state of assets before he makes an advance. Wishes and promises are not collateral with him. His lending at all means that the individual farmer must improve his business methods, and that the whole community must be keyed up to a level of enterprise, energy and character. The community doing business on easy money is standing still or going backward. The community that rises to the demands of hard money is going somewhere in a big, solid way.

LOAN BOOKS CLOSED AT 10 O'CLOCK TODAY

New York.—Wall Street was busy yesterday picking the names of million-dollar bidders for the $500,000,000 five-year Anglo-French bonds, subscription to which closes at 10 a. m. tomorrow and which has been oversubscribed, insiders said last evening.

Considerable surprise was expressed in banking circles over the application of Sir Ernest Cassel for participation in the loan, in view of the request of the British government that subscriptions for the bonds be confined to Americans.

It was explained that Sir Ernest intended to use funds held by him in the United States, but the possibility of re-sale of these bonds in Europe, however, left the application open to possible rejection by the underwriters, it was said. So far, subscriptions from Englishmen to the loan have been frowned upon by American bankers and the Anglo-French loan commissioners alike.

COLUMBIA'S RECORD; 17,500 ENROLLED

New York.—Official figures of registration at Columbia University, as given out yesterday by Secretary Frank D. Fackenthal, show a total of 14,575 students enrolled in the various local courses. With theaddition of 3,000 others, who are matriculating at the several suburban branches, Columbia this year is the mental pilot of more than 17,000 knowledge seekers, the largest number ever in attendance at a single institution of learning.

Last year the number of students enrolled in the local courses was 12,743, including the summer course, a gain this year of nearly 2,000.

TWENTIETH CENTURY MAKES NEW RECORD

New York.—During the six months just passed the Twentieth Century Limited of the New York Central Railroad, running between this city and Chicago, on a twenty hour schedule, attained a record of ninety-six per cent. for time, the road announced yesterday. The train made 184 trips each way between New York and Chicago, and at no time was it delayed for any appreciable time. The distance between the points covered every 24 hours by the train is 981 miles.

NEW YORKERS SWEAR OFF ON THEIR TAXES

New York.—The tentative valuation fixed by the Tax Board on personal property at $3,704,305,965 slumped at an alarming rate yesterday, when 65 individuals assesed for a total of $2,600,700 succeeded in having the amount reduced to $9,700.

Sixty out of sixty-five of the assessments were entirely sworn off. The largest of the examinations was the assessment of $500,000 against Paul J. Rainey, African explorer and lecturer. Mr. Rainey is at present in Africa, but an attorney for his father's estate had the assessment removed on the ground that Mr. Rainey maintained a residence in Mississippi.

"The first day is never quite a fair basis on which to guess about the future," was the explanation offered by Tax Commissioner Lawson Purdy. "I think the majority who appear on the first few days know they are probably not liable."

NEARLY 10,000 MEN STRIKE AT SCHENECTADY

Schenectady.—More than nine thousand union workers, composing about two-thirds of the employes of the General Electic Company, went on strike here yesterday for an eight-hour day. They have been working ten hours.

J. J. Keppler, vice-president of the International Association of Machinists, declares every union man in the plant will be out tonight. In that event a complete tie-up would result, as the non-union employes are few.

Mr. Keppler said the machinists, who took the initiative in the strike, were willing to consider a compromise. George E. Emmons, general manager of the plant, has always conferred freely with his employes.

SMITH HAD EASY TIME WITH "GUNBOAT"

New York.—"Gunboat" Smith made a show of "Al" Reich last night at the St. Nicholas in a ten round bout. Reich did so little that not one of the rounds could be given to him. The crowd which packed the arena hissed and "booed" after the first four rounds, when it became apparent that there would be nothing to do but sit through six more rounds of very tame ring work. After the sixth round many of the patrons walked out and the comments of those and the ones who remain must have made Reich's ears tingle. The one-time amateur champion looked good, but that was all there was to him.

FIRE ABOARD SHIP

A Danger Every Vessel Faces and Is Prepared to Meet.

QUICK ACTION BY THE CREW.

When an Alarm Is Sounded Every Man Springs to the Post and the Work to Which He Has Been Assigned—Working the Pumps.

In every ship carrying passengers the law requires that there shall be posted in a conspicuous place what is known as a station bill, giving the post of duty for every man in the deck, engineer and steward's departments in case of fire or abandoning ship. The law further requires that there shall be drills once each week at least and that during the stay of a ship in port these drills must be performed in the presence of a United States inspector of steamships. This is done to insure orderly and prompt action against any danger that may threaten. During these drills the pumps are tried out, and all the apparatus must work to the satisfaction of the inspector or the ship will not be permitted to sail until repairs have been made and everything works as it should.

Some ships are provided with tubes let into the deck and extending into the holds containing thermometers, which are examined every four hours. Any suspicious increase in temperature brings about immediate and thorough investigation. In this way the presence of fire can be discovered before it gains serious headway.

There is a rapid ringing of the ship's bell for about a minute. Instantly there is a change throughout the ship. Where but a moment before things were going on in the manner prescribed by the daily routine now all is activity. Men get to their fire stations with the alacrity induced by danger.

Sailors under the direction of the officers get out hose lines and appear with axes and lanterns. One group is ripping the battenings off the main hatch, where the fire has been detected. They drag the canvas away and open the booby hatch (a small opening in the large hatch cover), and immediately there pours out a column of dense black smoke.

Two or three men make an attempt to go down, but after two or three trials they are obliged to give it up. The captain gives the order to flood the hold and turn on the steam lines. Hose is pushed into the opening, which by now resembles a crater, for the air admitted by taking the cover off has fed the flames, and smoke and flame roll out in alarming quantities.

Suddenly the hose fills out and the swish of water under high pressure is heard. At almost the same time far below in the smoke filled hold the hissing and roaring of liberated steam reach the anxious ears on deck. The pipes connecting with the boilers have been put into use, and the fire is already beginning to feel the choke of the steam as it keeps the air away and settles over everything in a dense, damp cloud. While some pumps are throwing tons of water into the hold others are hard at work taking that same water out, for any great amount of water sloshing about would endanger the stability of the vessel.

Up in his cramped quarters Sparks is working with all his skill to pick up some station ashore and flash the wireless call for help. The spark crackles and crashes, then stops. Sparks snaps shut a switch, and then with deft fingers making an adjustment here and there listens in for the faint buzz that announces that his call has been heard. There comes just a series of faint buzzes, like the noise of a fly on a drowsy summer afternoon. At once the operator is galvanized into action. Again the spark crashes out the ship's position and need. Soon ships alter their courses and with all possible speed make for the threatened ship, to stand by in case of need.

Perhaps the crew are able to master the blaze. And, again—and this is a danger that always stares them in the face—perhaps they can't. What happens then is not always pleasant to think about. You will doubtless recall the burning of the Uranium liner Volturno and the lives that were lost then while other ships stood by helpless. That is what is likely to happen when the blaze gets beyond control. And this is only one of the dangers that every seagoing ship must face.

When a sailing vessel takes fire it is a case of man the hand pumps unless the ship should be a modern one and carry a donkey engine and a steam pump. These of wooden construction offer very little resistance to the fire once it gets headway, and it is generally a case of all off when a windjammer is discovered to be afire.—New York Sun.

When California Was Unknown.

In an old geography printed in 1815 appears the following: "California is a wild and almost unknown land. Throughout the year it is covered with dense fogs, as damp as unhealthful. In the interior are volcanoes and vast plains of shifting snows, which sometimes shoot columns to great heights. This would seem nearly incredible were it not for the well authenticated accounts of travelers."

OUR GREAT CANAL

How Vessels Cross From Ocean to Ocean at Panama.

GOING THROUGH THE LOCKS.

Electric Locomotives of Unique Design, With a Cog Rail System, Are Used For Towing Purposes—Safeguarding the Lock Walls and Gates.

Forty electric locomotives of unique design are used to tow shipping through the huge locks of the Panama canal. When the canal was being planned it was apparent that the various winch and capstan systems in vogue for towing ships through existing canals and locks would not do at all for Panama. After a thorough study of the entire problem of maneuvering ships through the locks at Panama it was evident that they could not safely proceed through the locks under their own power and that a substitute for the ship's power should embrace the following requirements:

Ability to place the ship in proper relation to the lock.

Capability for keeping the ship in its course.

Accelerating and retarding the ship without rupturing the lines.

The lines when once attached should be used without change for lockage in flight.

In passing through the canal from the Atlantic to the Pacific a vessel enters the approach channel in Limon bay, which extends to Gatun, a distance of about seven miles. At Gatun it enters a series of three locks in flight and is raised eighty-five feet to the level of Gatun lake. It then steams at full speed through the greater part of the channel in this lake for a distance of twenty-four miles to Bas Obispo, where it enters the Culebra cut. It passes through this cut, which has a length of nine miles, and reaches Pedro Miguel, where it enters a lock and is lowered thirty feet. Then it passes through Miraflores lake for a distance of one and one-half miles until it reaches Miraflores, where it is lowered fifty-five feet through two locks to the sea level, after which it passes out into the Pacific through an eight and one-half mile channel.

The main features of all the lock sites are identical, and the following brief description of the Gatun locks, with special reference to the arrangement of the towing tracks, ship channels, inclines and approaches, gives a clearer conception of the towing scheme in general.

There are two channels at Gatun, one for traffic in each direction. The channels are separated by a center wall, the total length of which is 6,330 feet. There are two systems of tracks, one for towing and the other for the return of the electric locomotives when returning idle. This, however, refers only to the outer walls. For the center wall there is only one return track in common for both the towing tracks. The towing tracks are naturally placed next to the channel side, and the system of towing utilizes normally not less than four locomotives running along the lock walls. Two of them are opposite each other in advance of the vessel, and two run opposite each other following the vessel. The number of locomotives is, however, increased when the tonnage of the ship demands it.

Cables extend from the forward locomotives and connect with the port and starboard sides, respectively, of the vessel near the bow, and other cables connect the rear locomotives with the port and starboard quarters of the vessel. The lengths of the various cables are adjusted by a special winding drum on the locomotive to place the vessel substantially in midchannel. When the leading locomotives are started they tow the vessel, while the trailing locomotives follow and keep the cables taut. By changing the lengths of the rear cables the vessel can be guided, and to stop the vessel all the locomotives are slowed down and stopped, thus bringing the rear locomotives in action to retard the ship. Therefore, the vessel is always under complete control quite independent of its own power, which is not used, and the danger of injury to the lock walls and gates is consequently very greatly lessened.

These towing tracks have a specially designed rack rail extending the entire length of the track between the rails. It is through this rack that the locomotive exerts the traction necessary for propelling large ships and climbing the steep inclines. When the locomotive reaches one of the inclines between the locks, the grade of which may be as much as 44 per cent, or when it is towing a ship, the cog rail system is utilized to enable the locomotive to climb the grade and in the other case to exert traction necessary for pulling the ships. The cog or rack rail is laid between the track rails and the locomotive is provided with a cog wheel or rack pinion to engage the rail.—Electric News.

Association to Defend Federal Law for Game

There may be those who respect the state game law more than that of the Federal government—the former allows ducks to be shot after September 16th and the latter not until October 1st—but, if the American Game Protective and Propagation Association has its way, the eager huntsman will have to curb his desire. The Association was largely instrumental in having the Federal law passed and it means to fight any attempts to nullify it to the last ditch, as evidenced by the following notice given out to the press:

"Evidence that the people of the country, irrespective of section or occupation, are deeply interested in the forthcoming test of the constitutionality of the Federal law for the protection of migratory birds, is furnished in the list of representative organizations of farmers ,stock breeders, forest conservationists, sportsmen and others that have joined with the American Game Protective Association in the brief that its counsel, William S. Haskell, will ask leave to file in defense of the law when the case is called before the United States Supreme Court on October 12th.

"The case comes up on appeal from the United States Courts of the Eastern district of Arkansas, in which, on May 13, 1914, the law was held unconstitutional.

"The breif above refered to constitutes impressive evidence of the widespread belief on the part of the people of the country that its continued economic welfare is closely related to the sustaining of the measure that provides absolute protection the year round for the large majority of birds that war on the insects which cause annual damage to the nation's crops, alone estimated by the United States Department of Agriculture at one billion, two hundred million dollars.

"Thirty-eight states are represented in the organizations signing the brief. Following is a recapitulation of the signers: State conservation commissions, 26; state agricultural experiment stations, 3; national agricultural organizations, 4; national live stock breeders' associations, 3; forestry organizations, 2; national conservation organizations, 3; sportsmen's organizations, local, state and national, 45; miscellaneous, 5.

"Of the above may be mentioned such representative organizations as the Farmers' National Congress, U. S. A., of Omaha; Farmers' National Congress of the United States, Kendalia, W. Va.; National Association of Gardeners, American Cranberry Growers' Association, National Association of Exhibitors of Live Stock; American Academy of Arborists, and many others equally prominent.

"The brief holds that the Federal government has a right to assume control of birds which by nature migrate from state to state because—

1. The interests of the people require such a law.
2. It is impossible for the several states to enforce their joint rights.
3. Migratory birds are of great assistance in destroying the insect foes of crops and forests.
4. Congress has the power to protect the agency which preserves the property of the United States from damage and destruction.
5. Migratory birds are the property of the nation.

"The law whose constitutionality is called into question was passed March 4, 1913, and became effective October 1st of the same year. Its passage was brought about in a large measure as the result of a campaign of the sportsmen of the country, conducted through their national organization, the American Game Protective Association."

LABOR MEN OPPOSE NEW CONSTITUTION

Albany, N. Y.—After a stormy meeting the executive council of the New York State Federation of Labor and representatives of railroad unions unanimously voted against the revised Constitution. About seven thousand labor men in the organization will be advised to vote against it. This includes the taxation and reapportionment articles to be submitted separately. The delegates to the conference voted to uphold the action already taken by the federation in favor of woman suffrage and the amendment for a twenty-seven million dollar bond issue to complete the barge canal. Action of the conference was taken after Seth Low talked for the Constitution for more than an hour.

About one hundred and fifty delegates were present from all parts of the state. The only man who seemed to favor the Constitution at all was Richard H. Curran, of Rochester, who was a delegate to the Constitutional Convention and voted for it on its final passage. Mr. Curran, who is a Republican, has been prominent in labor organizations in the state for more than 30 years.

TIME TO CALL HALT IN FRENZIED FINANCE

New York.—Over $700,000,000 worth of stocks were sold and bought on the New York Stock Exchange last week.

This is at the rate of $37,500,000,000—thirty-seven thousand million—a year.

During every five-hour session last week over $100,000,000 par value changed hands.

Every day was a "million-share day."

Advances of $20 to $30 per share in an hour or two and declines of almost as much were recorded.

So frenzied was the trading that the recording of sales fell hopelessly, and confusingly behind. The tape might be reporting that a stock was selling at 150 when in realty it had by that time fallen to 140.

FIRES As a Rule RESULT From Carelessness; What Will You Do to Reduce 75 P. C. of Them

Chief Waugh Urges the Co-operation of All Parents in Making of Saturday a Real Fire Prevention Day. He Says We All Need the Lesson of the Day.

Fires Mean Gay Times for Kiddies Who Can Get to Them---Except a Little One Who May Have Caused the Fire and Pays the Penalty With His Life.

Fully 75 per cent. of all the fires in this country result from carelessness. It is proven by the reports of fire departments and insurance companies that this great proportion of fires might be prevented through the exercise of care, forethought, those reasonable and simple preventive measures that would seem to commend themselves to every owner of property who did not want to see it destroyed by fire. It has been estimated that the annual fire waste in the United States and Canada, if spread out evenly, would cost each man, woman and child in the two countries $3.

During the past three or four years, an effort has been put forward to awaken people to the necessity for greater care in and around their homes and buildings, and some progress has been made. Saturday, October 9, is the day designated as Fire Prevention Day, and it is urged that people make special effort on this day to guard against fire during the coming months when it will be necessary to keep heavy fires in most buildings where people live and work. It is recommended that on that day all public buildings, factories and homes be thoroughly cleansed of rubbish accumulations; that all heating, lighting and fire extinguishing apparatus be examined, and if found defective promptly repaired; that fire drills be held in all schools, factories and other places where fire drills are established; that lectures be given in the public schools on Friday, October 8, by representatives of the fire department on the common hazards of fire, and where such officials are not available that teachers be urged to give such instructions as they have at their command on the subject.

FIRE CHIEF HARRY WAUGH.

This is a great public movement. In the year 1914, the fire loss in the United States and Canada was $235,591,350. If two-thirds of this loss is the result of carelessness, how would it be possible to add more rapidly to national and individual wealth than by preventing most of these fires?

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE RECOMMENDS PURCHASE OF ABANDONED LANDS

The Chamber of Commerce received the commendation of the Board of Aldermen at last night's meeting and a resolution was adopted conveying the board's appreciation of the interest taken in city affairs by the reorganized chamber. The board's action in this respect followed the reading by Clerk Scudder of two letters, in one of which the Chamber of Commerce sets forth the desire of the city planning division, viz: That the Common Council appropriate a sum not to exceed $500 for the erection of durable metalic street signs on suitable posts within the city of Fulton. This sub-committee after a thorough canvass of the situation believes that with this sum it would be possible to erect 53 posts on the west side of the river and 90 posts on the east side at all important crossings. Each of these posts to bear two sign boards of blue and white enamel on metal.

No action was taken on the letter, and a second letter accompanied by a long set of resolutions, received similar treatment. Embodied in the resolutions which had previously received the endorsement of the board that the city officials take immediate steps to secure the abandoned canal lands in this city. The Chamber is advised that applications have been made by individuals for the abandonment of these lands and that the abandonment of such lands to such individuals might defeat the purpose and intent of the law.

The Chamber believes the needs of the city make imperative the acquisition of the lands for city purposes—a public market and auditorium together with a parkway. The concluding paragraph of the resolution as read to the aldermen says:

"WHEREAS, It is apparent that the facilities of the flouring mill of W. G. Gage & Co., situate contigous to the first hereinafter described parcel will be enhanced by the maintenance of the railroad siding now permitted on said lands, and that such trackage convenience should be recognized."

A resolution was adopted to provide for a settlement of the claim of Henry Brennan against the city for injuries received on a sidewalk. Mr. Brennan dislocated his shoulder. Settlement can be made for $67 it was stated.

In connection with the recommendation of the Chamber of Commerce that an appropriation be made for metalic street signs, the statement made by a local painter that the wood signs which have stood service for seventeen years are still in good condition was discussed. The wooden signs can be bought much cheaper.

FARMERS' INSTITUTE INSTRUCTOR COMING; SUFFRAGE SPEAKER

The exclusive announcement made in yesterday's Times that the people of this city will on Saturday be privileged to hear a speaker of note occasions a lot of interest, due in great measure to the fame which precedes the woman who is coming—Mabel Dunlap Curry of Indiana.

Concerning Mrs. Dunlap's faculty of winning and holding the attention of an audience the press of the country makes many strong testimonials. Perhaps one of the finest things said of her cames from the pen of a Chautauqua official, who says:

"I heard Mrs. Mabel Dunlap Curry at Bay View in three lectures, and at that place where the people are used to hearing the best, they were greatly delighter with her. She has certainly got the stuff; and has also great grace of manner and personal charm. Lecturers put an extra feather on their hats when they receive one of the highest marks of approval—an invitation to return to Bay View the very next season. You'll know Mrs. Curry; she has an extra feather on her hat."

The Indianapolis News says of Mrs. Curry:

"Mrs. Mabel Dunlap Curry is widely recognized as a Chautauqua speaker. Her charming personality, her clear-cut and convincing logic, interspersed with a fund of rich and original humor, captivates her audiences. Mrs. Curry is a brilliant speaker, a woman of rare beauty and culture. It was a forceful talk, and she held the attention of the large audience from start to finish."

The open air meeting which was scheduled to take place in the park on Saturday evening will be held instead in the business sections of the city. Mrs. Mabel Dunlap Curry and Miss Sarah T. Muir will speak on the West Side at 7 o'clock at the corner of West 1st st. and Broadway, and at 8 o'clock at the bank corner. Mayor F. E. Fox will introduce the speakers.

PALERMO MAN IS FINED $10; CITY SEALER O'BRIEN SECURES CONVICTION

With the conviction yesterday of William McCarthy of Palermo on a charge of violating the law in regard to the illegal use of weights and measures, a closer watch will now be kept on violators of the code pertaining to the proper use of containers, measures, weights, etc., by City Sealer O'Brien and County Sealer F. E. French.

Sealer O'Brien charges Mr. McCarthy with selling to one of the latter's customers a jar containing butter which should have weighed six pounds, but which in reality weighed only five and one-half pounds. Mr. O'Brien avers that McCarthy's arrest followed several warnings given, that the law requires certain markings on goods offered for sale by vendors. McCarthy apparently ignored the admonitions of the Sealer, to the extent that on Monday the official stopped the farmer and asked him for an explanation of his failure to obey the law. At that time McCarthy had in his wagon several jars of butter which were unmarked and Mr. O'Brien was informed by McCarthy that it was his intention to have the jars weighed at once in a nearby grocery store. O'Brien observed the farmer's failure to do as he had promised. At another time, on Sept. 4, Sealer O'Brien learned of a sale of butter made by McCarthy where the farmer was trailed to West 1st st., where a citizen purchased a jar supposed to contain six pounds of butter. This was witnessed by the Sealer and used by him in furnishing evidence to the court. McCarthy plead not guilty to the charge and several hearings followed the first one, but finally yesterday a fine of $10 was imposed upon the Palermo man.

In filing his report with the Common Council last night, the City Sealer showed that during the quarter ending October 1, 1915, 505 measures, containers, weights, etc., had been sealed and of this lot 125 condemned. The report shows an improvement over previous quarters in that greater caution is being used by farmers, produce dealers, merchants and business places using weights and measures to avoid violation of the law, but yet there are a number of people who are unintentionally, perhaps, breaking the law.

KIPLING'S SON BELIEVED TO HAVE BEEN KILLED

London.—John Kipling, eighteen, the only son of Rudyard Kipling, is reported missing and is believed to have been killed in action. He was in the Irish Guards, to which he was nominated by the late Lord Roberts.

News has been received here that Lieutenant Colonel Lord Ninian Crichton-Stuart, commanding the 6th Welsh regiment, has been killed in action. He was thirty-two years old and was the unionist Member of the Parliament from Cardiff. He is the fifth Member of Parliament to lose his life in the war. His brother is the present Marquis of Bute. His father, the third Marquis of Bute, died in 1900.

NEW JERSEY BOOMS PRESIDENT WILSON

Trenton, N. J.—The Democrats of New Jersey have pledged themselves unanimously in their State Convention to support President Wilson for renomination and re-election. They did this amid dignified applause and without a suggestion of opposition from any quarter. The action really marks the beginning of the campaign for the renomination of President Wilson, and from information unofficially obtained here it is but the forerunner of similar action to be taken in other states, notably in the Middle West.

MACHINE GUN CORPS FOR BRITISH ARMY

London.—The announcement that the king had approved the formation of a machine gun corps, although not unexpected, was received with cordial approval, as it marks a further stage in the adaptation of the British military organization. It will be formed in view of the character of the regular army's role to go anywhere oversea and therefore will be provided with light equipment to meet the conditions of the warfare with which it now is confronted.

The Debauch in Wall Street.

With what emotions do the governors of the Stock Exchange view what is now going on in the temple they cleansed and rededicated to stability?

Millions of shares of stock gyrate daily in the wild orgies of speculation. Plungers are mad to learn prices. But is there a whisper about values?

Baldwin Locomotive, which sold on March 31 at 26 5-8, went this week to 150. Lackawanna Steel last January found no buyers at 27. Yesterday it touched 94. Does anybody ask what these and other war stocks can point to in the way of permanent, dividend-paying prosperity and improvement behind the showy rush of war business? Does anybody care, as long as quotations jump and brokers are on hand to take orders?

In the first thoughtful months following the outbreak of the war, Wall Street was what it ought to be—a market place. Last April, when Bethlehem, a stock that never paid a dividend, had in four months trebled its normal price, the old habits broke out. Bethlehem Steel was overbought and oversold by hundreds of thousands of shares. Other stocks quickly felt the upward currents of excited speculation. July saw a further relapse into the old ways. And now, as the struggle in France takes on fresh intensity, Wall Street plunges into a gambling debauch which threatens to spread speculative mania broadcast through the country.

So it will go on as long as the Stock Exchange is left to reform itself. It can no more permanently resist an onrush of commissions than the company that runs the Casino at Monte Carlo can close its tables and forego its dividends.

Until the Stock Exchange becomes responsible to the laws of the State of New York debauches like the present will succeed one another indefinitely. It took the law to bring order out of chaos and confusion of irresponsible banking. Only by incorporating itself under the law can the Stock Exchange lift itself above thel evel of a gambling house.

Unless it is legislated into legitimacy it ought to be legislated out of existence.—N. Y. World.

LEND A HAND

A city of 12,000 may be a little city but its needs are quite as great as those of big places. With the indoor evenings close at hand, the question of the possibility of establishing club rooms for the boys to congregate, is again suggesting itself.

At various times the agitation for the purchase or erection of a Y. M. C. A. has been abroad, but the initial expenditure, when looked in the face, has had the effect of weakening many enthusiastic ones. The idea of working out the plan on an elaborate scale would prove a kill-joy if attempted. The beginning if made in one room of good size, and provided with comfortable furnishings, reading tables, a piano, a mat, trapeze, gloves, bars, etc., would be a modest beginning. Such an equipment would furnish clean amusement for dozens of boys, if correctly supervised, and would prove a blessing in manifold ways in countless homes.

The social side of a community is its richest asset if the fact could only be realized sufficiently to arouse interest into action. Out of relations in a social way business relations become more clearly ideal. Tom Brown and Jim Smith should not fail to see into the future. Boys become men, and men with an interest in the community are more likely to help themselves to help others.

Little "Jimmy's" sage observation, that "the more we put into things, the more we get out of them," is not at all amiss in this instance. The more interest persons put into their community the more there is to be got out of it. It's a pitiable fact that men of a community are never called together unless to tell them what to do to help some one's pet plan—even though that plan worked out would be a perfect blessing. The mass of people are more interested in being done for than in doing. Working together is secondary to getting together.

GRIT—GINGER—CUMPTION

Lack of perseverance, lack of special knowledge, lack of enthusiasm, and you will lack one thing—success.

It is only through failure that a man can hope to be safe in success. Failure does not mean defeat. It only puts you to test. If you cannot rise out of failure, you are not strong enough to stay in success.

If you feel you are a failure now, and you still have the three factors of perseverance, special knowledge, and enthusiasm—grit, ginger and gumption—you really stand on the threshold of a permanent success. If you lack these three factors you are a poor risk. —Silent Partner.

Wall Street's Enormous Rake-off

The total transactions of the New York Stock Exchange for five days this week have exceeded 7,000,000 shares. This means $1,750,000 in brokers' commissions.

All this money comes out of the pockets of customers, and there is naturally no disposition on the part of members of the Stock Exchange to check the frenzy of stockgambling. Neither is there a disposition on the part of the governors to inquire too closely into the character of some of the stocks that are dealt in.

The game is wide open, the sky is the limit and everything goes. Already sensational reports are everywhere in circulation in regard to fortunes that have been achieved by pyramiding shoestrings. It is the same sort of talk that the tourist at Monte Carlo used to hear morning, noon and night, and the kind of prosperity that was dinned into his ears there had the same basis as this new Wall Street prosperity. In other words, whatever happened to the players, the bank's percentage was a mathematical certainty.

After the lean years, Wall Street's hands are again full of fat and it is making the most of its opportunities.

The general effect of this stock-gambling debauch can only be bad. A speculative public is not buying legitimate securities for investment. It is buying "war brides" and "war babies" in the naive belief that it can get rich quick in beating Wall Street at its own game.

The day of reckoning will come, of course. The bottom will drop out of a crooked market. There will be much bleating among the lambs that have been trimmed. Defaulting cashiers and faithless clerks will make the kind of atonement that defaulting cashiers and faithless clerks usually make in such circumstances. Amateur speculators will think longingly of the savings-bank books that they once possessed. The Stock Exchange will come in for another period of investigation, with the demand for government regulation, and attorneys for the Exchange will issue eloquent statements explaining how the business of the country could not be carried on without an open gambling market for securities. The fool will again have been answered according to his folly, as he always has been and always will be.

Two confidence men in one of O. Henry's stories scrupulously refused to work New York because they did not regard it as sportsmanlike. To them it was like dynamiting bass in a Texas lake. Wall Street is not much concerned about sportsmanship these days. Its motto is the motto of the father of Mr. Dooley's parlor Socialist—"Get th' goods."—New York World.

HOW TO SUCCEED; SAVE SOMETHING REGULARLY

We have been a nation of spendthrifts long enough.—Roger W. Babson.

George D. Dayton, one of the leading business men of Minneapolis, tells this inspiring story of his success through saving:

"I left home shortly after 16 years of ago. Before reaching 22 years I had accumulated $5,000 ($2,000 of which had been given by father in lieu of a college course), and felt then it was safe to marry. At that time I was receiving a salary of $800 per year, payable weekly. Wife and I decided that we would not open charge accounts anywhere, would pay cash for what we bought and would go without things we could not pay for until we could pay for them. Furthermore, we decided that each Saturday we would lay aside $5 for a permanent investment, and nothing was permitted to tempt us from that habit while on a salary.

"When we went to housekeeping only a part of the house was furnished—some rooms were kept closed until we could buy carpets and needed furniture. Many young couples think they must establish themselves in well furnished apartments in order to get into society, but we were welcomed into the same refined, intelligent circles in which our parents had always moved, and this without any pretense of having more than we possessed.

"When about $200 or so had accumulated a mortgage was bought for $400 or $500, the balance being paid as quickly as possible. The interest on each mortgage swelled the income that much and the salary increased some—until in 1883 we moved to Minnesota and invested all in land.

"A young man has no right to marry until he has saved something—a young couple have no right to live up to all their income. Every man owes it to society to save something for his family. Men on salaries can do this if they will, but it requires on the part of both husband and wife will power sufficient to be content and happy while living inside the income, whatever that is."

Mr. Dayton's experience was related in connection with an interesting discussion in the Minneapolis Journal brought forth by a letter written to the paper by a man who signed himself "Billpayer."

This correspondent asked how he could save part of his salary, explaining that his income was a little more than enough for his needs. He had patiently tried to save but had never made much headway. His case is typical of many others.

Have you solved the problem yet?

Will Thomas Jefferson Now Turn in His Grave?

The Baltimore platform addressed to Woodrow Wilson and other Democrats whom it might concern the subjoined instructions with regard to taxation by tariff:

"We declare it to be a fundamental principle of the Democratic Party that the federal government, under the constitution, has no right or power to impose or collect tariff duties except for the purpose of revenue and we demand that the collection of such taxes shall be limited to the necessities of govern ment, honestly and economically administered."

Conversely, it is a fundamental principle of the Democratic party that the federal government has both the right and the power to impose and collect tariff duties for the purpose of revenue to be devoted to the necessities of government honestly and economically administered.

A supreme necessity of government is preparedness against foreign attack. There is no honester expenditure of money raised by taxation. There is no more economical expenditure of the public money as was shown by one great Democrat, Samuel J. Tilden, in his memorable plea for adequate appropriations for harbor and coast defense, when he contrasted the cost of such insurance with the cost of neglect.

Here, then, according to the fundamental principles of the Democratic Party, is the proper constitutional method of providing for the national defense. The revenue needed for armament is to be collected at the custom houses.

With this constitutional and truly Democratic course of revenue available, and until its possibilities have been exhausted or its inadequacy prov ed by experience, any proposal to issue bonds for requirements of national defense is the counsel of folly, almost criminal in its indifference to Democratic principle, to political common sense and to plain duty.

There is no more warrtn for a bond issue for this purpose, the tariff source of revenue being available, than there is for a bond issue to pay the current expenses of the West Point and Annapolis establishments.

This is why we hesitate to believe that President Wilson and his advisers can dream of recommending to Congress to go to the bankers before going to the custom houses. It is enough to make Thomas Jefferson turn in his grave.—N. Y. Sun.

The Civil Service.

The Executive Committee of the Civil Service Reform Association is in favor of that part of the proposed Constitution which places State Civil Service Commission under the protection of the Constitution. Heretofore that body has been very much at the behest of the powers at Albany, and if they didn't do what the bosses wanted they were very apt to lose their positions. But, now the commission is placed under the protection of the Constitution The commission, however, i sstill within reach of the people for the governor may file charges against a commission which does not do its duty, and after a hearing in which the charges are proved, members of the commission may be removed The protection is similar to that proposed for the Utility Commissions.

The Executive Committee of the Civil Service Reform Association has issued a statement which says of the provisions: "It no longer can be said that the Civil Service Commission is a subordinate branch of the government, to be reorganized with each rev olution of the political wheel. Instead of being made subject to political manipulation there is now the opportunity to lay the foundation for a real advance in the administration of the competitive system." Continuity of administration is provided, for there will always be two experienced men on the board.

The civil service administration has been considerably of a farce in the state for many years It appears thatt the proposed Constitution paves the way for genuine reform.—Utica Observer.

Louella Pullen, Charming Entertainer with the Billy Allen Company, at The Quirk this Week.

"THE BEAUTY PARLOR" DREW BIG HOUSE AT QUIRK

A big audience at The Quirk last night saw a tuneful, happy comedy production of "The Beauty Parlor." Billy Allen was at his best and his audience was with him.

Two productions have been presented here by the company and Fulton theatre-goers are realizing that this organization, playing at popular prices, compares favorably with the higher priced productions.

Mr. Allen did splendid work last night as the mystified shoemaker. He kept his audience convulsed. Several specialties were introduced by Mr. Allen and other members of the company and the chorus numbers were both novel and pretty. One of these was "Follow Me," in which the entire company "followed the leader" off the stage, through the audience, around the house and back to the stage again.

"Keep Moving Tonight."

It is "Keep Moving," tonight. a play said to be funnier than "Watch Your Step." That is saying a good deal for "Watch Your Step" has had a long season of popularity in New York. "Watch Your Step" had the Castles and while Billy Allen cannot claim anything like the equal of those famous exponents of modern dancing he is not going too far in boasting of his comedy exponents. There are several in his company. Billy Allen again plays the leading comedy character this time as a sausage maker from Burlington, Iowa, who is pursued by a female Sherlock Holmes in search of a dog which the sausage maker is presumed to have kidnapped for business reasons. Among the musical numbers in which the famous beauty chorus participates is one in which all the girls impersonate Charles Chaplin. Billy Allen also gives some clever Charlie Chaplin imitations and by the way a Charlie Chaplin contest will be held on the stage Thursday night. A number of local amateurs will compete for prizes.

"Keep Moving" is to be followed by "The Time, The Place and The Girl," on Thursday; "A Night at the Wintergarden" on Friday; and "The Dingbat Family" on Saturday. All of these are well known successes never before played at popularp rices.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Cereal Exports Would Have Decreased But for European War

Washington.—Had our exportations of corn, wheat and flour to the belligerent nations of Europe and to those European countries which depend on other sources for those products in normal times remained at the mark set in 1913, under Republican law, the total exports of this country for the fiscal year 1915 would have fallen short of the record set in 1913 by about $9,000,000, notwithstanding the tremendous demand of the Allied Powers for other munitions of war from the United States. Without the gain made in exportation of breadstuffs, alone, for the nine months, September, 1914, to June, 1915, the "war order" months, over a similar period, September, 1912, to June, 1913, under Republican law, the total exports for the whole year 1915 would have fallen short of the 1913 record by $13,000,000.

Taking the second statement first: Our exports of breadstuffs for the ten months' period, September, 1912, to June, 1913, amounted to $196,000,000 in round numbers. For the same period, 1913-1914, nine months under Democratic law, they amounted to $120,000,000, a falling off of nearly 40 per cent. for the periods named. For a like period, 1914-1915, when we were supplying food to the countries at war, they jumped to 512,700,000. Our total exportations for the fiscal year 1915, exceeded those of 1913 by $303,000,000. The gain in breadstuffs, 1915 over 1913, was $316,000,000, but we lost on other exports.

The total value of our corn, wheat and flour exported in 1913 was about $171,000,000. In 1914, under Democratic law, it fell to $149,000,000, and in 1915 it rose to $467,600,000. Considering those countries which drew most heavily on the United States for these three foodstuffs during the war period of 1915, we exported to Belgium, France, Italy, the Netherlands, Great Britain, other European countries, and Canada, wheat to the value of $321,000,000. To these same countries in 1913 our wheat exports amounted to $70,000,000. To the Netherlands, Great Britain and other European countries in 1915 we exported flour to the value of $66,000,000. To these same countries in 1913 our flour exports amounted to about $20,000,000. To Denmark and the Netherlands in 1915 we exported corn to the value of $22,000,000. In 1913 our corn exports to these two countries were valued at $7,000,000. So that of these three products to the countries named we exported in 1915 to the value of $409,000,000, compared with $97,000,000 in 1913, a difference of $312,000,000 due to the war.

The total value of all exports for the fiscal year 1915 was $2,768,000. For 1913 it was $2,465,000, which was something over $101,000,000 more than we exported in 1914 under the first year of the Democratic tariff law, and $303,000,000 less than the 1915 period. So it will be seen that corn, wheat and flour alone more than accounted for this increase. It is a pretty good showing for the American farmer, but Mr. Redfield has no reason to pat himself on the back unless he started the war.

Again, there are many other items to be considered in accounting for this huge export trade. The figures of the Department of Commerce plainly show that on all exports which would properly come under the category of munitions of war, we gained between $800,000,000 and $1,000,000,000 for the ten months' period, September, 1914, to June, 1915, over the similar period 1913-1914.

The administration has press-agented that phrase "a billion dollar trade balance" all over the country, but if people will stop to consider that our exports for 1915 with all the great manufacturing nations at war exceeded those for 1913 by only $303,000,000—more than the entire amount of which sum came from the soil, it may pave the way for a little serious thought on what is going to happen when the war is over and we face a desperate competition with Europe, we being armed with nothing but the Underwood tariff law.

Wait Paint

There are painters and waiters. Which am I going to do? Paint or wait?

Which is better?

How much am I worth with my property waiting? How much if I paint? Will my house be worth more or less if I paint?

Say it costs $2 a gallon Devoe—I wouldn't paint any other—and $3 or $4 more for putting it on. That's $50 or $60 a 10-gallon job.

The money is gone. Is it in the house? Is it all in the house?

Suppose I were selling; what should I get for that house fresh-painted and what should I get for it needing-paint?

I wonder why men paint before selling!

BALDWINSVILLE COMES SATURDAY

Alumni Giving Valuable Assistance to Coach Merrill In Preparation for a Hard Game.

The first workout of the High school fotball team since the defeat at the hands of East Syracuse was held yesterday at Athletic field. With the assistance of a few interested alumni of the school, a successful practice was held. John Ward, last year's quarter, and Don Cavanaugh, another high school football man, assisted Coach Merrill materially in instructing the men. Tice, last year's coach, was also on hand and gave some valuable pointers to the squad.

After a stiff tackling practice, in fact, the hardest of this season, in which the players alternated in tackling each other, the team ran through a signal practice. Special efforts were made by the coach and those who assisted him in getting the team more solid.

Eleven men among those present formed a scrub team which opposed the regulars. This scrimmaging was maintained for a few minutes and before the windup the players practiced kicking, blocking punts, forward passes and running with the ball.

Baldwinsville High school will be the next opponent of the Fulton boys. The game is to be played here on Athletic field next Saturday afternoon and a large turnout of the team's supporters is expected to be on hand. Although defeated in their first game, the team does not lack for loyal supporters, the boys and girls at the High school being enthusiastic in having a successful football team to represent the school.

SYRACUSE TEAM COMES SUNDAY; TWO GAMES

The Leavenworths of Syracuse will play the Nondescripts of Fulton at the Fair grounds this coming Sunday. Pracaice was held last night in the Park and some new plays were tried out under the leadership of Coach Ward. In addition to the big game, a preliminary game between the Tigers of this city and the Victors of Oswego is scheduled.

The Leavenworths are a strong team, having had no trouble in defeating the St. Patrick's of Syracuse on last Sunday. Speed is one of the most valuable assets of the Leavenworths, their backfield being fast in getting started. This team is classed as one of the best amateur aggregations in Syracuse, and a large crowd should be attracted to the Fair grounds to witness the affair asw ell as the Tiger-Victor match.

The following Sunday the Nondescripts journey to Oswego to meet the Shakespeares in a rethrn game and will take along with them a large number of rooters.

Mr. A. M. Taylor (Albertus), whose "Jostle" which appeared on a recent date in this newspaper amused so very many readers, conveys the information of his appointment as manager of the News Bureau of the B. R. & P. railway company, with headquarters in Rochester.

WOMAN'S WEAR HIS PROPERTY

When an unknown man yesterday afternoon walked into Van Wagenen's garage in First st. and deposited a heavily laden bag in the corner, and then walked hastily away, an employe of the garage became suspicious and he hastened to the police station to tell of the occurrence. Patrolmen LeRoy Lewis was detailed on the case and started upon the trail of the man, who had gone toward the upper bridge. The officer requisitioned the use of a passing buggy, driven by a woman, and soon caught up with his man.

When arraigned the prisoner gave the name of Fred Whitmarsh, but refused to talk further. He was released this morning, as the articles found in the bag proved to be his own. Included in the lot of miscellaneons goods in the bag was a woman's boa, an alarm clock, elementary school book and some underwear, all of which had been thoroughly waterscaked. Whitmarsh, who resides in the country, explained that the bag had been left out in the rain all of Monday night.

Harmony House

The "Good Angel" of the Home

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Harmony House dwelt in the midst of pleasant green lawns, noble trees and many scattered flower beds.

The rooms were arranged in suits of three small bedrooms, bath and sitting room, and to each suit the management allotted three "guests" of the house—spinsters of fifty and over and indigent childless widows.

This "home," with its annual fee of $50 each, assured the inmates a home for life provided peace dwelt within its walls. In case of dissension the malefactor must bid farewell to Harmony House foreyer.

And Harmony House had been the gift of Miss Keziah Todd, a peace loving spinster of ample means.

Her portrait hung over the high mantelpiece in the front hall and gazed benignantly down upon the guests of Harmony House, whose lives she had tried to brighten while her own faded away into another world.

It was March, and there was a hint of spring in the sharp air, even though the snow lay eight inches deep over lawns, fields and highway.

Five o'clock of a March afternoon, and twenty-four guests of Harmony House gathered in the general sitting room on the first floor. Promptly at 6 Hepsy Biddle, the housekeeper, would announce supper, and if it wasn't Hepsy Biddle it would be one of the waitresses. Anyway, some one would ring the supper bell.

"I hope it's Hepsy. I want to ask her about the new lady who came this afternoon," fussed Mrs. Bennett.

"I saw her," remarked Alicia Pearson—"small and scrawny, like a little canary."

Some one laughed.

"I wonder if she sings like one?" tittered Ellen Smith, her false teeth clicking in unison with her tongue.

A sharp voice broke in from the doorway, a strange voice, the voice of the newcomer.

"I can tell you I don't sing like a canary!" it snapped. "And I don't cackle like a hen or titter like a guinea hen! Oh, good evening, Mrs. Biddle!"

Over the tiny form of the irate newcomer Hepsy Biddle loomed like an angel of peace.

"Why, Miss Olivia, I didn't know you had arrived! Did some one show you your room?"

"The girl did," said Olivia Ladd. "And she said it was most supper time, so I came down."

"That's right. Make yourself at home. I'll introduce you to your roommates, and they can introduce you to the rest."

Hepsy led Olivia up to Alicia Pearson and Ellen Smith.

They both bowed and said, "Pleased to meet you." And Olivia stared hard at them and said pertly:

"Pleased to meet you, I'm sure!"

Hepsy drifted away toward the kitchen, and Olivia was left in the middle of the sitting room, with forty-eight eyes focused on her sprightly little form.

Olivia Ladd wore a black cashmere skirt, made narrow in the latest mode. She wore black high heeled slippers, with silver buckles, and a white shirt waist with a sailor collar that showed a stringy little throat that was quivering more than its owner would admit.

Olivia's pale sandy hair was coiled in two small flat circles behind her ears. Her blue eyes had a strained look, and there were hard little lines around her nose and mouth.

Not one of the women present dreamed that Olivia Ladd had reached what appeared to her a haven of refuge.

For thirty years she had been a dressmaker, out by the day, and, having considered long and carefully how to invest her savings, she had been sent to the management of Harmony House.

"I'm going to do nothing for weeks and weeks," Olivia had promised herself. So she fixed up her wardrobe and felt a sense of triumph in descending upon the rural inmates of Harmony House in the glory of up to date clothes.

"I shall never make clothes for any one except myself," was another promise Olivia had made. She felt rather forlorn in the midst of the women, and for one instant she longed for her tiny room in the crowded city.

But the old fighting spirit was in her, and she tossed her head and remarked pleasantly:

"I suppose there's a chair for me, but I don't seem to see it."

Mrs. Mattie Jones laughed good naturedly.

"It's right behind me, Miss Ladd. I'm so fat that I shut off all the view. Here, Miss Ambler, shove that chair around for Miss Ladd. Now, you sit down by me and tell me all the news from the city."

Olivia thanked Mrs. Jones and took the chair. She told her about the snow blockade on the city streets, about the near accident on the railroad and finally how she had dropped a cherished plant—a rose geranium—on the station platform and had seen it crushed to atoms by a heavy baggage truck.

She spoke of the latest and most thrilling news of the war, the sinking of ships by submarines, news which seemingly had not come to the ears of good natured, laughing Mrs. Jones. After the usual questions and exclamations of horror she passed on to other news.

"Never mind, my dear," reassured Mrs. Jones, patting Olivia's hand. "I've got two rose geraniums, all budded. My plant was so big that I divided it, thinking maybe some one would like one of them. I guess I was saving it for you!"

"You are very kind. I shall like you so much," said Olivia warmly, and the two women went out to supper in a glow of good feeling.

During the meal Olivia talked to some of the other women and liked it—all except Ellen Smith and Alicia Pearson, who shared the same suit with the newcomer.

"It's just my luck," thought Olivia forlornly. "I wish I had shared some rooms with Mattie Jones or that Miss Ambler."

The evening passed quickly with fancy work, conversation and music from a large phonograph.

At 10 o'clock Mattie Jones got up and said good night. Her departure was the signal for a general exodus, and as the women went out Olivia's bright eyes had inventoried each one's appearance and found it wanting in style. Their skirts were too full, their shirtwaists were out of date and all of them wore either black or white—most trying of all tints to one who is no longer young.

"I don't wonder they look cranky," said Olivia as she went up to her room. "What they need are cheerful clothes to liven them up. Take Mrs. Jones, with her white hair. She would look sweet in pink, like Mrs. Judge Latimer used to wear."

Olivia passed through the tiny hall that led to her room.

Miss Pearson and Ellen Smith were in adjoining rooms talking to each other while they prepared for bed.

"It may be the style," Ellen was saying, "but I don't think it's proper to wear skirts that tight."

"Oh, pshaw!" retorted Alicia Pearson. "Seems as if I'd relish a skirt that didn't blow out like a balloon."

"Alicia! Would you wear such a tight skirt?" demanded Ellen in a horrified tone.

"I'd wear anything different," retorted Alicia recklessly. "I'm sick of looking so old and middle aged."

"You can't help it. You are middle aged," snapped back Ellen. "I suppose you'd like to wear your hair in two little coils behind your ears," she sneered.

"I'm trying it that way now," said Alicia coolly.

"Let me see! Alicia Pearson, if you don't look like the old Nick!" gasped Ellen.

At that moment Olivia appeared in the door. She wore a low necked lace trimmed nightgown, and there was a giddy little blue bow at the throat and on each apology for a sleeve. Her ginger colored hair was neatly braided and tied with blue ribbons.

"I thought I'd like to say good night to some one," she said rather timidly. "I've lived alone in a boarding house for so many years, and when I thought of coming here I kept thinking it would be like home—so many lonesome women glad to get together."

"Good land!" gasped amazed Ellen.

"Come in and sit down," invited Alicia. "I'm trying to do my hair like yours. How do you manage it?"

Olivia showed her. Then Ellen's scanty gray locks were brushed into a fluffy mass on top of her head instead of its usual tight knot.

They fell to exchanging confidences, and finally they talked about clothes. Olivia was in her glory.

Then she gave them her confidence and told the story of her weary years at dressmaking and how being able to alter their clothes would be a pleasure instead of a drudgery.

Long after the lights were out and each woman was in her narrow bed they continued to talk back and forth until Hepsy Biddle knocked on the door for quiet.

The next morning Olivia formed a sewing club. Every member of Harmony House joined at once. They gathered about the newcomer with workbaskets and out of date garments, and Olivia showed them how to alter and make over gowns and coats and hats.

"You'll wear yourself out, Miss Olivia," expostulated Hepsy Biddle one day.

"I never was so happy in my life," returned Olivia. "We have such good times sewing together, Miss Biddle, and it's like one big family here. Seems like they're all my sisters and they need me. That's the happiest thought of all."

Hepsy nodded.

"I suppose some folks would say clothes making was a sin, but I say anything that brings joy and peace to lonely hearts is all right. And quarrels mostly begin through idleness. So I think if Miss Todd was only here she'd shake hands with you and say you were the good angel of Harmony House. They've stopped squabbling, thank goodness."

Olivia blushed to the roots of her gingery hair.

"I'm so happy I don't know what to do," half sobbed Olivia as she ran down the steps of Harmony House.

"I think they're calling you to come over and play croquet," said Hepsy, with twinkling eyes, for the lawn of Harmony House was sprinkled with all the members of the big family. They walked freely in the grass and swung their mallets with vigor.

Their remodeled gowns may have been entirely inappropriate to sober middle age, and the freakish coiffures may have seemed ridiculous, but they were entirely happy.

NOVA SCOTIA'S NEW LABOR LAW

Important Features of Workmen's Compensation Act.

AFTER five years of agitation and education by the labor men of Nova Scotia, there has been placed upon the statute books of the province a workmen's compensation act which is regarded as the most advanced labor legislation ever enacted in Nova Scotia, and pronounced by some as superior to many compensation acts and excelled by none.

One of the most important features of the act is the principle of collective liability in substitution for the old principle of individual liability. This practically means a system of state insurance. The industries will be divided into groups, regulated as regards similarity in the nature of their work, or the hazards in connection therewith. Each class will contribute to the accident fund a sufficient sum each year to pay cost resulting from accidents occurring in the group to which they are attached. Assessments are made upon percentage of pay rolls. The fund is administered by the compensation board, which has large powers under the act. The province defrays the expenses of the board, which will consist of three members.

The new act differs from the old in every respect. The greatest amount payable under the old law was $1,500. The new act provides for the injured workman during his disability, even if it lasts his lifetime. Litigation is abolished, thus doing away with agents, adjusters, lawyers, stockholders or any third parties, who represent only a waste. Compensation will not be paid where disability lasts less than seven days, but if it lasts longer, compensation will date from time of injury.

The scale of compensation is regulated as follows: During the entire period of total disability resulting from an accident the workman is entitled to a weekly or monthly payment equal to 55 per cent of his average earnings before the accident. In case of partial disability he is entitled to 55 per cent of the difference between what he has earned before the accident and what he earns or can earn in suitable employment after the accident.

The maximum sum of yearly earnings upon which payments are computed is $1,200. Workmen earning more than this sum are within the act, but their compensation in case of accident is based on the established maximum of $100 per month.

Where death results and the workman leaves a widow, but no children, the widow is entitled to a monthly payment of $20 until her death or remarriage. In event of remarriage the sum of two years' payments is given her. If the dependents are a widow and children, in addition to payments to widow $5 per month shall be paid for each child under sixteen years, the maximum payment not exceeding $40 in all. If dependents are children only, payments are $10 per month for each child under sixteen, but not more than $40 in all. Payments are provided for the dependents (father, mother, etc.) who are not included in foregoing. Payments are provided for loss of fingers, etc.

In return for advantages of the act the statutory rights of the workman are taken away. This will do away with court expenses and unnecessary delay in payment of compensation besides giving assurance to the employee that all he will be called upon to pay will be his proportionate cost of the accident happening in the group of industries to which he is attached.—Typographical Journal.

Chairman Walsh Praised.

The attempt to discredit Chairman Walsh of the industrial relations commission because of his vigerous cross examination of John D. Rockefeller, Jr., was answered by the Unitarian fellowship of social justice at Boston, which passed the following resolution: "Resolved, That the Unitarian fellowship of social justice sends its greeting to the Hon. Frank Walsh, chairman of the United States commission on industrial relations, and rejoices in his wisdom and courage in pursuing a relentless investigation of the Rockefeller interests and the Colorado strike."

OF INTEREST TO LABOR.

In the state of New York 2,000 department store girls receive less than $6 a week.

Colorado is the latest addition to the states having workingmen's compensation laws.

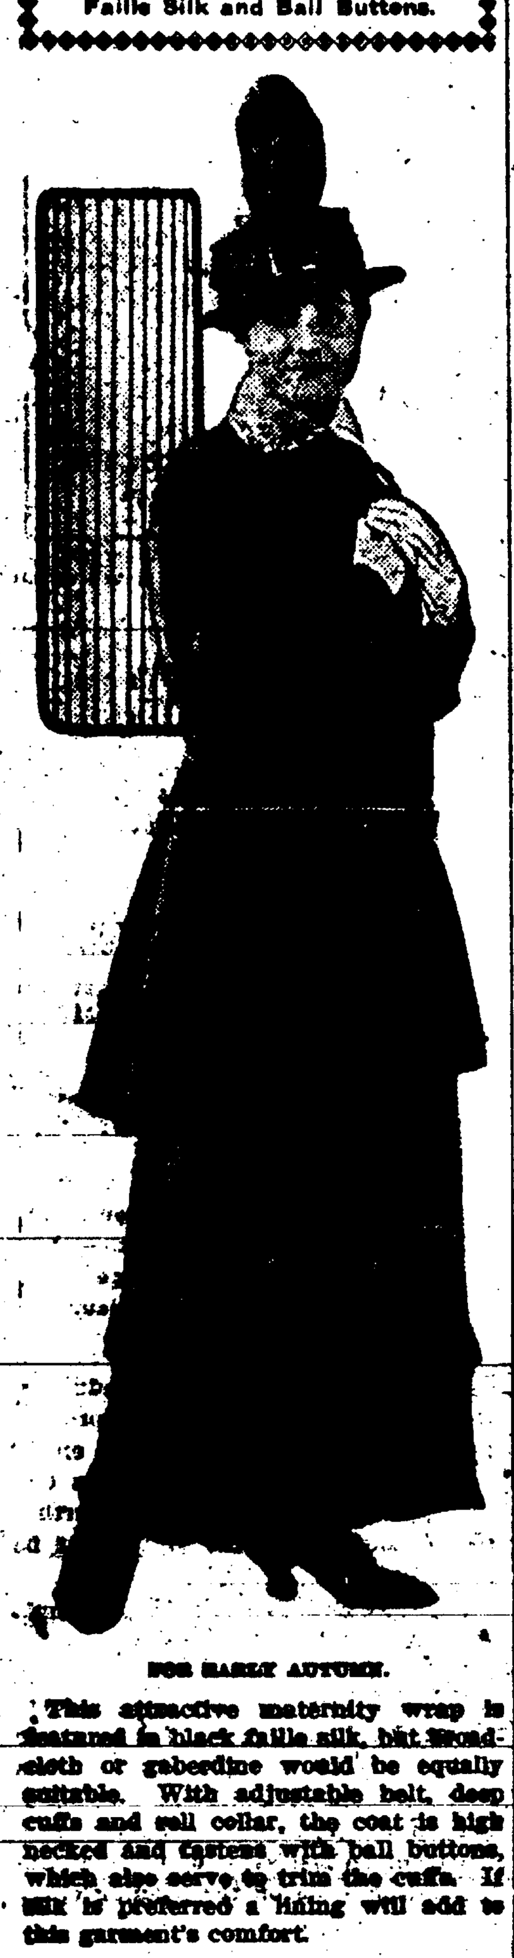
The street car strike in Chicago involved about 14,500 men, mostly motormen and conductors.

J. B. Butler, steel manufacturer and president of the Bessemer Pig Iron association, believes a vital problem confronting the iron and steel industries is a threatened shortage of labor.

Union plasterers of Boston have presented a schedule calling for 45 cents an hour, payment of car fare for out of town work and an allowance of $3 a week for board, time and a half Saturday afternoon work and double time for night work.

AN AFTERNOON WRAP.

A Charming Design in Faille Silk and Ball Buttons.



FOR EARLY AUTUMN.

This attractive maternity wrap is featured in black faille silk, but broadcloth or gaberdine would be equally suitable. With adjustable belt, deep cuffs and roll collar, the coat is high necked and fastens with ball buttons, which also serve to trim the cuffs. If silk is preferred a lining will add to this garment's comfort.

SEEK NAMES OF RETIRED MEN.

Navy Wants to Register All Available Supernumerary Officers.

As a part of the program of preparedness for war, the navy department has instituted, through the bureau of navigation, an inquiry regarding the commissioned personnel on the naval retired list to ascertain how many retired officers would be available in time of need either to take duty on warships or in navy yards and stations. The inquiry includes the retired officers of the Marine corps as well as of the navy.

Hereafter the bureau of navigation will keep two lists of officers available for duty in time of war. On one list will appear the names of those of the active list, and on the other the names of those who have been retired. It is understood that this classification does not apply to those officers who have been retired for age. The inquiry goes out to officers who have retired voluntarily, who have been "plucked," or who have been retired for some physical disability which might not stand in the way of performing some special line of duty required somewhere in the naval establishment in time of hostilities.

Champion Snorer Here.

His snoring disturbed the peace of Far Rockaway, so carpenter was held in $500 bail, and he was only taking a nap!

Big Bonus For Workers.

Twenty-five hundred of the employees of the Alexander Smith & Son carpet works of Yonkers, N. Y., opened their pay envelopes on Sept. 1 and found bonus checks therein, the ninth experience of the kind in four and a half years. These employees received $65,000, making $613,000 in all that has been distributed to them since the bonus plan has been in vogue at the works.

Each employee who has been in the employ of the company for ten years or more received a bonus check for 10 per cent of his last six months' salary, and each employee who has been in the employ of the company for more than five years, but less than ten years, received a bonus check for 5 per cent of his last six months' salary.

Garment Workers May Strike.

A general strike of clothing workers, involving 200,000 in Baltimore, Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, Rochester, St. Louis, Cincinnati and Milwaukee, is contemplated, it was stated at a recent meeting of the executive council of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America at Baltimore. The council authorized the Chicago workers to make their demands for a forty-eight hour week and higher wages. In the event the manufacturers refuse, a general strike, involving 50,000 workers in Chicago, will be called within six weeks, at the beginning of the busy season.

YOUNG FOLKS' CORNER

An Apple "Stunt."

When you wish to mystify and amuse one of your friends try the trick of cutting an apple into quarters without apparently breaking the skin. It is so old a trick that it will probably be quite new to many of the people you know.

Select a large red apple. Thread a long, slender darning needle with about a yard of strong white linen thread and, beginning near the stem of the apple, take a shallow stitch an inch or so in length toward the blow end.

Draw about two-thirds of the thread through, and be careful to make the break in the skin as small as possible, and when you take the second stitch set the needle exactly in the place out of which it came. Sew entirely round the apple to the opposite side of the stem from where you started.

Now, hold the apple firmly between your knees and, crossing the ends of the thread, take one in each hand and give a strong, steady pull. The thread will cut its way through the fruit and come free in your hand. Repeat the process, beginning again at the stem, but going at right angles to the first cut.

When your friend peels the fruit she will find it neatly quartered. The small punctures that your needle makes in the skin will pass unnoticed, unless the apple is very closely examined.—Youth's Companion.

Jumbled Animals.

To make the game of animals interesting about four persons should play. Of course, the more persons the better the game.

Say, if six persons play, write on six slips of paper the name of an animal—that is, a different animal on each slip, but change the letters all around. For instance, if one animal was to be monkey it should be changed like this: komeyn (2), or if it were hyena it should be changed like this: eynah (3).

Give each one a slip and a pencil, and also a larger piece of paper. The slips should be numbered—that is, from 1 to 6, when six play. Then on the larger slip have numbers from 1 to 6. Then tell the players to pin their slips to their waists or coats. Then each one must go around to each player and try to guess the name of the animal on his or her slip. Each player must guess his own too. When they have guessed the animal they must write the name of it alongside of the corresponding number on the large sheet. For instance, if 3 was donkey they would write donkey alongside of No. 3. Time the players, giving about twenty minutes if six play and more time for more people. At the end of the allotted time the one having the most names correct should receive a prize.

The Useful Owl.

A family of barn owls will number from three to seven birds. It is hard to believe what an amount of vermin a family of owls will consume. An old owl will capture as much food as a dozen cats in a night, or more. The owlets are always hungry. They will eat their own weight in food every night, and more, if they can get it. A case is on record where a half grown owl was given all the mice it could eat. It swallowed eight, one after the other. The rapid digestion of birds of prey is shown by the fact that in three hours the little glutton was ready for a second meal and swallowed four more mice. If this can be done by a single bird, what effect must a whole family of owls have on the vermin of a community?

It would be difficult to point out a more useful bird than the barn owl in any farming country. Like many other birds, it deserves the fullest protection, but man is often its worst enemy.—American Birds.

Game of Pictures.

A large paper curtain is hung up near the end of the room. There are square holes in it, gilded around the edges like picture frames. Half of the players go in back of the curtain and each puts his or her head in a frame.

The rest are seated in front of the curtain, and each takes it in turn to criticise the pictures. As soon as a picture laughs he or she must immediately withdraw his or her head from the frame. When all the pictures are gone it is the other side's turn. The two that keep up longest on either side receive a prize.

Unique Tablecloth.

When a southeast wind is blowing the visitor to Cape Town is treated to a peculiar and interesting natural phenomenon, for under such conditions Table mountain, in the language of the natives, "puts on a tablecloth."

In other words, the thin line of fleecy cloud forming above it descends until it rests flat upon the mountain top, with its edges drooping gracefully over its sides. It is really not unlike the article of household use which gives it its name.

Easy & Practical Home Dress Making Lessons

Prepared Especially For This Newspaper by Pictorial Review

FOR THE WEARY TRAVELLER.

This pullman robe, with bag to match, is a comfortable adjunct to the travelling outfit and is made for ladies and misses.

If to the pleasure of travelling there is added a maximum of personal comfort the benefit is largely increased. Something new, chic and serviceable is this pullman robe and bag made of twilled silk. Pongee is also serviceable. The robe has long, one-piece raglan sleeves, which may be gathered at the wrist or finished with a flare. A novel possibility of these sleeves is concealed pockets, for which, however, the short, loose sleeve must be used. In medium size the outfit requires 8 yards 36-inch material. The hood may be omitted, but it is an excellent thing to protect the hair.

The home dressmaker will find this model well within her capabilities. Because of the importance of properly cutting out the robe today's dressmaking lesson will be confined to this feature. Take an open width of material, double (not fold) it, so that two right or two wrong sides will face each other. Then along the selvage edge nearest the cutter place the underfacing and follow with the pocket (to the right). Just above the underfacing the bag and hood can be laid and above these the front. A little to the right of the front is arranged the sleeve. When these sections are cut they will be in duplicate and ready for sewing. For the back, take a fold of the material and place the pattern (the back is perforated with letter B) on a lengthwise fold. Where the pattern tapers off toward the shoulder there is room left for the neckband, sleeveband and piecing for the back.

For shorter length robe there are single and double "oo" perforations on the lower edge of the underfacing, front and back.

No trimming other than self-covered buttons is necessary for the robe. A fancy ornament may be used to fasten the bag.

deep crown of silk eponge, has a velvet brim and a band of moire ribbon jauntily held at both sides by a novel satin button. This hat is especially smart for the business woman.

Again Petticoats.

The smart petticoat for wear with sport skirts is of kersey silk in vivid stripes. These petticoats have a good flare at the ankle, but at the hip they are attached to a smoothly fitting yoke, and the edge is finished simply with a deep hem, no ruffles or flounces breaking the smooth, trim line. For golf and all other out of door sports they are ideal, since their silk texture is so beautifully light and the flare at the foot prevents their clinging about the limbs in active exercise. Tailored skirts call for more elaborate petticoats, and those of pussy willow taffeta, with scant ruffles put on with cording, are the most distinctive sort. All petticoats measure two and a half to three yards at the edge now, and some of the more elaborate dancing petticoats of lace own to five and even six yards of width.

A Party Bag.

Have you ever gone to a party and faced the problem of where to put your handkerchief? Party dresses as a rule are not provided with pockets. A girdle is a dangerous hiding place for a handkerchief if one desires to keep the handkerchief. A pretty finish to such a costume, as well as a serviceable finishing feature, is one of those dainty little bags just large enough to hold a glove, handkerchief and vanity box. They are made of silk and figured satin and slipped on a ribbon which hangs on the wrist.

HIS EXHIBIT FREE.

Minneapolis Youth Shows Miniature Railroad Device at Fair.

Minneapolis, Minn.—For the first time in the history of the state fair the management has given free exhibition space to an exhibitor in order to have him show his product on the ground. Walter F. Hines, a boy who lives at 2543 Jefferson street, N. E., Minneapolis, is the exhibitor.

Hines has made a miniature locomotive engine, and in the back yard of his parents' home he has a track that runs around the edges of the yard. It is completely equipped with semaphores and block signals.

"I have always loved to make things with my hands," Hines said. "People think it would be a lot of work to make it, when, as a matter of fact, I had more fun making it than I have had since it was completed, playing with it."

To Remove Cotter Pins.

While removing cotter pins is generally considered more or less of an easy matter, repair men can learn something new, says Blacksmith and Wheelwright. One of the best methods of getting an ordinary pin out of its hole is to grasp it in the jaws of a pair of pliers and use a hammer to pound the pliers. This is a very effective way and is used by nearly all good repair men.

Another method is to use a drift pin or large nail. Put this through the hole of a cotter and strike it with the hammer. Sometimes the pin may be removed with the drift or nail, using the latter as a lever.

Removing Putty Stains.

Putty purchased from a dealer is usually in a soft and oily state, and the amateur glazier soon finds his hands, as well as the tools, plentifully smeared after the job is finished. Removing this from the hands with the putty knife or a stick is very tedious, but if a bunch of fine excelsior is used the putty will be removed quickly and thoroughly.

A Hint For Motorists.

The motorist should give special care to seeing that the mud guard beneath the engine and gearing is kept free of volatile oil, for the reason that at any time a little gasoline might get in with it and start a fire.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Open Air Exercise.

"Walk, walk, walk!" urged Benjamin Franklin. The United States public health service gives the same advice in a bulletin addressed particularly to persons who are more than forty years old. "Take daily exercise," says the bulletin. "Have a hobby that gets you out of doors. Walk to your business or to your dressmaker. Walk just for the sake of walking. Join a walking club and keep your weekly score of miles. Keep chickens, make a garden, play golf—anything to get two hours of outdoor exercise every day." The advice is not new, but it is sound and useful.

TRIED TO BE POLITE.

And Now He Vows That He Will Never Again Beg Pardon.

Jones had just trod on the toe of an old gentleman, after getting into the street car.

"I beg your pardon," he said.

"Hey? Speak louder. I'm a trifle deaf."

"I beg your pardon," repeated Jones.

"H'm! Peggy starving? Well, I'm sorry. Who's Peggy?"

Jones was red in the face now, and the other passengers began to take notice.

"You misunderstand, sir!" he shouted.

"Hey?"

"You misunderstood!"

"Miss Underwood, is she? Peggy, who is starving, is Miss Underwood? Well?"

"I didn't say anything about Miss Underwood!" screamed Jones. "I begged your pardon, and you misunderstood."

"Oh, now I see!" said the old man sympathetically. "It is your Aunt Peggy who is starving—Miss Underwood. Well, why don't you report the case at once to the police?"—Pearson's Weekly.

The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

HOMEMADE SIRUPS.

IN making jelly or preserves the thrifty housewife saves the extra cupful of juice or fruit, adds more sugar and water and bottles it as a homemade sirup. Peach, plum, currant, blackberry and raspberry all yield most flavorful liquids. Indeed, one of the best ways in which to use up imperfect fruit or the leftovers which will not keep is to stew them rapidly, strain, add sugar and water and bottle, using the bottles with metal caps or the ordinary bottle or quart jar.

Ginger, mint and cloves are all hot weather seasonings. They can be combined with simple sirups, with iced tea or any of the carbonated waters, vichy, etc. The use of these bottled waters is growing in the home, as iced tea with vichy or fruit sirups with seltzer have a piquant tang that refreshes the heat weary body.

Ways of Using Fruit Juice.

Fruit salads are always welcome, and all practical buyers know that the best fruiterers reduce prices of specimens that are a trifle blemished, but quite good enough for cutting up into a salad. Melon salad with cherries is novel and exceedingly good. Gooseberries may be served in many ways. Here is a new way of serving pears: The pears are cut in half and the center is scooped out; then the hollow is filled with creamed Camembert cheese with a dash of chopped parsley, the dish being afterward chilled on the ice. Peaches, chilled and having the halves filled with vanilla ice cream, quickly rolled in chopped almonds and served with iced raspberry sirup, are delicious morsels.

Grape Juice.

With ten pounds of grapes use three pounds of sugar. Pick over, wash and drain the grapes well. Weigh them and put in a porcelain lined kettle with one cupful of water. Set over the fire and as soon as they burst mash them through a sieve and strain through cheesecloth. Return to stove, add sugar, simmer twenty minutes and bottle at once in bottles which have been previously heated. Set the bottles in a pan of water while filling. Do not put in all the sugar at once. Sometimes it is too much, but it depends on the grapes.

Harmony House

The "Good Angel" of the Home

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Harmony House dwelt in the midst of pleasant green lawns, noble trees and many scattered flower beds.

The rooms were arranged in suits of three small bedrooms, bath and sitting room, and to each suit the management allotted three "guests" of the house—spinsters of fifty and over and indigent childless widows.

This "home," with its annual fee of $50 each, assured the inmates a home for life provided peace dwelt within its walls. In case of dissension the malefactor must bid farewell to Harmony House forever.

And Harmony House had been the gift of Miss Keziah Todd, a peace loving spinster of ample means.

Her portrait hung over the high mantelpiece in the front hall and gazed benignantly down upon the guests of Harmony House, whose lives she had tried to brighten while her own faded away into another world.

It was March, and there was a hint of spring in the sharp air, even though the snow lay eight inches deep over lawns, fields and highway.

Five o'clock of a March afternoon, and twenty-four guests of Harmony House gathered in the general sitting room on the first floor. Promptly at 6 Hepsy Biddle, the housekeeper, would announce supper, and if it wasn't Hepsy Biddle it would be one of the waitresses. Anyway, some one would ring the supper bell.

"I hope it's Hepsy. I want to ask her about the new lady who came this afternoon," fussed Mrs. Bennett.

"I saw her," remarked Alicia Pearson—"small and scrawny, like a little canary."

Some one laughed.

A sharp voice broke in from the doorway, a strange voice, the voice of the newcomer.

"I can tell you I don't sing like a canary!" it snapped. "And I don't cackle like a hen or titter like a guinea hen! Oh, good evening, Mrs. Biddle!"

Over the tiny form of the irate newcomer Hepsy Biddle loomed like an angel of peace.

"Why, Miss Olivia, I didn't know you had arrived! Did some one show you your room?"

"The girl did," said Olivia Ladd. "And she said it was most supper time, so I came down."

"That's right. Make yourself at home. I'll introduce you to your roommates, and they can introduce you to the rest."

Hepsy led Olivia up to Alicia Pearson and Ellen Smith.

They both bowed and said, "Pleased to meet you." And Olivia stared hard at them and said pertly:

"Pleased to meet you, I'm sure!"

Hepsy drifted away toward the kitchen, and Olivia was left in the middle of the sitting room, with forty-eight eyes focused on her sprightly little form.

Olivia Ladd wore a black cashmere skirt, made narrow in the latest mode. She wore black high heeled slippers, with silver buckles, and a white shirt waist with a sailor collar that showed a stringy little throat that was quivering more than its owner would admit.

Olivia's pale sandy hair was coiled in two small flat circles behind her ears. Her blue eyes had a strained look, and there were hard little lines around her nose and mouth.

Not one of the women present dreamed that Olivia Ladd had reached what appeared to her a haven of refuge.

For thirty years she had been a dressmaker, out by the day, and, having considered long and carefully how to invest her savings, she had been sent to the management of Harmony House.

"I'm going to do nothing for weeks and weeks," Olivia had promised herself. So she fixed up her wardrobe and felt a sense of triumph in descending upon the rural inmates of Harmony House in the glory of up to date clothes.

"I shall never make clothes for any one except myself," was another promise Olivia had made. She felt rather forlorn in the midst of the women, and for one instant she longed for her tiny room in the crowded city.

But the old fighting spirit was in her, and she tossed her head and remarked pleasantly:

"I suppose there's a chair for me, but I don't seem to see it."

Mrs. Mattie Jones laughed good naturedly.

"It's right behind me, Miss Ladd. I'm so fat that I shut off all the view. Here, Miss Ambler, shove that chair around for Miss Ladd. Now, you sit down by me and tell me all the news from the city."

Olivia thanked Mrs. Jones and took the chair. She told her about the snow blockade on the city streets, about the near accident on the railroad and finally how she had dropped a cherished plant—a rose geranium—on the station platform and had seen it crushed to atoms by a heavy baggage truck.

She spoke of the latest and most thrilling news of the war, the sinking of ships by submarines, news which seemingly had not come to the ears of good natured, laughing Mrs. Jones. After the usual questions and exclamations of horror she passed on to other news.

"Never mind, my dear," reassured Mrs. Jones, patting Olivia's hand. "I've got two rose geraniums, all budded. My plant was so big that I divided it, thinking maybe some one would like one of them. I guess I was saving it for you!"

"You are very kind. I shall like you so much," said Olivia warmly, and the two women went out to supper in a glow of good feeling.

During the meal Olivia talked to some of the other women and liked it—all except Ellen Smith and Alicia Pearson, who shared the same suit with the newcomer.

"It's just my luck," thought Olivia forlornly. "I wish I had shared some rooms with Mattie Jones or that Miss Ambler."

The evening passed quickly with fancy work, conversation and music from a large phonograph.

At 10 o'clock Mattie Jones got up and said good night. Her departure was the signal for a general exodus, and as the women went out Olivia's bright eyes had inventoried each one's appearance and found it wanting in style. Their skirts were too full, their shirtwaists were out of date and all of them wore either black or white—most trying of all tints to one who is no longer young.

"I don't wonder they look cranky," said Olivia as she went up to her room. "What they need are cheerful clothes to liven them up. Take Mrs. Jones, with her white hair. She would look sweet in pink, like Mrs. Judge Latimer used to wear."

Olivia passed through the tiny hall that led to her room.

Miss Pearson and Ellen Smith were in adjoining rooms talking to each other while they prepared for bed.

"It may be the style," Ellen was saying, "but I don't think it's proper to wear skirts that tight."

"Oh, pshaw!" retorted Alicia Pearson. "Seems as if I'd relish a skirt that didn't blow out like a balloon."

"Alicia! Would you wear such a tight skirt?" demanded Ellen in a horrified tone.

"I'd wear anything different," retorted Alicia recklessly. "I'm sick of looking so old and middle aged."

"You can't help it. You are middle aged," snapped back Ellen. "I suppose you'd like to wear your hair in two little coils behind your ears," she sneered.

"I'm trying it that way now," said Alicia coolly.

"Let me see! Alicia Pearson, if you don't look like the old Nick!" gasped Ellen.

At that moment Olivia appeared in the door. She wore a low necked lace trimmed nightgown, and there was a giddy little blue bow at the throat and on each apology for a sleeve. Her ginger colored hair was neatly braided and tied with blue ribbons.

"I thought I'd like to say good night to some one," she said rather timidly. "I've lived alone in a boarding house for so many years, and when I thought of coming here I kept thinking it would be like home—so many lonesome women glad to get together."

"Good land!" gasped amazed Ellen.

"Come in and sit down," invited Alicia. "I'm trying to do my hair like yours. How do you manage it?"

Olivia showed her. Then Ellen's scanty gray locks were brushed into a fluffy mass on top of her head instead of its usual tight knot.

They fell to exchanging confidences, and finally they talked about clothes. Olivia was in her glory.

Then she gave them her confidence and told the story of her weary years at dressmaking and how being able to alter their clothes would be a pleasure instead of a drudgery.

Long after the lights were out and each woman was in her narrow bed they continued to talk back and forth until Hepsy Biddle knocked on the door for quiet.

The next morning Olivia formed a sewing club. Every member of Harmony House joined at once. They gathered about the newcomer with workbaskets and out of date garments, and Olivia showed them how to alter and make over gowns and coats and hats.

"You'll wear yourself out, Miss Olivia," expostulated Hepsy Biddle one day.

"I never was so happy in my life," returned Olivia. "We have such good times sewing together, Miss Biddle, and it's like one big family here. Seems like they're all my sisters and they need me. That's the happiest thought of all."

Hepsy nodded.

"I suppose some folks would say clothes making was a sin, but I say anything that brings joy and peace to lonely hearts is all right. And quarrels mostly begin through idleness. So I think if Miss Todd was only here she'd shake hands with you and say you were the good angel of Harmony House. They've stopped squabbling, thank goodness."

Olivia blushed to the roots of her gingery hair.

"I'm so happy I don't know what to do," half sobbed Olivia as she ran down the steps of Harmony House.

"I think they're calling you to come over and play croquet," said Hepsy, with twinkling eyes, for the lawn of Harmony House was sprinkled with all the members of the big family. They walked freely in the grass and swung their mallets with vigor.

Their remodeled gowns may have been entirely inappropriate to sober middle age, and the freakish coiffures may have seemed ridiculous, but they were entirely happy.

NOVA SCOTIA'S NEW LABOR LAW

Important Features of Workmen's Compensation Act.

AFTER five years of agitation and education by the labor men of Nova Scotia, there has been placed upon the statute books of the province a workmen's compensation act which is regarded as the most advanced labor legislation ever enacted in Nova Scotia, and pronounced by some as superior to many compensation acts and excelled by none.

One of the most important features of the act is the principle of collective liability in substitution for the old principle of individual liability. This practically means a system of state insurance. The industries will be divided into groups, regulated as regards similarity in the nature of their work, or the hazards in connection therewith. Each class will contribute to the accident fund a sufficient sum each year to pay cost resulting from accidents occurring in the group to which they are attached. Assessments are made upon percentage of pay rolls. The fund is administered by the compensation board, which has large powers under the act. The province defrays the expenses of the board, which will consist of three members.

The new act differs from the old in every respect. The greatest amount payable under the old law was $1,500. The new act provides for the injured workman during his disability, even if it lasts his lifetime. Litigation is abolished, thus doing away with agents, adjusters, lawyers, stockholders or any third parties, who represent only a waste. Compensation will not be paid where disability lasts less than seven days, but if it lasts longer, compensation will date from time of injury.

The scale of compensation is regulated as follows: During the entire period of total disability resulting from an accident the workman is entitled to a weekly or monthly payment equal to 55 per cent of his average earnings before the accident. In case of partial disability he is entitled to 55 per cent of the difference between what he has earned before the accident and what he earns or can earn in suitable employment after the accident.

The maximum sum of yearly earnings upon which payments are computed is $1,200. Workmen earning more than this sum are within the act, but their compensation in case of accident is based on the established maximum of $100 per month.

Where death results and the workman leaves a widow, but no children, the widow is entitled to a monthly payment of $20 until her death or remarriage. In event of remarriage the sum of two years' payments is given her. If the dependents are a widow and children, in addition to payments to widow $5 per month shall be paid for each child under sixteen years, the maximum payment not exceeding $40 in all. If dependents are children only, payments are $10 per month for each child under sixteen, but not more than $40 in all. Payments are provided for the dependents (father, mother, etc.) who are not included in foregoing. Payments are provided for loss of fingers, etc.

In return for advantages of the act the statutory rights of the workman are taken away. This will do away with court expenses and unnecessary delay in payment of compensation besides giving assurance to the employer that all he will be called upon to pay will be his proportionate cost of the accident happening in the group of industries to which he is attached.—Typographical Journal.

Chairman Walsh Praised.

The attempt to discredit Chairman Walsh of the industrial relations commission because of his vigorous cross examination of John D. Rockefeller, Jr., was answered by the Unitarian fellowship of social justice at Boston, which passed the following resolution: "Resolved, That the Unitarian fellowship of social justice sends its greeting to the Hon. Frank Walsh, chairman of the United States commission on industrial relations, and rejoices in his wisdom and courage in pursuing a relentless investigation of the Rockefeller interests and the Colorado strike."

OF INTEREST TO LABOR.

In the state of New York 2,000 department store girls receive less than $8 a week.

Colorado is the latest addition to the states having workingmen's compensation laws.

The street car strike in Chicago involved about 14,500 men, mostly motormen and conductors.

J. B. Butler, steel manufacturer and president of the Bessemer Pig Iron association, believes a vital problem confronting the iron and steel industries is a threatened shortage of labor.

Union plasterers of Boston have presented a schedule calling for 45 cents an hour, payment of car fare for out of town work and an allowance of $3 a week for board, time and a half for Saturday afternoon work and double time for night work.

This attractive maternity wrap is featured in black faille silk, but broadcloth or gaberdine would be equally suitable. If silk is preferred a lining will add to this garment's comfort.

SEEK NAMES OF RETIRED MEN.

Navy Wants to Register All Available Supernumerary Officers.

As a part of the program of preparedness for war, the navy department has instituted, through the bureau of navigation, an inquiry regarding the commissioned personnel on the naval retired list to ascertain how many retired officers would be available in time of need either to take duty on warships or in navy yards and stations. The inquiry includes the retired officers of the Marine corps as well as of the navy.

Hereafter the bureau of navigation will keep two lists of officers available for duty in time of war. On one list will appear the names of those of the active list, and on the other the names of those who have been retired. It is understood that this classification does not apply to those officers who have been retired for age. The inquiry goes out to officers who have retired voluntarily, who have been "plucked," or who have been retired for some physical disability which might not stand in the way of performing some special line of duty required somewhere in the naval establishment in time of hostilities.

Big Bonus For Workers.

Twenty-five hundred of the employees of the Alexander Smith & Son carpet works of Yonkers, N. Y., opened their pay envelopes on Sept. 1 and found bonus checks therein, the ninth experience of the kind in four and a half years. These employees received $[illegible],000, making $613,000 in all that has been distributed to them since the bonus plan has been in vogue at the works.

Each employee who has been in the employ of the company for ten years or more received a bonus check for 10 per cent of his last six months' salary, and each employee who has been in the employ of the company for more than five years, but less than ten years, received a bonus check for 5 per cent of his last six months' salary.

Garment Workers May Strike.

A general strike of clothing workers, involving 200,000 in Baltimore, Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, Rochester, St. Louis, Cincinnati and Milwaukee, is contemplated, it was stated at a recent meeting of the executive council of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America at Baltimore. The council authorized the Chicago workers to make their demands for a forty-eight hour week and higher wages. In the event the manufacturers refuse, a general strike, involving 50,000 workers in Chicago, will be called within six weeks, at the beginning of the busy season.

YOUNG FOLKS' CORNER

An Apple "Stunt."

When you wish to mystify and amuse one of your friends try the trick of cutting an apple into quarters without apparently breaking the skin. It is so old a trick that it will probably be quite new to many of the people you know.

Select a large red apple. Thread a long, slender darning needle with about a yard of strong white linen thread and, beginning near the stem of the apple, take a shallow stitch an inch or so in length toward the blow end.

Draw about two-thirds of the thread through, and be careful to make the break in the skin as small as possible, and when you take the second stitch set the needle exactly in the place out of which it came. Sew entirely round the apple to the opposite side of the stem from where you started.

Now, hold the apple firmly between your knees and, crossing the ends of the thread, take one in each hand and give a strong, steady pull. The thread will cut its way through the fruit and come free in your hand. Repeat the process, beginning again at the stem, but going at right angles to the first cut.

When your friend peels the fruit she will find it neatly quartered. The small punctures that your needle makes in the skin will pass unnoticed, unless the apple is very closely examined.—Youth's Companion.

Jumbled Animals.

To make the game of animals interesting about four persons should play. Of course, the more persons the better the game.

Say, if six persons play, write on six slips of paper the name of an animal—that is, a different animal on each slip, but change the letters all around. For instance, if one animal was to be monkey it should be changed like this: komeyn (2), or if it were hyena it should be changed like this: eynah (3).

Give each one a slip and a pencil, and also a larger piece of paper. The slips should be numbered—that is, from 1 to 6, when six play. Then on the larger slip have numbers from 1 to 6. Then tell the players to pin their slips to their waists or coats. Then each one must go around to each player and try to guess the name of the animal on his or her slip. Each player must guess his own too. When they have guessed the animal they must write the name of it alongside of the corresponding number on the large sheet. For instance, if 3 was donkey they would write donkey alongside of No. 3. Time the players, giving about twenty minutes if six play and more time for more people. At the end of the allotted time the one having the most names correct should receive a prize.

The Useful Owl.

A family of barn owls will number from three to seven birds. It is hard to believe what an amount of vermin a family of owls will consume. An old owl will capture as much food as a dozen cats in a night, or more. The owlets are always hungry. They will eat their own weight in food every night, and more, if they can get it. A case is on record where a half grown owl was given all the mice it could eat. It swallowed eight, one after the other. The rapid digestion of birds of prey is shown by the fact that in three hours the little glutton was ready for a second meal and swallowed four more mice. If this can be done by a single bird, what effect must a whole family of owls have on the vermin of a community?

It would be difficult to point out a more useful bird than the barn owl in any farming country. Like many other birds, it deserves the fullest protection, but man is often its worst enemy.—American Birds.

Game of Pictures.

A large paper curtain is hung up near the end of the room. There are square holes in it, gilded around the edges like picture frames. Half of the players go in back of the curtain and each puts his or her head in a frame.

The rest are seated in front of the curtain, and each takes it in turn to criticise the pictures. As soon as a picture laughs he or she must immediately withdraw his or her head from the frame. When all the pictures are gone it is the other side's turn. The two that keep up longest on either side receive a prize.

Unique Tablecloth.

When a southeast wind is blowing the visitor to Cape Town is treated to a peculiar and interesting natural phenomenon, for under such conditions Table mountain, in the language of the natives, "puts on a tablecloth."

In other words, the thin line of fleecy cloud forming above it descends until it rests flat upon the mountain top, with its edges drooping gracefully over its sides. It is really not unlike the article of household use which gives it its name.

Easy & Practical Home Dress Making Lessons

Prepared Especially For This Newspaper by Pictorial Review

FOR THE WEARY TRAVELLER.

This pullman robe, with bag to match, is a comfortable adjunct to the travelling outfit and is made for ladies and misses.

If to the pleasure of travelling there is added a maximum of personal comfort the benefit is largely increased. Something new, chic and serviceable is this pullman robe and bag made of twilled silk. Pongee is also serviceable. The robe has long, one-piece raglan sleeves, which may be gathered at the wrist or finished with a flare. A novel possibility of these sleeves is concealed pockets, for which, however, the short, loose sleeve must be used. In medium size the outfit requires 8 yards 36-inch material. The hood may be omitted, but it is an excellent thing to protect the hair.

The home dressmaker will find this model well within her capabilities. Because of the importance of properly cutting out the robe today's dressmaking lesson will be confined to this feature. Take an open width of material, double (not fold) it, so that two right or two wrong sides will face each other. Then along the selvage edge nearest the cutter place the underfacing and follow with the pocket (to the right). Just above the underfacing the bag and hood can be laid and above these the front. A little to the right of the front is arranged the sleeve. When these sections are cut they will be in duplicate and ready for sewing. For the back, take a fold of the material and place the pattern (the back is perforated with letter B) on a lengthwise fold. Where the pattern tapers off toward the shoulder there is room left for the neckband, sleeveband and piecing for the back.

For shorter length robe there are single and double "oo" perforations on the lower edge of the underfacing, front and back.

No trimming other than self-covered buttons is necessary for the robe. A fancy ornament may be used to fasten the bag.

A NEW SAILOR.

This Hat Shows How Even Sailors Have a Tendency to Climb.

Whatever is yet uncertain about the coming hat, its height is surely increasing. This good model, with a deep crown of silk eponge, has a velvet brim and a band of moire ribbon jauntily held at both sides by a novel satin button. This hat is especially smart for the business woman.

Again Petticoats.

The smart petticoat for wear with sport skirts is of kersey silk in vivid stripes. These petticoats have a good flare at the ankle, but at the hip they are attached to a smoothly fitting yoke, and the edge is finished simply with a deep hem, no ruffles or flounces breaking the smooth, trim line. For golf and all other out of door sports they are ideal, since their silk texture is so beautifully light and the flare at the foot prevents their clinging about the limbs in active exercise. Tailored skirts call for more elaborate petticoats, and those of pussy willow taffeta, with scant ruffles put on with cording, are the most distinctive sort. All petticoats measure two and a half to three yards at the edge now, and some of the more elaborate dancing petticoats of lace own to five and even six yards of width.

A Party Bag.

Have you ever gone to a party and faced the problem of where to put your handkerchief? Party dresses as a rule are not provided with pockets. A girdle is a dangerous hiding place for a handkerchief if one desires to keep the handkerchief. A pretty finish to such a costume, as well as a serviceable finishing feature, is one of those dainty little bags just large enough to hold a glove, handkerchief and vanity box. They are done in silk and figured satin and shirred on a ribbon which hangs on the wrist.

HIS EXHIBIT FREE.

Minneapolis Youth Shows Miniature Railroad Device at Fair.

Minneapolis, Minn.—For the first time in the history of the state fair the management has given free exhibition space to an exhibitor in order to have him show his product on the ground. Walter F. Hines, a boy who lives at 2543 Jefferson street, N. E., Minneapolis, is the exhibitor.

Hines has made a miniature locomotive engine, and in the back yard of his parents' home he has a track that runs around the edges of the yard. It is completely equipped with semaphores and block signals.

"I have always loved to make things with my hands," Hines said. "People think it would be a lot of work to make it, when, as a matter of fact, I had more fun making it than I have had since it was completed, playing with it."

To Remove Cotter Pins.

While removing cotter pins is generally considered more or less of an easy matter, repair men can learn something new, says Blacksmith and Wheelwright. One of the best methods of getting an ordinary pin out of its hole is to grasp it in the jaws of a pair of pliers and use a hammer to pound the pliers. This is a very effective way and is used by nearly all good repair men.

Another method is to use a drift pin or large nail. Put this through the hole of a cotter and strike it with the hammer. Sometimes the pin may be removed with the drift or nail, using the latter as a lever.

Removing Putty Stains.

Putty purchased from a dealer is usually in a soft and oily state, and the amateur glazier soon finds his hands, as well as the tools, plentifully smeared after the job is finished. Removing this from the hands with the putty knife or a stick is very tedious, but if a bunch of fine excelsior is used the putty will be removed quickly and thoroughly.

A Hint For Motorists.

The motorists should give special care to seeing that the mud guard beneath the engine and gearing is kept free of volatile oil, for the reason that at any time a little gasoline might get in with it and start a fire.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Open Air Exercise.

"Walk, walk, walk!" urged Benjamin Franklin. The United States public health service gives the same advice in a bulletin addressed particularly to persons who are more than forty years old. "Take daily exercise," says the bulletin. "Have a hobby that gets you out of doors. Walk to your business or to your dressmaker. Walk just for the sake of walking. Join a walking club and keep your weekly score of miles. Keep chickens, make a garden, play golf—anything to get two hours of outdoor exercise every day." The advice is not new, but it is sound and useful.

And Now He Vows That He Will Never Again Beg Pardon.

Jones had just trod on the toe of an old gentleman, after getting into the street car.

"I beg your pardon," he said.

"Hey? Speak louder. I'm a trifle deaf."

"I beg your pardon," repeated Jones.

"H'm! Peggy starving? Well, I'm sorry. Who's Peggy?"

Jones was red in the face now, and the other passengers began to take notice.

"You misunderstand, sir!" he shouted.

"Hey?"

"You misunderstood!"

"Miss Underwood, is she? Peggy, who is starving, is Miss Underwood? Well?"

"I didn't say anything about Miss Underwood!" screamed Jones. "I begged your pardon, and you misunderstood."

"Oh, now I see!" said the old man sympathetically. "It is your Aunt Peggy who is starving Miss Underwood. Well, why don't you report the case at once to the police?"—Pearson's Weekly.

The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

HOMEMADE SIRUPS.

In making jelly or preserves the thrifty housewife saves the extra cupful of juice or fruit, adds more sugar and water and bottles it as a homemade sirup. Peach, plum, currant, blackberry and raspberry all yield most flavorful liquids. Indeed, one of the best ways in which to use up imperfect fruit or the leftovers which will not keep is to stew them rapidly, strain, add sugar and water and bottle, using the bottles with metal caps or the ordinary bottle or quart jar.

Ginger, mint and cloves are all hot weather seasonings. They can be combined with simple sirups, with iced tea or any of the carbonated waters, vichy, etc. The use of these bottled waters is growing in the home, as iced tea with vichy or fruit sirups with seltzer have a piquant tang that refreshes the heat weary body.

Ways of Using Fruit Juice.

Fruit salads are always welcome, and all practical buyers know that the best fruiterers reduce prices of specimens that are a trifle blemished, but quite good enough for cutting up into a salad. Melon salad with cherries is novel and exceedingly good. Gooseberries may be served in many ways. Here is a new way of serving pears: The pears are cut in half and the center is scooped out; then the hollow is filled with creamed Camembert cheese with a dash of chopped parsley, the dish being afterward chilled on the ice. Peaches, chilled and having the halves filled with vanilla ice cream, quickly rolled in chopped almonds and served with iced raspberry sirup, are a delicious morsel.

Grape Juice.

With ten pounds of grapes use three pounds of sugar. Pick over, wash and drain the grapes well. Weigh them and put in a porcelain lined kettle with one cupful of water. Set over the fire and as soon as they burst mash them through a sieve and strain through cheesecloth. Return to stove, add sugar, simmer twenty minutes and bottle at once in bottles which have been previously heated. Set the bottles in a pan of water while filling. Do not put in all the sugar at once. Sometimes it is too much, but it depends on the grapes.

FARM BUREAU WORK DISCUSSED

State Leader Here This Afternoon, the Object Being to Lay Tentative Plans for 1916.

Professor M. C. Burrett, State Leader of Farm Bureaus, and E. Victor Underwood, manager of the Oswego County Farm Bureau, met with members of the executive committee of ... County Farm Bureau and representatives of the Grange, Agricultural Division of the Chamber of Commerce and delegates from neighboring sections of the county, at the Chamber of Commerce rooms this afternoon. The matter of properly distributing farm bureau work in 1916 was discussed.

Prof. Burritt and Mr. Underwood will discuss the same problems at two other meetings tomorrow, the first to be held at 10 a. m. in the Court House in Pulaski, and the second at 1:30 p. m. in the Grange Hall in Central Square.

Those who were present today expressed the belief that such meetings would result in a greater appreciation of the work being done by the County Farm Bureau.

SCHUMANN-HEINK SAYS SHE'S HAPPY

Chicago, Ill.—Mme. Schumann-Heink is happy for the first time in years, she said today. as she can go about her work with a light heart. The Appellate Court today affirmed the divorce decree granted to her from William Rapp, Jr.

"I am so happy," she said, "to think that I will be troubled no more by that man. Why, don't you know that for the last few years I have done nothing but watch for some new development of trouble from that source Now I can cook and sew and sit and look out the window or do anything I please.

"All my life I have had troubles. I have been happy, too, but always there was trouble. In spite of it all I have always tried to love my neighbors and bring up my children to be real men and women.

EXCHANGE TO PREVENT RECKLESS TRADING

New York.—Two important steps were taken yesterday in Wall Street to discourage reckless trading in stock by persons of small means. The first of these was taken by odd lot dealers on the New York Stock Exchange, who decided to add an additional one-eighth of one per cent. to the buying price of stocks in odd lots, thereby making the cost to the small speculator one-quarter of one per cent. above the prevailing market quotation.

The second was taken by the New York Stock Exchange, which after a special meeting of the governing committee, issued a notice to its 1,100 members calculated to prevent trading in stocks on narrow margins. This latter action was influenced also by the custom that has become prevalent among small speculators of "pyramiding" their profits in war stocks, thereby causing expansion of brokers' loans and increasing the danger of a collapse.

CHAMP CLARK HELPS TO FOIL LYNCHERS

Bowling Green, Mo.—For the second time, Mrs. W. P. Hawkins, wife of the Sheriff of Pike county, saved the life of Harrison Rose, a negro prisoner charged with murder, by parleying with a mob which invaded the Pike county jail yesterday, enabling the sheriff to form a posse of citizens.

The posse of fifty armed men, among whom were Champ Clark, Speaker of the National House of Representatives and his son, Bennett, arrived at the jail a few minutes after the mob had fled. A month ago the sheriff's wife similarly held off a mob until the mayor and prosecuting attorney arrived. Rose, the negro, is charged with the killing of a farmer with a pitch fork.

Germany Disavows Sinking of Arabic to Pay for U. S. Lives

Following is the text of the letter on the Arabic case which was handed to Secretary Lansing by Count von Bernstorff, the German Ambassador:

"My Dear Mr. Secretary:

"Prompted by the desire to reach a satisfactory agreement with regard to the Arabic incident, my government has given me the following instructions:

"The orders issued by His Majesty the Emperor to the commanders of the German submarines—of which I notified you on previous occasions—has been made so stringent that the recurrence of incidents similar to the Arabic case is considered out of the question.

"According to the report of Commander Schneider of the submarine which sank the Arabic and his affidavit, as well as those of his men, Commander Schneider was convinced that the Arabic intended to ram the submarine.

"On the other hand, the Imperial Government does not doubt the good faith of the affidavit of the British officers of the Arabic, according to which the Arabic did not intend to ram the submarine.

"The attack of the submarine was undertaken against the instructions issued to the commander. The Imperial Government regrets and disavows the act, and has notified Commander Schneider accordingly.

"Under these circumstances my government is prepared to pay an indemnity for American lives which, to its deep regret, have been lost on the Arabic. I am authorized to negotiate with you about the amount of this indemnity.

"I remain, My Dear Lansing, yours, very sincerely,
(Signed) "J. VON BERNSTORFF."

Allies Ignore Protest Made By Constantine

London.—Bulgaria has utterly disregarded the Russian ultimatum that expired at 4 o'clock this afternoon, instead of Monday afternoon, as mistakenly reported yesterday.

King Ferdinand apparently has irrevocably allied himself with the Central Powers.

Actual hostilities will depend on the next move of Bulgaria. The allied troops that have been mobilized will be put in motion, while their fleets in the Aegean and the Black Seas will assume their appointed tasks.

Rome.—Reports from Sofia state that the Russian ultimatum to Bulgaria produced real alarm in political and official circles.

The king is conferring continually with his Ministers and Parliamentary leaders. There is a desire to accept the note of the Entente and continue negotiations, but it is now too late. Moreover the Russian fleet is blockading the Bulgarian ports on the Black Sea.

A dispatch from Sofia by way of Bucharest to the Corriere della Sera, of Milan, states that the Bulgarian army is now completely in the power of German officers. The Ministry of War and Railways, and the Court are full of German officers, and the King is surrounded only by Germans.

According to this telegram, the King, immediately after his exciting audience with the opposition leaders, telephoned to Premier Radoslavoff.

"What is the Government about if the chiefs of the Opposition are allowed to insult and threaten the King in his own palace? he demanded.

Radoslavoff hastened to the palace and found the King pale and trembling. After a long interview, Radoslavoff convoked his followers and also invited the Opposition to a conference, whereat he announced that Bulgaria had been unable to accept the proposals of the Entente because they were concerned neither with Macedonian nor Greek territories nor with the Dobrudja.

He also announced a military convention with Germany and Austria for the invasion of Serbia, declaring that henceforth it would be impossible for Bulgaria to retrace her steps.

These declarations achieved the desired result. Ghendaieff and his twenty-three colleague remained silent. The other declared that from the moment when the drums sounded and the flags were unfurled every one must gather to the support of the government.

The same day there was a demonstration in the street with the German and Austrian flags.

Great Barge Canal Guard Gate

Guard gate at head of land line between Mohawk and Hudson. Here canal enters Mohawk and remains in it for much of the course to Rome.

ADDING EXPENSE OVER LONG TERM

Reason For Canal Bond Issue Rather Than a Direct Tax on the People.

While the actual construction cost of the barge canal system will not exceed the original estimate of the engineers, extraordinary and unforeseen expenses in the way of consequential damages and the necessity of paying part of the cost of changing railroad bridges increased the amount needed to finish the canal and put it in working order. Approval of the referendum authorizing a bond issue for $27,000,000 will not mean an additional expense upon the taxpayers of the state because the state already is obligated to pay very nearly that amount of money.

These obligations were recognized by the legislature of 1915, and two ways were open to meet them—first, an appropriation from the state treasury, which would necessitate the imposition of a direct tax, and, second, by the issue of bonds the payment of which may be fixed for any time within fifty years.

Recognizing the strong public sentiment against imposing a direct tax for permanent public improvements and in harmony with the previous policy of the state of spreading payments for permanent improvements over a long period of years, adopted that scheme.

Every merchant, every manufacturer, every workingman, every property owner and taxpayers and, in short, all citizens interested in the prosperity of the state and mindful of their own welfare will vote for this referendum on election day, Nov. 2, 1915.

USELESS UNTIL FINISHED.

Every Day's Delay in Completion of Barge Canal System a Direct Loss to State.

The canal referendum, authorizing a bond issue of $27,000,000, to be voted on at the coming election in November, is to provide the money for the completion of the work, so that the large amount already invested in the canal by the state will be made useful, which it cannot be until the whole is complete and navigable from the lakes at Buffalo to the Hudson river at Albany.

Indebtedness already incurred by the state is a major part of the $27,000,000 the people are asked to provide for at this election. If the referendum should not be approved by the people they will be obliged to pay the greater part of the amount by direct taxation, as the obligations cannot be avoided by the state. Under the approval of the referendum the payments will be spread over a long term of years instead of making it necessary to raise so large a sum by direct taxation.

The referendum is in accord with the state's policy of providing for large public projects by bond issue instead of putting an immediate and much heavier burden into direct tax. Much of New York state's commercial supremacy is due to the canal system, and unless the improved canal, already nearly finished, is completed the commerce of the state will suffer an irreparable loss.

PROVIDES FOR EQUIPMENT

Approval of Canal Referendum Means Immediate Benefits.

LOSSES WILL BE STOPPED.

State's Previous Big Investment Useless Until Canals Are Finished and Equipped—Canals a Vital Agency in Promoting Industrial, Agricultural and Commercial Welfare.

Approval of the canal referendum at the election in November will provide funds for the equipment of the entire canal system so that the canals can be put into operation and any further loss of interest on the investment be stopped.

As soon as the great barge canals are put into operation the people will begin to realize the benefits from economical transportation of the products of the fields, the mines, the factories and of general merchandise. That has been the chief economic cause in building up all parts of the state. This must not be lost sight of in determining how to vote on the pending canal referendum.

The direct benefits arising from cheap transportation by water are generally recognized, but the indirect benefits are far greater. As a regulator of transportation rates in this state, whether by water or by rail, its canal system has been of incalculable benefit to all its people. All traffic experts recognize this, and the interstate commerce commission has on more than one occasion called attention to this fact.

The state has within its possession a canal system which in several respects outranks the Panama canal as a vital agency in promoting the industrial, agricultural and commercial welfare of its people. The voters need only to have this brought to their attention to appreciate the importance of voting affirmatively upon the pending canal referendum, which will complete the project and make it useful and serviceable to all classes. But little remains to be done.

Most of the canal construction is already completed. Let us finish the work and put it into operation and realize the benefits that will accrue from this modernized enlarged canal system to all parts of the state.

Do not fail to vote affirmatively on the canal referendum for the bond issue and thus enable the barge canals to be completed and put into operation rather than be delayed and necessitate the legislature making appropriations of funds from the treasury and thereby imposing unnecessary burdens upon the taxpayers for the next few years which will be avoided by the sale of the state's bonds.

The work is nearly completed. Let it be finished as expeditiously as possible and save the commerce of the state, which is already imperiled by its diversion through the Montreal and other routes to the sea.

Vote for the canal referendum.

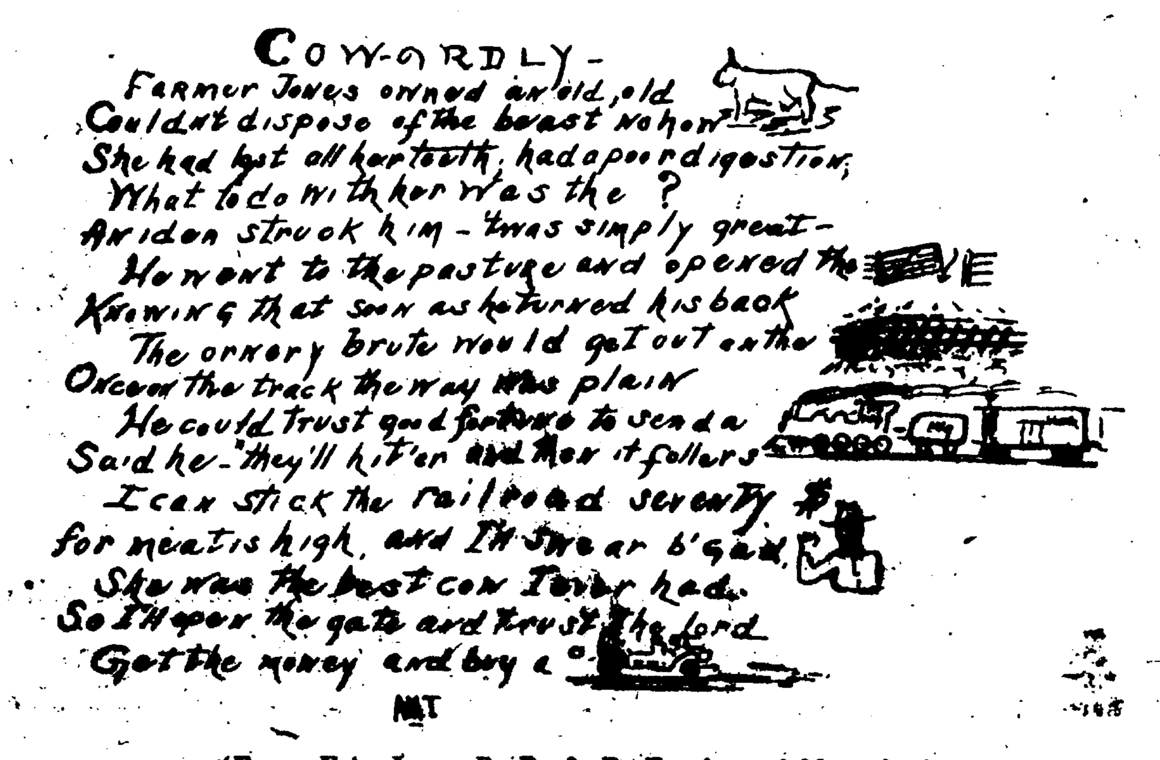
Farmers in Meeting Evince Interest in Establishment of Market Here and in Oswego



(From Feb. Issue B. R. & P. Employers' Magazine.)

A number of representative farmers in the vicinity of Fulton met in the Chamber of Commerce rooms on Wed neaday to discuss the agricultural problems of the county, and to assist Manager Underwood n formulating the program for the coming year.

The Farm Bureau is an agent for the solution of important agricultural problems in the county. The farmers themselves know or ought to know these problems better than anyone else. It is therefore the idea of the Farm Bureau organization that the farmers should formulate the program of the Farm Bureau.

This was the object of the meeting at Fulton on Wednesday. After an outline of the general proposition, those present discussed the various problems of the section and asked the Farm Bureau to take up this work another year. The problem which received most attention was that of the Dairy. It was thought by those present that records of the performance of dairy cows should be secured in order that good and poor cows could be picked out, and that the cost of production may be known. There was some sentiment for the organization of a Breeders' Association which might introduce more fullbred stock.

Alfalfa and Vetch.

Considerable interest was shown in increasing the growth of legumes in the county, and it was thought that it would be a good idea to conduct a lot of demonstrations on the growth of vetch and alfalfa next year. In this connection the use of lime will be encouraged. It was believed by those present thatt he use of lime would be profitable on a majority of Oswego county farms.

Oatsmut.

In view of the benefit secured from the treatment of oat for smut in the county this year it was thought wise to accordingly extend the oatsmut demonstration in the county next year.

Potato Blight.

Losses from potato blight have been very large in the county this year. Many farmers present at the meeting said that the Bureau should take up the problem of spraying potatoes for blight and extend this practice throughout the county. Thousands of bushels of potatoes would have been saved to the farmers of the county and the consumers would have secured a better quality of potatoes at a lower price if this spraying had been done.

There was quite a little sentiment for the establishment of public markets in Fulton and Oswego, and it was urged that the Bureau co-operate with the Chamber of Commerce of these places to secure the establishment and operation of such markets.

Change Government To Make Everybody Work, Says Merchant

(By Andre Boutin.)

Can we forget the winter of 1914, when there was so much notoriety about the unemployed laborers, and during that great excitement the opening of the free employment bureau launched by the money forces which merely served as a dark cloud for that moment and a boom for the newspapers. At that time letters were written to the headquarters that unless the present administration would devise a practical system whereby all the unemployed would be furnished with employment, the bosses of the money forces would build up a mountain which the liberal and progressive people could never tear down. The system proposed was this: That our government buy or build factories to employ the unemployed mechanics, and buy farms on which you could employ the unemployed common laborer.

Then change the law to read that everybody must work, and appoint truant officers such as we have for school children, and when a man was found not at work, claiming he was not able to work he would have to show a certificate from two or more duly appointed physicians for that purpose, that he was not able to work, or some other required excuse permitted by law. Otherwise he would have to work.

Such a system would not only be a great service to the unemployed, but it would serve to stamp out all the tramps and would empty our prisons of two-thirds of the prisoners, as two-thirds of them are those who don't work—and most of them don't want to work. It would make the loafers and thieves good citizens. It would stop the thief from entering by way of the back door while the good citizen is leaving the front door.

Another great improvement would be to stop building cities. We should build up the country instead. It would be a great charity to the poor in larger cities to put one-half of them on the land where everything comes from—where they can amuse themselves in raising their own necessaries of life. But in order to influence the people to cultivate the land the government must first make cultivation the easiest labor and furnish the poor people with the necessary machinery to build and raise the necessities of life. Let us beautify the earth, turn this planet into a garden. It would surely be an act of pure common sense and an act of charity to the whole universe. What would the bosses of the money force (backed by the scarecrow teaching) say? They would be up in arms against such a system. What! furnish the poor with the necessary machinery to build and raise the necessities of life? Nonsense; They would cry, it would be unconstitutional, not lawful, etc., etc. The reply of the good people would be this: If it is constitutional and lawful for the government to furnish the poor laborer with the machinery to destroy property and kill one another, why would it not be more profitable and practical if the government furnished the laborer with the machinery to build and raise the necessities of life and beautify the earth. A fool could see through this clearly. Let the laboring people get together and turn the terrible ignorance of War to Peace. Give us a land of peace, a land of happiness.

When this good system is established then the people will find great happiness. A few words to the reader on this cruel war.

We must not forget that the balance of the power of the world rests upon the heads of the peaceable people of the United States, among whom is our leader, former Secretary of State, Hon. William J. Bryan. We must teach to the whole world that human beings are not here to knife one another for the sake of personal interest, or to carry a point of ambition. We are here for a short visit and should treat each other like brothers and sisters, whether we are born on this or the other side of the iron post, or on the other side of a great body of water. We should all respect and help one another.

War is pure ignorance. After a few years we die and never return. It shows on its face that we are worse than the savage. It also shows that our system of existence is far from perfect, and as long as the world is governed by fancy, hot headed people, so long will war exist, and so long will the burden fall upon the poor laborer, who leaves his dear family behind, usually destitute. He is the one forced to shoulder the gun, to kill and to be killed, and just as long as the fancy class teaches them that it is right, that it is patriotic to fight (murder) for your country, just so long will war reign. What I mean by fancy class are those who live in luxury out of the earnings of others. There is a certain class who claim it is a crime for the poor not to raise families, but they do not claim it is a crime to kill them after they are grown up, and after their dear mother has suffered and shortened her life to raise them. What ignorance to teach these poor people.

Now after all these years of hard labor building up countries, they are now destroying them and causing the death of thousands of mothers and children, and an unlimited amount of suffering to those remaining. Little is said about the thousands of people that are being killed while much is being said about the lucky ones who live and have lived in abundance their whole lifetime, out of the earnings of the same class that are now being murdered by the thousands.

As long as this ignorance lasts, so long will there be war, and as long as the people do not change the world's constitution to read that all the difficulties with other powers be settled by the President, his Cabinet and the two Houses—vice versa with Kings and Queens. Create a disarmament of the whole world. Make it a crime to manufacture arms of any kind, teach the laborers to stop making war machines with which to kill themselves—for they are the people who have to go to war—then there will be no war. Teach the people of the world nature and common sense. Not scarecrow. Teach them to have respect and help one another instead of devouring one another, and that when they are dead they are going to have a stuffed seat in the so-called Heaven. What an ignorance.

Let us, the poor, have our stuffed seats here like the rich, and those who live in luxury out of such teachings.

Yours for Universal Peace,
ANDRE BOUTIN,
Syracuse, New York.

BABY'S DEATH NOT DUE TO POISON AS SUPPOSED

Angelina, 16 months old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Angelo Vesci, of 561 Pine st., was taken suddenly ill at noon today and died before the arrival of a physician.

It was believed before the arrival of the coroner that the baby died from poisonin. Strychnine tablets had been left by the mother on a sewing machine in an open envelope. When the child's deathly appearance was first noted by the mother the panic-stricken mother was led to believe that the child had eaten some of the tablets. When Coroner Gasic arrived on the scene he could find no evidence that the baby had taken poison and gave a verdict that death was caused by acute indigestion. The infant had been ill for over a month with stomach trouble and this morning was fed two fried eggs by the mother in addition to other food.

Mrs. Lester Lun, residing across the road from the Vesci home, was the first to administer to the sick child Mrs. Lun was preparing dinner when she heard the screams of Vesci. Mrs. Lun ran out into the street and took the child from the [illegible]. Together with Mrs. Charles Porter, she bathed the baby in hot mustard water. Olive oil was also administered by some D[illegible] Italian neighbors without effect. Mrs. Lun, seeing the child was [illegible] ill, summoned Dr. [illegible]

Suffragists Perfect Arrangements; Speaker Will Not Disappoint

The announcement coming from Washington that President Wilson will vote for the woman suffrage constitutional amendment in New Jersey, his home state, at the special election October 19, creates added interest in the coming mass meeting to be held in the downtown section of this city Saturday evening.

Mrs. Luther W. Mott has the assurance of Rose Young, director of the suffrage press bureau that so far nothing has occurred to prevent the appearance here of Mrs. [illegible] Dunlap Curry, the Indiana spellbinder.

President Wilson's determination to v[illegible]ber 19 not as the leader of the Democratic party, but as a pr[illegible]zen, for suffrage will no doubt receive a lot of attention b[illegible] speakers who are coming here for Saturday's meeting.

The women who are advocating equal franchise have been representative of every conceivable group of women in the United States. They are all "women with a message, the message of the need of votes for women as their particular work in life has shown it to them." Social workers, women of home duties, professional women, business women, working women, each and every one has come forward to say why she wants the vote. And each one has shown a good and sufficient reason for the faith that is in her.

With Mrs. Dunlap Curry's appearance upon the lecture platform for woman suffrage, a novel profession for women is manifested. She was Farmers' Institute Instructor for Purdue University, in Indiana, for several days. In this capacity Professor Latta, Farmers' Institute Specialist, LaFayette, Indiana [illegible] her: "Mrs. Mabel Dunlap Curry's acquaintance with rural [illegible]ditions, her interest in the country home and country [illegible] pleasing personality, her earnest, thought-filled messages, qualify her to become a popular, sympathetic and effective [illegible]

An authority on the cotton trade, the Cotton Gazette of Liverpool, points out that the exports of American cotton to a certain group of north Europe neutral countries increased the last cotton year over the preceding 1,253,-520 bales. The figures show increase from 80,360 bales to 1,333,360 bales. The question at issue is whether this increase directly or indirectly benefited one group of belligerents to the detriment of the other group. Sweden, Holland, Norway and Denmark were the countries benefited, in this order, Sweden importing 710,080 bales against 20,050 the year before and Holland 496,820 against 34,130 the year before. The big increase may be due to shrewd speculation, for it is conceivable that the commodity might be cheap in the United States, yet be scarce and very dear when wanted over there. Again, these countries may now manufacture for home consumption goods formerly bought abroad and may even be selling in markets formerly absorbed by countries now at war. The problem seems too big to be solved justly through ex parte proceedings by one interest involved.

The majority of the people of this country have long stood for a firm peace policy and for small armament. When the present crisis is passed opinion may revert with greater force than ever to old ideals. The lesson of the world war serves to emphasize war's terrors and the blessings of peace. Theoretically the civilized world stood for peace up to 1914. Now England, France and Russia are preparing to fight to the bitter end, and Italy frankly avows that she fights for territory. It is not likely that the Teutons will [illegible]rate and head a peace movement, so the world is practically committed to the policy of strife. In readjusting our thought as to armament it is well to take into account the world's [illegible]tionary trend today and whether our geographical isolation is a guaranty of immunity.

The drift from country to town continues, and that alarmingly in some of the older states. The call of the shop and factory with work and a pay envelope for father, mother and boys and [illegible] has much to do with the begin[illegible] country dullness must be taken into account. ABOLISH CITY LIMITS

The new American idea that in every state there are thousands of factories which need the best thought of the best people, viz: That every farm is a factory, is spreading at a rapid rate. But in order to see the progress made we are compelled to turn to the hustling, bustling, refreshing western states. Trenton, Mo., for instance, is one of the fair examples of what a very bright spot upon the map is able to accomplish. The town has a reported population of 10,-000 souls, but by cross-your-heart figures not more than 6,000 persons have been counted by census enumerators.

Trenton, Mo., people are full of the Trenton idea, which is not lazy, it works. The town has two prosperous daily newspapers and the idea of its commercial club is to attain agricultural efficiency. By accomplishing this end the town is securing commercial supremacy. It is the Trenton idea at work. It is the result of receiving into its veins the healthy blood of the farm.

The unusual feature about the Trenton commercial club with its more than 500 members, at least half of whom are farmers, is that it was able after discovering that a Chinese wall had been built around the town, to tear down the unseen masonry, remove the city limits which had been designated by a mere political line and permit a business line to be built which embraced the lines of the county in which it is located. It was a simple idea but it is nevertheless having far-reaching effects, and it can have the same effect in any other city or town; but not until the people of a community come to realize that every person who takes part in the activities of a town is a citizen of that town.

Here is the way the president of the Trenton commercial club of 500 members, half of whom are farmers, expresses the Trenton idea; "We are all Trenton men—it makes no difference whether we walk six blocks or drive six miles when we go downtown." Is this not as it should be? Are not the interests between town and country common? Why have an imaginary line? Why should not the two or three business streets of Fulton be the community center of the representatives of the "every farm a factory idea?"

Back to the soil is the keynote of the age. The Trenton idea is a good idea for Fulton. It means agricultural efficiency and commercial supremacy and that is what the merchants of Fulton hope to attain. The merchants have the agency—it is The Evening Times which is published in a town of 12,000 population; whereas, Trenton, Mo., with only one-half as many people, has two daily papers whose proprietors played their part in cementing the people of the community.

LET THE WOMEN HELP

(By Rose Young)

Women want to vote in order to help men, not oppose them. Giving women the vote will bring into the electorate a body of people whose interests complement men's interests. In every state where women have been given the vote their political pressure has been brought to bear in behalf of social and domestic measures that men have neglected for affairs of trade and transportation and industry. The perfect state cannot afford to have domestic and social measures neglected.

The home and social side of life must be attended to as well as the business and property side. Nearly all of the home and social side of life is now involved in politics. A stream of politics pours [illegible]o the kitchen sink every time the faucet is turned on to wash the [illegible]er dishes, for the water is "city water." Politics is left at the kitchen door every morning in small wide-mouthed bottles labeled "Milk—Grade A," government-inspected milk. Boxed and bottled politics, under the "Pure Food Act," comes in from the grocer every day to perch on the kitchen shelves.

There is no keeping politics out of the home and out of the children's stomachs in this day of communal living. If it's clean politics it won't hurt the home and the children's stomachs. On the contrary it will guard and protect them. But it has never been men's concern to look after the kitchen shelves and the children's stomachs. That's women's work. All that the woman who wants to vote is asking is that she be allowed the best tools with which to do her own work. Business and financial legislation men are sure to look after. Home and kitchen [illegible] is what she wants to look [illegible] for [illegible] women suffrage amendment [illegible]

Opinions

NEW YORK'S JOKE

Instead of being greatly chagrined, New Yorkers appear to be gleeful over the recent boost in the assessments in personal property which has taken place in that city. Everyone seems to realize that the overnight increases are the result of an attempt by the powers that be to make a big showing. That there was no particular system behind the methods used by the assessors to reach the astounding total of $3,800,000,000 is shown by a casual glance at some of the increases. Here are a few typical ones: Harper's Weekly Company, $5,000 to $500,000; Reo Motor Car Co., $1,-000 to $500,000; Central Brewing Co., $1,000 to $1,000,000; Acker, Merrall & Condit Co., $5,000 to $1,000,000.

That personal tax assessments in New York City have been wholly inadequate is well known, and the idea of such a large concern as Acker, Merrall & Condit being on the roll for $5,000 is, of course, ridiculous. Yet this concern and most of the others who are in the same boat will never stands for jumps aggregating millions without putting up a fight.

Perhaps strenuous opposition is just what those in control of New York City are after. They might well expect the reaction from a mild farce to discourage citizens who hold that personal property should be taxed nearer its full value. But if that is the case, some one has bungled and gone to an extreme which makes the whole thing a huge joke.—Batavia News.

BIRMINGHAM'S NEW CHARTER

The City of Birmingham, Alabama, will vote on October 11th to change from its present form of commission government. Birmingham, like Nashville and Denver, has suffered a severe set back during the past couple of years and some of the citizens place the blame on their present commission form of government. So pronounced has been the dissatisfaction that the Birmingham officials have proposed a new form of charter to take the place of the present straight commission form.

The new charter provides for five instead of three commissioners, one of the five to be designated mayor of the city and to have the veto power over the acts of the others. The commission government idea, of course, was designed originally to take the power of veto away from the mayor so that no one member would have extraordinary power In commenting on the proposed change a leading Birmingham newspaper says:

"One of the numerous advantages of the commission law that will be voted upon October 11 is that it will furnish a head for the municipal government, in fact as well as in theory. Instead of three men, each supreme in his own department, and each of practically the same authority, there will be a board of five men, the president of which will have supervision over all departments and will be the real head of the government, with the veto power It will be much like a board of directors, with the president as the executive officer, which is the system that is followed in the management of practically all business enterprises. It centralizes responsibility, does away with expensive overlapping, and makes for the highest degree of efficiency."

The new charter adopted here takes the veto power away from the mayor. It has often been said that the greatest sin of the American people is their desire for charter changes, and it may be that Birmingham, like many other cities, places the blame for its faults and failures upon the charter instead of upon the officials.—Buffalo Times.

FARMER NEAR AUBURN RAISED SOME BULL

The Auburn Citizen is authority for this:

This is a bull story; a tale of a bull calf with six legs which was once valued alive at over $1,000 and which dead brought but $9.

The calf was raised by a farmer residing near Rochester. When it was found the animal possessed six legs and an additional hoof growing out of its side, the farmer decided to raise it as a pet for a month and grew to be a good size, when a museum man offered the owner $1,000 for the freak. It was refused, and the farmer lost the coin and the calf. The bull wasn't shot; it died. A little later the farmer himself died. The widow had the husband buried and the bull stuffed.

And she kept the specimen, to sell it only a short time ago to a traveling man named H. Silverman, the present owner, for $9.

The surplus legs are appended to the right side of the animal just back of the fore leg. The two additional members are almost as large as the other four legs and were as agile and fit for use when the calf was alive as the regular appendages. There is also a hoof appearing from the skin on the right side.

GRANGERS INTERESTED IN THE AMENDMENTS

The Weekly Grange Letter says:

There is an evident interest among members of the grange in New York state in the adoption or otherwise, of the amended State Constitution which is to be voted on at the November elections. There seems to be a difference of opinion, as was to be expected, as to the merits of some of the amendments that have been proposed, but it is not likely that any effort will be made by officials of the order toward advising or suggesting what action should be taken inasmuch as there is too little time between the present and the date of the election to discuss the matter with the granges. Each voter will have to act as "seemeth to him best" with such light on the subject as he may be able to get from the public press or the literature which is to be sent out to voters.

GOV. WHITMAN URGES APPROVAL

Says People Should Vote For the Canal Referendum.

HIS SPEECH IN BUFFALO.

Tells Exposition Crowd That Completion of Canal System Is Most Important Issue Before Voters.

At the opening of the industrial exhibition under the auspices of the Buffalo Wholesale Merchants and Manufacturers' association in the Broadway Auditorium, Buffalo, Governor Whitman, the guest of honor on that occasion, took occasion to call to the attention of his audience, made up of residents of Buffalo and nearby towns, the importance of voting intelligently on the canal referendum at the state election next November.

Governor Whitman is a firm believer in the barge canal system and one of its most enthusiastic supporters. He said in part:

The estimate made in 1903 for the improvement of the Erie, Champlain and Oswego canals to barge canal dimensions amounted to $101,000,000, made up as follows:

Construction, $84,000,000; land damages, $2,000,000; engineering and contingencies, $15,000,000.

Original Estimates.

The actual construction can be completed for less than $90,000,000, or about $6,000,000 in excess of the original estimate. Fifteen million dollars, as originally estimated, will be ample for engineering and contingencies. The original estimate of $2,000,000 for land damages has proved in error, due to the fact it was not considered at the time the original estimate was prepared that the courts would hold against the state in acquiring certain rights necessary for construction.

The legislature has provided for submission to the people at the coming fall election the question as to whether or not an additional appropriation of $27,000,000 shall be made for completing the barge canal.

I am a firm believer in the utility and benefits derived from the canals. The original Erie canal made New York city the greatest seaport of the western hemisphere, gave to the state the chain of cities extending throughout its length, and when tolls were abolished in 1880 this canal showed a balance earned of $42,000,000 over the total first cost and maintenance charges throughout all these years.

State Must Pay.

More than half of the $27,000,000 provided for in the referendum is already obligated on the part of the state for damages to property already appropriated and they will become debts of the state as soon as the courts have determined the various amounts. The legislature will be called upon to make the necessary appropriations to meet this debt.

In 1903 the people of this state decided the improvement of the canals should be undertaken under a bond issue, thus extending the period of payment over a number of years. Unless the people wish that the amount required to complete the canal shall be added to the current expenses of maintaining the state government the referendum, which will spread this expenditure over a period of years, should be adopted.

It is hardly necessary for me to enlarge upon the importance to this city of the completion and successful operation of the barge canal.

Nowhere in the state is every phase of the so called "canal question" more thoroughly understood than it is in Buffalo. This is no political or partisan measure.

I believe it would be a public calamity should this proposed constitutional provision fail of success at the polls, and, while its passage seems to me assured, it is well for our citizens interested in this vast project to awaken to the importance of an active and intelligent educational campaign which will place danger of its defeat beyond possibility.

Denmark's Butter.

Denmark prohibits the sale or exportation of butter containing more than 16 per cent water.

DEFEAT MEANS DELAY AND DIRECT TAXATION.

If I vote "Against" the canal referendum and it is defeated, what will be the result?

The work of completing the canal will be stopped, and it could not be used for commerce until the legislature should make appropriations from the state treasury to be raised by direct taxation. This would delay the use of the canal for a number of years.

The obligations of the state already incurred, a large part of the $27,000,000 would have to be met by appropriations and direct taxation within a short time as awards from time to time should be made to pay the claims against the state already presented.

The ultimate cost by this method would be largely increased. Until completed the state would fail to get any benefit from its investments already made, while the interest upon the bonds already issued would continue to accrue.

The great commerce to and from the Pacific coast and New York, the interior states and the great lakes via the Panama canal would be lost to New York until the barge canal is completed, if not forever.

LIBERTY FOR SAILORS.

Under American Law the Seaman Is No Longer a Slave.

Yes, it is true the Sixty-third congress passed acts of legislation which will be remembered when nearly all others enacted by it have been forgotten or have been superseded. When in the Clayton act it laid down as a definite principle of policy on the part of the United States that "the labor of a human being is not a commodity or an article of commerce" it distinguished between persons and things in such a way as no congress or other lawmaking body did at any earlier period. The labor power of a human being is the most personal of all things on earth. It grows with the human growth; it decays in sickness and old age and ceases at death; it cannot be divided from the possessor thereof; it cannot be separated from the person, and if the judiciary had recognized this distinction between persons and things, between the labor power and the products thereof, there would have been little necessity for any amendment to the Sherman anti-trust law.

This same principle runs through the so called "seamen's act." It makes the seaman for the first time in seven centuries the owner of his own body; it makes it possible within the jurisdiction of the United States for these seamen, not only on vessels of the United States, but on all foreign vessels, to assert their rights as human beings, as persons created in the image of God, endowed with certain inalienable rights, among which are the rights of liberty, equality and the pursuit of happiness.—Andrew Furnseth, President International Seamen's Union.

Not Needed.

The young bride had clearly formed ideas on industrial questions.

"I will give you something to eat," she informed the tramp, "if you will get that ax"—

"Oh, I shan't need that," the tramp interrupted in a reassuring tone. "My teeth are all right."—London Stray Stories.

Save the Trees.

The National Highway Protective association reports that two states have adopted its legislation to mitigate the evil of defacing trees, fences and buildings along public highways with advertisements. The states that have shown this wisdom are Rhode Island and New York. The measure is not drastic. It merely requires that no advertisements can be placed on trees, fences or buildings flanking highways without the written consent of the owner. A moderate penalty is imposed for violation. It is not to be hoped that this will wholly prevent the evil, but it will exercise a wholesome check on its prevalence. Other states might well follow the example, and even more drastic legislation would be in order.

Helping a Lady.

"Jack, I wish you'd come to see me occasionally."

"Why, Vanessa, I thought you were engaged to Algernon Wombat?"

"No; but I think I could be if I could get up a little brisk competition."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

BILLY ALLEN COMPANY DRAWS CROWDS NIGHTLY

"Keep Moving" kept things moving at a lively pace last night at the Quirk theatre where the Billy Allen Musical Comedy Company appeared in a musical show of that title. It kept the audience moving, too, either shaking with laughter or rendering applause. In "Keep Moving," little time is taken up with the story. There is one, of course, but it is almost lost sight of in the presession of songs and scenes which appear to have but one object, namely, to delight the ear and eye and keep the audience laughing. Billy Allen, with his funny antics, was the principal source of the amusement, with capable assistance from the other principals of the company. All are excellent in their several lines of work. The Beauty Chorus above the average and was much in evidence in the show.

There are many things requisite to make a truly successful musical comedy, but the essentials, as the name applies, are music and comedy. Too many of the so-called musical comedies depend upon a lot of hits of ridiculous horseplay that are both worn out in theme and lacking in pertinancy. Not so "The Time, the Place, and the Girl," which is the offering tonight. This bright musical comedy with a record that puts it among the most popular of recent years, is a musical show of the legitimate sort, with a genuine story, with musical numbers that linger in the memory more than overnight. Much of the success of "The Time, the Place, and the Girl" is attributed to the beauty and distinction of its musical numbers and the manner of their rendition. There are a host of the catchiest of catchy melodies interpreted in a manner charming and novel, and each number is lavishly outfitted with costumes and effects. But the musical numbers do not interfere with the rapid movement of the play, and a succession of laughable situations are presented in which "Happy" Johnny Hicks, the gambler, Jasper Simpson, the funny farmer, and Mrs. Talcott the mother of "Little Willie," provide an abundance of merriment.

"The Charlie Chaplin contest" will be a feature tonight, when a number of Fulton aspirants for comedy honors will do impersonations of the moving picture actor. Prizes will be given by the management.

"A Night in the Wintergarden," will be featured tomorrow night, and "The Dingbat Family" Saturday. The Dingbats are announcing a reception Saturday afternoon to which all children are invited. The daily matinees are well attended.

MOTOR DRIVER TIRED OF HORRORS OF WAR

Chicagoan Deaf and Dumb, His Hair Almost White.

Chicago.—A remarkable war letter was made public here. It was from Robert Beck, former owner of a taxicab business in Chicago, to his friend Charles Grand. Beck joined the allies as driver of an armored automobile.

"I am glad to have the chance to tell you that I am alive, and that is all," the letter reads. "My hair is nearly white now. I am deaf and dumb through shock and wounds. I am a motorcycle dispatch bearer and armored car driver.

"I was driving a sixty horsepower armored car. I could not drive fast enough because the dead bodies and horses were so thick that I could not get through. All at once a shell hit my car and blew it up.

"When they got me from underneath the wrecked car I was deaf and dumb, with my ribs crushed and spine hurt. The other three men I carried with me in the armored car were blown to bits.

"This was a month ago. The doctors have tried to bring my speech and hearing back, but they cannot. The doctors say they will come back in time because now my nerves are shattered through hardships.

"Charlie, I am tired of killing people. I have been driving an armored car with three Maxim guns inside of it and three men working the guns. These fire 500 shots a minute, and I carry 10,000 rounds inside the car. The car weighs four tons, so you can see what fun we have on the battlefield. I have seen times when I drove my car fifty miles an hour into a regiment.

"This summer has been bad for flies. There were millions of flies around us because there are thousands of dead bodies of men and horses not buried properly. The bodies are thrown anywhere."

CORNERED HIMSELF.

There Was Only One Way Out, and He Just Had to Take It.

William F. Cody one day engaged in a spirited talkfest with a white haired, gray bearded trapper, who was by way of being the greatest and most unsuccessful liar in the locality.

"Sho, Cody, that there b'ar story o' yours ain't puppy high to a little seance I had with a ol' she grizzly back some twenty years ago. I come on that pizen critter at th' mouth of a canyon. Bing! I plops a shot f'om my ol' muzzle loader into her, but she don't even tarry. On she comes 'thout givin' me nary chanst t' load. I th'ows th' gun at her, hits her on th' snoot an' takes out up th' canyon with th' old gal, plum' mad, pitty pattin' after me.

"We runs fer 'bout a mile, she paddin' along behind an' gainin' a bit. Them canyon walls kep' gettin' higher an' smoother an' narrower 'ntil they was about a thousan' feet up, an' I c'd most touch each side. I couldn't a-clim' 'em if I'd tried, an' that she varmint wasn't givin' me no chanst. All of a suddint th' path got still narrerer till me an' the b'ar had to most squeeze through, an' then I come slap into a straight up wall in front o' me. There I was, slick as glass walls on three sides and th' mad b'ar pitty pattin' ten feet in m' rear. Couldn't go ahead, turn round ner go straight up."

"Yes, but what did your bear do?" asked Cody.

The old man's face began to take on the purplish hue of pent emotion. His features strained and twitched as his brain sought a way out of his own mendacious cul-de-sac. Looking helplessly around and meeting no friendly glance from the audience, he finally blurted out:

"By gum, she killed me!"—Samuel J. Lewis in Harper's.
